[55] The Tribunal will not embark on a clause-by-clause comment of a very voluminous document. The Tribunal has carefully reviewed the Revised Agreement and will comment only on the parts that it had found problematic in 2022 CHRT 41 and that needed changes in order to fully satisfy the Tribunal's orders. In sum, the Tribunal agrees that the rest of the Settlement Agreement and claims process set out in the Revised Agreement and further measures to be developed by class counsel in consultation with experts and approved by the Federal Court satisfies the requirements under the compensation framework as ordered in 2019 CHRT 39 and 2021 CHRT 7. The Revised Agreement does not require children to testify and will be culturally appropriate and safe. This formed part of the Tribunal's compensation orders. Indeed, the Tribunal stressed the importance of avoiding the retraumatizing of children in its compensation orders. The Revised Agreement adopts a trauma informed approach best suited in this case. Further, subject to the Federal Court's approval, a Settlement Implementation Committee composed of five members will be established and will include two First Nations members and three Counsel members. As per the Tribunal's orders, subject to some exceptions, the compensation will be paid directly to the victims/survivors or in a trust fund until they have reached the age of majority as determined by law and administered by a Court appointed independent Trustee. Upon careful consideration and, in applying a human rights lens, the Tribunal finds the Revised Agreement in the best interests of First Nations children and families who are entitled to compensation under the Tribunal's orders.

[56] For the above reasons, the Tribunal only needs to focus on the sections that will be discussed below.

[57] Of note, the Revised agreement now includes a request for an apology from the Prime Minister, standing in Federal Court for the Caring Society, a longer opt-out deadline for victims/survivors and interest on compensation as per the Tribunal's compensation orders. The Tribunal will also discuss these in turn below.

[58] While the Tribunal ruled that a settlement need not mirror all the Tribunal's compensation orders as long as the spirit of its orders is honoured, it cannot disentitle, reduce or strip away the victims/survivors' compensation guaranteed in the Tribunal's orders. Therefore, ensuring this is remedied in the Revised Agreement is the focus and the framework in the Tribunal's analysis of the Revised Agreement.

[59] A summary of joint submissions from the parties is reproduced below. The Tribunal decided that it was wise to use the parties' own description of how they consider having addressed the Tribunal's concerns instead of rewording them. The Tribunal will address them in turn and provide its reasons under each of the parties' descriptions.

(ii) The Derogations Regarding Kith Placements and Multiple Removals Have Been Remedied

[60] In 2022 CHRT 41, the Tribunal found that the 2022 FSA settlement amount of $20,000,000,000 did not include a budget to compensate First Nations children removed from their homes, families and communities who were placed in placements not funded by Canada ("Non-ISC Funded Placements").

[61] The joint parties submit that the Revised Agreement now includes compensation for First Nations children removed from their homes, families and communities and placed in alternative non-ISC funded placements and compensation for their parents/caregiving grandparents. These placements are referred to as "Kith Placements" in the Revised Agreement. Children placed in Kith Placements, as well as their parents/caregiving grandparents, are entitled to $40,000 plus applicable interest.

[62] Article 7 of the Revised Agreement sets out the principal eligibility requirements for First Nations children removed from their homes, families and communities, and placed in Kith Placements. Given the challenges with the available documentation for Kith Placements, the parties will craft a separate and unique approach for the verification of eligible class members under this category. The approach will involve the participation of the Caring Society, as well as input from youth in care and youth formerly in care and First Nations Child and Family Services Agencies ("FNCFS Agencies"), (See, Article 7.01(8), Revised Agreement, Exhibit “F” to the AFN Affidavit). No member of the Kith Child Class will be required to submit to any form of interview or viva voce (oral) evidence taking and the claims process will be designed with the goal of minimizing risk of causing harm. Further, the joint parties state that compensation in relation to Kith Placements will require a specific approach given that data relevant to Kith Placements is often collected in a different manner than those in ISC-funded placements. The process for determining eligibility will be structured with guidance from records management experts, youth in care and youth formerly in care, and input from the Caring Society. The Revised Agreement fully satisfies the Compensation Entitlement Order in relation to these victims (See, Article 7.01(1) and (2), Revised Agreement, Exhibit “F” to the AFN Affidavit).

[63] The Revised Agreement provides for a budget of $600 million for the Kith Child Class and $702 million for the Kith Family Class, (See, Article 7.02 (5) and 7.04(2), Revised Agreement, Exhibit “F” to the AFN Affidavit). These are new amounts being committed by Canada and are not a redistribution of funding under the 2022 FSA. These amounts meet or exceed the Caring Society’s estimates of the budget required to compensate the likely number of victims in each category, (See Annex A).

[64] As set out in Annex A, the Caring Society based its estimates on data obtained from iterations of the Canadian Incidence Study of Reported Child Abuse and Neglect (FNCIS-2019) providing information on placements for First Nations children. The Caring Society reviewed existing data from the Canadian Incidence Study on Reported Child Abuse and Neglect (2019 FN-CIS) to extrapolate the number of First Nations children in Non-ISC Funded Placements.

[65] This data was used to extrapolate population sizes based on information available regarding children in “ISC-funded” placements, provided by the Parliamentary Budget Officer and experts retained by the class action parties. Recognizing the ongoing gaps in child welfare data, the evidence used for these calculations is the best available. The data is valid and reliable and the Caring Society’s calculation assumptions are conservative, in order to avoid underestimating the number of potential victims.

[66] Table 16 of the 2019 FN-CIS attached to Dr. Blackstock's affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, as Exhibit "F", notes that 2,365 First Nations children were removed to placements not funded by Canada in 2019. This amounted to roughly 40% of all placements made in 2019.

[67] The Caring Society also verified the proportion of placements not funded by Canada in the 2003 report Understanding Overrepresentation of First Nations Children in Canada's Child Welfare System: An Analysis of the Canadian Incidence Study of Reported Child Abuse and Neglect (CIS-2003) (also known as Mesnmimk Wasatek: catching a drop of light) ("2003 FNCIS"), which estimated 1,554 First Nations children being removed to placements not funded by Canada in 2003. This amounted to roughly 45% of all placements made in 2003. A true copy of Table 7-6 from the 2003 FN-CIS is attached to Dr. Blackstock's affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, as Exhibit "G".

[68] Using these two figures, the Caring Society assessed that the estimated number of children removed to placements funded by ISC under the FNCFS Program from January 1, 2006 to March 31, 2022 (including children already in care on January 1, 2006) would represent roughly 57.5% of all First Nations children living on-reserve who had been removed from their homes.

[69] The Caring Society is of the view that the budgeted amounts for the Kith Child Class and the Kith Family Class are fair and reasonable. These amounts reflect the Caring Society's own work to extrapolate, based on existing data, the number of First Nations children likely in the Kith Child Class in order to evaluate the sufficiency of proposed budgets, (See Dr. Blackstock' s Affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, at para 40). As a result, the Caring Society is comfortable and confident that the budgets in relation to Kith Placements will fully satisfy the Tribunal's orders in relation to these children and families.

[70] The Caring Society also received analysis of the 2019 FN-CIS data from Dr. Fallon regarding the proportion of First Nations children resident on-reserve who were removed in 2019 and placed in Non-ISC Funded Placements located more than a 30-minute drive from their residence. A true copy of this analysis is attached to Dr. Blackstock's affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, as, Exhibit "H". This data was used to serve as a proxy for children placed outside of their communities. Data regarding unfunded placements with “kith” (adults who do not have a blood relationship to the child, also referred to as “fictive kin”) as opposed to “kin” (a child’s relatives) are unclear. A 2017 Policy Brief from the Children’s Advocacy Alliance in Nevada estimated that 20-30% of children in “kinship” places are placed with “fictive kin” (i.e., individuals to whom the child is not related, but with whom there is a relationship of trust with the family). A true copy of the Children’s Advocacy Alliance Policy Brief is attached to Dr. Blackstock’s affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, as Exhibit “I”.

[71] Furthermore, data in a 2017 report produced by researchers at the University of Melbourne noted that 17.5% of children in statutory kinship care in Australia were placed with non-relatives. A true copy of Table 2 from this report is attached to Dr. Blackstock’s affidavit, dated, June 30, 2023, as Exhibit “J”.

[72] The Attorney General submits that during the negotiations that followed the Tribunal’s rejection of the 2022 FSA, Canada agreed to add an additional $3.34394 billion to the $20 billion already committed to in the Agreement-in-Principle and June 2022 Final Settlement Agreement. This amount includes additional funds to ensure that: a. Non-ISC funded or “kith” placements are compensated, including children and their caregivers, (See Dr. Valerie Gideon’s affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at para. 10).

[73] The victims/survivors forming the Kith Child Class are First Nations children placed with a Kith Caregiver (an adult who is not a member of the Child’s Family who lived off reserve and cared for the child without receiving funding in terms of the placement), in a Kith Placement (a First Nations Child residing with Kith Caregiver and the placement was associated with a child welfare authority) during the period between April 1, 1991, and March 31, 2022, thus extending the compensation for these children contemplated by the Tribunal back to the advent of the Direction 20-1, in line with the timeline for compensation for the Removed Child Class. Members of the Kith Child Class are not eligible for enhancements, but will receive the full compensation they would have received under their CHRT entitlement plus Tribunal-directed interest, which has been preserved in the Revised Agreement by way of an Interest Reserve Fund, (See, Revised Agreement art. 6.15(1)-(2), 7.02(2)). The amount of $600 million with respect to the budget for the Kith Child Class was drawn from the Caring Society’s evidence-based consideration of the potential class size for children between 2006-2022. The AFN defers and relies upon the Caring Society's submissions as to the 2006-2022 class size.

[74] With respect to the caregiving parents or in their absence, caregiving grandparents of Kith Child Class members, compensation has been limited to the period of the Tribunal's Compensation Orders, being from January 1, 2006 to March 31, 2022, (See, Revised Agreement art. 7.03(1)). These Kith Family Class Members, (See, Revised Agreement art. 1.01 definition "Kith Family Class"), similar to the Removed Child Family Class, are not eligible for compensation if they abused an eligible child in alignment with the Tribunal Compensation Orders, (See, Revised Agreement art. 7.03(2)). The Kith Family Class members may also receive multiples of compensation where multiple children were removed and placed in a Kith Placement between January 1, 2006 and March 31, 2022, (See, Revised Agreement art. 7.03 (4)). The budget for the Kith Family Class was set at $702 million in compensation, which was extrapolated from the projected size of the Kith Child Class over the period covered by the Tribunal's compensation orders, (See Dr. Gideon's affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at. para. 55). The AFN again defers to the Caring Society in this regard.

[75] The AFN submits that the collective efforts on addressing the payment of compensation for non-ISC funded placements by way of the establishment of the Kith Child Class and Kith Family Class have resulted in the effective implementation of the Tribunal Compensation Orders. Compensation under the Revised Agreement is predicated on compensating those whose removal was a result of the discriminatory FNCFS Program, not who funded the removal. Thus, the Revised Agreement accounts for the harms these victims/survivors experienced as a result of the infringement of their human rights and dignity when they or their children were deprived of the opportunity for preventative services and least disruptive measures due to Canada's discriminatory conduct. The Kith Class entitlements entirely align with and provide for the effective implementation of the Compensation Orders in relation to these victims/survivors, in a manner which is in the best interests of First Nations children and families. The AFN submits that Revised Agreement fully satisfies the Tribunal's Compensation Orders in relation to these victims/survivors.

[76] Given this category of beneficiaries was found to have been excluded completely under the 2022 FSA, the Tribunal needs to determine 1) Does the Revised agreement now include this category of beneficiaries previously excluded under the 2022 FSA? 2) If the answer is yes, is this category of beneficiaries included in a fair and equitable manner ensuring there are sufficient compensation funds set aside for the compensation ordered by this Tribunal. In order to make this finding, the Tribunal must also look at the evidence provided and determine if the process to locate the beneficiaries is fair and, if this process is reasonable and supported by reliable evidence.

[77] Further, the Tribunal explained its jurisdiction to analyse the 2022 FSA in order to determine if it fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders in 2022 CHRT 41. The Tribunal continues to rely on those legal findings and framework. Briefly, the Tribunal found that it was not functus officio to consider if the 2022 FSA fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders. The same reasoning applies here for the Revised Agreement. In sum, the purpose of the Tribunal's retained jurisdiction on compensation was always to clarify, add and refine the orders. It was never to reduce, disentitle or remove victims/survivors from the purview of its orders. A careful reading of the Tribunal's decisions makes this clear (See, para. 513). The Tribunal detailed its reasons at length in the 2022 CHRT 41 and they will not all be repeated here. The Tribunal found this category of victims and survivors was excluded from the 2022 FSA and did not reflect the Tribunal's compensation orders.

> (…) the systemic and racial discrimination is focused on how the Federal FNCFS Program adversely impacted First Nations children and families on reserve and in the Yukon, the Tribunal did not focus on ISC funded placements.
> (emphasis omitted)

> The Panel agrees with the Caring Society that there appears to be a fundamental misunderstanding regarding the scope of Canada's discriminatory conduct in this case: the Tribunal ordered compensation for Canada's conduct (including the under-funding of prevention services and least disruptive measures) incentivizing children being unnecessarily moved from their home, family and community during child welfare involvement. The > case did not address whether a child was placed in care funded by ISC after their removal. The Tribunal never limited Canada's liability, and children's eligibility, based on whether a child's placement after removal was funded by ISC. Canada's funding of actual maintenance costs contributed to the systemic racial discrimination by creating an incentive to place children in care but did not limit discrimination to those children placed in care funded by ISC. The Panel's experience throughout has been to focus on the harm experienced by the affected children based on Canada's discriminatory an underfunded provision of child and family services.

> [317] The Tribunal recognized that removing a child from their family is always a harmful event and particularly problematic when it could have been prevented with appropriate services. The Tribunal found that the discriminatory underfunding of prevention services increased the likelihood of children being unnecessarily removed from their homes (2016 CHRT 2 at paras 314 and 346; 2019 CHRT 39 at paras 165 and 177). This initial removal was discriminatory regardless of whether the child's subsequent placement was funded by ISC.

> Tribunal's main reason not to endorse the FSA is that it derogates from the Tribunal's existing orders in reducing compensation to some victims/survivors to accommodate the fixed quantity of funds under the FSA and the much larger number of victims/survivors in the class actions competing for these funds. No substantive findings or orders have been made concerning the victims in the class actions, yet in the FSA some displace some of the victims/survivors whose rights have been vindicated in these proceedings. In others, those victims/survivors had to be included for the Tribunal to make a finding that the FSA fully complied with the Tribunal's orders.

[82] Moreover, the Panel agreed with the AFN that compensation is linked to the systemic discrimination found by this Tribunal in the provision of services through the Federal FNCFS Program. However, the Tribunal found that the nuance newly made by the AFN and Canada did not reflect the spirit of the Tribunal's rulings. It transformed the focus from what led to the removals to who pays for a removed child's care (See, 2022 CHRT 41 at, para. 331).

[83] Upon consideration, the Tribunal accepts the joint parties' uncontested evidence. The data analysis and process to identify this category of beneficiaries is fair and reasonable and while this is untested evidence, all parties consent on this point. Moreover, the Tribunal finds the evidence provided is relevant and reliable and supports a finding on a balance of probabilities in favour of this process adopted on consent of the parties. The Tribunal finds the evidence demonstrates that it is more probable than not that the compensation funds will cover all the victims/survivors included in this category of beneficiaries that is now aligned with the Tribunal's compensation orders.

[84] For these reasons, the Tribunal finds the victims/survivors in this category of beneficiaries have now been included in the Revised Agreement in full compliance with this Tribunal's orders under section 53(2) of the CHRA and as identified in 2019 CHRT 39 and further clarified in 2022 CHRT 41. Furthermore, the Tribunal has jurisdiction to make the requested order and finds this fully satisfies the Tribunal's compensation orders on this category of victims/survivors.

(iii) The Revised Agreement now provides compensation in relation to multiple removals as set out in the Compensation Entitlement Order

[85] In 2022 CHRT 41, the Tribunal found the 2022 FSA fell short in terms of the quantum of compensation ordered by this Tribunal for this category of victims/survivors. The Tribunal reasoned as follows:

> [356] The Tribunal's orders account for the compound effect on a caregiving parent or grandparent who has already experienced the pain and suffering of the removal of a child and now experiences the egregious harm of losing another one or more children as a result of the systemic racial discrimination. The FSA reduces the amount of compensation for those victims/survivors who were retraumatized and suffered greatly. Losing more than one child heightens the presence of a willful and reckless behavior; it does not reduce it. The Tribunal emphasized that, given this was the worst-case scenario, maximum compensation should be paid for the removal of each child. While the harm suffered warrants more than $40,000 per child removed, the CHRA places a cap on compensation. The FSA chips away at the heart of the willful and reckless discriminatory practice found and the orders that signal to Canada that its behavior was devoid of caution and caused compounded harm to parents and grandparents in removing more than one child.
> [357] Those findings were made after carefully considering the evidence and submissions and nothing in this joint motion changes this. While the Tribunal understands the need for compromise as part of the settlement negotiations, the result is that the Tribunal orders that recognized this category of victims/survivors will be significantly reduced not based on evidence but rather > to ensure everyone can receive some compensation within the fixed pot of compensation funds.

[86] Therefore, the Tribunal made orders to ensure that parents or grandparents who had children in their care who were removed as a result of the systemic racial discrimination found would receive the maximum compensation of $40,000 under the CHRA per child removed. This means one child removed: $40,000, two children removed: $80,000, three children removed: $120,000, etc. In the 2022 FSA, there was an amount of maximum $ 60,000 for multiple removals of children which did not comply with the Tribunal's orders.

[87] In response, the class action parties, with the assistance of the Caring Society, contemplated the number of claimants who could potentially be able to claim for multiple removals and developed a budget in the amount of $997 million for same, which was accepted by Canada and incorporated into the settlement funds of the Revised Agreement (See Dr. Valerie Gideon's Affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at paras. 57-59 and Revised Agreement art. 6.06(6)). While the Revised Agreement provides for the payment for multiplications for all members of the Removed Child Family Class, it does place some restrictions on those members who do not have an existing entitlement under the Tribunal's Compensation Orders. This does not impact upon those with an existing CHRT entitlement. The restriction for non-CHRT compensation includes a cap of $80,000 in compensation for those who had two or more children removed between the period of April 1, 1991 and December 31, 2005 (and who were no longer in care on January 1, 2006) and Stepparents, (See, Revised Agreement 6.06(1)-(4)). These are not deviations from the Compensation Orders as these members of the Removed Child Family Class have no pre-existing Tribunal entitlements. The Revised Agreement also contemplates the potential adjustment of eligibility and compensation for these specific members of the Removed Child Family Class who have no existing Tribunal entitlements, including the potential for increases to the $80,000 cap.

[88] Whether to include stepparents and the appropriate limitations upon eligibility to align with First Nations conceptions of family structures was the subject of a mediation between the Parties to the Revised Agreement in 2022. For clarity:

> a) The Revised Agreement requires that Stepparents, who are not entitled to compensation under the Compensation Orders, be First Nations in order to be eligible for compensation.
> b) The requirement that individuals are First Nations does not apply to caregiving parents and/or grandparents who are entitled to compensation under the Compensation Orders.
> c) Step-grandparents are not eligible for compensation under the Revised Agreement or under the Compensation Orders, regardless of their First Nations status.

[89] The Revised Agreement also places an $80,000 cap on sequential removals and the potential for adjustment of this compensation on caregiving grandparents where a caregiving parent (not a stepparent) has been approved for compensation under the Revised Agreement with respect to the affected child, (See, Revised Agreement 6.06(4)(c)). The AFN submits that this cap does not amount to a divergence from the Compensation Decision or the Tribunal's related Compensation Orders, but instead acts as a clarification of the Tribunal's intentions, the scope of which was developed by the parties to the Revised Agreement and Minutes of Settlement further to the dialogic process. A minor clarification to the Compensation Framework is required in the following scenario: where a caregiving parent has claimed compensation for the removal of a child, and the child is subsequently removed from the care of a caregiving grandparent, the Revised Agreement limits the multiplication of compensation to $80,000.

[90] In sum, the joint parties submit that a First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent will receive multiple base compensation payments of $40,000 plus applicable interest if and when more than one child has been removed from their family and placed off-reserve with a non-family member. The multiplication of the base compensation payment will correspond to the number of children who were removed from the First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent and placed off-reserve. The parties are of the view that the Revised Agreement now fully addresses this derogation.

> Where a child was removed more than once, the parents (or one set of caregiving grandparents) shall be paid compensation for a removal at the first instance. A different grandparent or set of grandparent(s) (or the child's parents where they were not the primary caregivers at the time of the first or prior removal) may be entitled to compensation for a subsequent removal where they assumed the primary caregiving role where the parents (or the other grandparents) were not caring for the child, > (emphasis added).

[92] The joint parties submit that what is clear upon an examination of the provisions related to the payment for sequential removals is the fact that the Tribunal, via its endorsement of the Compensation Framework, expected that the parents, or one set of caregiving parents, would be entitled to for the removal at first instance, as illustrated by the use of "shall". This entitlement for removal at first instance is mirrored in the context of the Revised Agreement, (See, Revised Agreement art. 6.06(1)). The Compensation Framework thereafter establishes the potential for different caregiving grandparent(s) or parents, where not the caregiver at the removal of first instance, to claim compensation for a subsequent removal. To be clear, this provision did not establish an entitlement, but merely the possibility by way of the use of "may".

[93] The AFN submits that limiting compensation for caregiving grandparents where a caregiving parent has already advanced a claim for compensation to the affected child is a reasonable clarification of the Tribunal's Compensation Orders, providing certainty to scope of entitlement where none previously existed in the context of the Tribunal's proceedings, as well as reflecting the wishes and efforts of all the parties to the Revised Agreement and Minutes of Settlement, as well as the First Nations-in-Assembly.

[94] The class action parties' and the Caring Society's efforts to address the payment of compensation for multiple removals for the Removed Child Family Class results in the effective implementation of the Tribunal Compensation Orders in this regard. While a clarification by the Tribunal is required, it is supported by the approach as endorsed by the Tribunal in the Compensation Framework and substantially aligns with the Tribunal's previous orders/reasons. Finally, the provisions in relation to multiple removals amount to relief that builds upon the Tribunal's Compensation Orders in a manner that ensures clarity with respect to the entitlement to compensation for victims/survivors and that those with an existing Tribunal entitlement will receive their full due. The Revised Agreement therefore fully satisfies the Compensation Orders in relation to these victims/survivors.

[95] The Tribunal confirms that the joint parties' interpretation of the Tribunal's orders is correct. The Tribunal in its compensation orders envisioned the payment of the maximum compensation amount for each child removed at the first instance. The Tribunal did not envision multiple payments if the same child was removed multiple times. The Compensation Framework adopted by the Tribunal offers this as a possibility however, the parties are correct in their interpretation of the terms "shall" and "may". The Tribunal views the term "shall" as an obligation while the term "may" is only a possibility depending on the specific circumstances that had to be further developed and determined by the parties. The final decision in the event of a disagreement and after the appeal process falls upon this Tribunal under the Compensation Framework in light of the evidence before it. Furthermore, the Draft Compensation Framework includes provisions for processing claims. The process involves a multi-level review and appeal process (9.1-9.6). The process remains under the ultimate supervision of the Tribunal (9.6). The Tribunal's orders take precedence over the Compensation Framework in the event of any inconsistency.

[96] Moreover, the purpose of the Draft Compensation Framework is to "facilitate and expedite payment of compensation" to beneficiaries (1.3). It is intended to be consistent with, and subordinate to, the Tribunal's orders (1.2).

[97] Further, the AFN submits the Revised Agreement directly ameliorates this derogation. A parent/caregiving grandparent is now entitled under the Revised Agreement to receive multiple base compensation payments of $40,000 plus applicable interest if and when more than one child has been removed from the family home and placed off-reserve with a non-family member, (See, Article 6.06(1), Revised Agreement, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit). The Revised Agreement sets out that multiplication of the base compensation payment will correspond directly to the number of First Nations children removed and placed off-reserve with non-family, (See, Article 6.06(2), Revised Agreement, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit).

[98] Again, all parties consent. Consequently, the evidence provided was not refuted or tested. Upon careful consideration of the Revised Agreement and all related materials, the Tribunal finds the available data analysis, calculations and estimates to be fair and reasonable. Moreover, the Tribunal finds the evidence and arguments relevant and reliable and support a finding that the Revised Agreement fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders in this category of victims/survivors entitled to compensation.

[99] For example, the Revised Agreement now budgets $997 million specifically to ensure that parents/caregiving grandparents who have experienced multiple losses of First Nations children from their care will be compensated, (See, Article 6.06(6), Revised Agreement, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit). Recognizing the limitations of available data, the Caring Society has used the best available evidence to calculate a budget that ought to provide sufficient funds to fully compensate parents/caregiving grandparents for all instances in which their children were removed from their homes, families and communities, (See, Dr. Blackstock's Affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at para 32). As set out in Annex A, the Caring Society's calculations are based on estimates of the number of children impacted by the FNCFS Program provided by the Parliamentary Budget Officer and by experts retained by the class action parties, and on Census data noting the approximate overall number of caregivers per First Nations child.

[100] As mentioned above, the estimates were provided by the Parliamentary Budget Officer and experts and on Census data and accepted by the joint parties. The Tribunal finds this information reliable. Section 50 (3) (c) of the CHRA allows the Tribunal to consider other information as part of its consideration of matters. This is particularly useful when the evidence is untested and provided on consent and may have a lesser probative value than when the evidence has been tested in a hearing.

[101] This being said, the Tribunal is satisfied that sufficient evidence and other information support the requested orders for a finding that the Revised Settlement Agreement fully satisfies the Tribunal's compensation orders in this category.

[102] Furthermore, as already mentioned above and in previous rulings, the Tribunal has the authority to clarify its orders. The Tribunal continues to rely on its legal findings and reasons as discussed in previous rulings and further detailed in 2022 CHRT 41.

[103] The Tribunal agrees with the clarification request from the joint parties and in light of the above, finds that it is helpful to provide this further clarification. Therefore, the Tribunal clarifies its order 2021 CHRT 7 further to the Compensation Framework, providing that together caregiving parents and caregiving grandparents will be limited to $80,000 in total compensation regardless of the number of sequential removals of the same child.

[104] The Tribunal finds that parents/caregiving grandparents are now entitled under the Revised Agreement to receive multiple compensation payments of $40,000 plus applicable interest if and when more than one child has been removed from their home. Therefore, the Revised Agreement now fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders on this point.

(iv) Estates of Caregiving Parents and Grandparents

[105] The Tribunal determined that compensation should be paid to the estates of beneficiaries who experienced Canada's discriminatory conduct but passed away before being able to receive compensation (2020 CHRT 7, at paras. 77-151).

[106] The spirit of this order also highlights the important public interest and deterrent components included in the remedy:

> [79] Significantly, Canada ought not benefit from a financial windfall simply because children, youth and family members have died waiting for Canada's discrimination to end. This is particularly so given the Tribunal's findings that Canada's discrimination is wilful and reckless and ongoing in the case of the First Nations Child and Family Service Program. Additionally, the Caring Society contends that one of the purposes of compensation pursuant to the CHRA is to remove the economic incentive for discrimination by ensuring that some measure of the cost savings respondents achieve by discriminating are returned to victims. Indeed, allowing Canada to financially benefit due to its own delays in having this case resolved could set a dangerous precedent and entice other respondents to delay cases in the future where a particularly vulnerable group or individual brings a case forward, > (emphasis added).

[107] In 2022 CHRT 41, the Tribunal found that the 2022 FSA fell short of the compensation ordered by this Tribunal:

> [332] Estates of deceased caregiving parents and grandparents in the FSA are not entitled to direct financial compensation unless the caregiver passes away after submitting an application for compensation. In contrast, the Tribunal's orders provide compensation to the estates of eligible caregivers regardless of when they passed.

[108] In response to the Tribunal's concerns regarding the estates of deceased caregiving parents and caregiving grandparents, the Revised Agreement at, section 14.03(1)-(2), provides for claims to be made on behalf of Removed Child Family Class Members (of a child placed off-Reserve with non-family as of and after January 1, 2006), Kith Family Members, or Jordan's Principle Family Class Members. Specifically for these caregiving parents and grandparents, the Revised Agreement provides that where a claim has been approved, base compensation in the amount of $40,000 and interest will be paid directly to their living child or children on a pro rata basis. The AFN submits that this entitlement overlaps entirely with the cohort of victims with an existing Tribunal entitlement. If there are no surviving children, the compensation will be paid to the estate of the deceased caregiving parent or grandparent.

[109] The Revised Agreement now includes the estates of deceased First Nations caregiving parents and grandparents and specifically provides for $40,000 in relation to those victims who have passed away while waiting for compensation to be resolved. The joint parties submit this fully aligns with the Tribunal's orders.

[110] However, the Revised Agreement sets out a mechanism to pay compensation owing to the estates of First Nations parents/caregiving grandparents directly to the child(ren) of the deceased. Instead of the $40,000 flowing into the estates of the deceased First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent, the compensation will be paid directly to the children – a variation that puts children at the centre of this process. If there are no surviving children, the compensation will flow to the estate of the deceased First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent.

[112] This variation achieves multiple benefits: (i) it acknowledges the compounded harm and suffering experienced by a child victim who has lost a parent/caregiving grandparent by providing additional compensation; (ii) it avoids the complex and lengthy procedural requirements related to estates; (iii) it ensures that the full benefit of the compensation for which the estate is eligible is directed to the surviving children of that First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent; and (iv) ensures that the compensation funds will not be subject to potential estate administration taxes.

[113] The AFN submits that the approach is principled, as it effectively prioritizes the children/grandchildren heirs of these deceased caregiving parents and grandparents at least one of whom would be victims/survivors themselves, and thus the basis for the deceased caregiving parent's or grandparent's claim for compensation. Effectively, the settlement funds to which the deceased's estate would be entitled under the Tribunal's compensation orders would be treated akin to life insurance, allowing it to bypass the estate and be paid directly to the named beneficiary of same (children/grandchildren) with the commensurate benefits. This includes the expedited delivery of compensation, avoiding the potential diminishment of the benefit of settlement funds to surviving First Nations children/grandchildren as a result of the deceased's estate being indebted, as well as the potential levy of estate administration taxes, (See Dr. Valerie Gideon' Affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at para. 64).

[114] This directly accords with the principles enumerated both in the Compensation Framework which sought to avoid the diminishment of victims/survivors' compensation as a result of tax consequences, as well as the efforts of the Revised Agreement to ensure that any compensation payable would remain tax exempt and not negatively impact any social benefits that victims/survivors are receiving (consistent with the Tribunal's guidance in 2019 CHRT 39 at para 265, see also, Compensation Framework at s. 10.9, Revised Agreement art. 10.03).

[115] The AFN submits that this evidence supports the relief sought with respect to varying the compensation entitlement of estates of deceased caregiving parents and grandparents who have an existing entitlement under 2020 CHRT 7, and that it also substantially aligns with the Tribunal's reasons within the context of the related Compensation Orders. It is also in the best interest of the First Nations children and families who are the victims/survivors of Canada's discrimination by ensuring that the children/grandchildren heirs of same receive their undiminished compensation. For the AFN, this amounts to a reasonable variation which has been supported by all the parties to the Revised Agreement and Minutes of Settlement, as well as the First Nations-in-Assembly. The AFN submits that with the adoption of this principled and evidence informed variation of the Tribunal's Compensation Order, which is in the best interest of First Nations class members, the Revised Agreement fully satisfies the Tribunal's Compensation Orders by ensuring that the Tribunal's compensation entitlement for these deceased caregiving parents and grandparents effectively flows to their children or grandchildren.

[116] In addition to providing further compensation to the children of deceased parents/caregiving grandparents, the proposed amendment would facilitate victims' ability to access compensation. Distributing money to beneficiaries when someone passes away can be a complex undertaking, with certain procedural requirements varying across the country. This process can be particularly complex when the deceased fails to leave directions, the deceased lived on reserve, or when the estate that receives the compensation has not already been through the court process of probate. Stringent bank rules and regulations for access to and distribution of the Estate funds add to these procedural hurdles, sometimes making distribution to beneficiaries frustrating, costly, and lengthy, (See, Alberta Law Reform Institute, Estate Administration: Final Report (Edmonton: August 2013), at paras. 188-212 (Alberta); Law Commission of Ontario, Simplified Procedures for Small Estates: Final Report (Toronto: August 2015), at pp. 16-17, 25-28 and 48-61 (Ontario). See for example Wills, Estates and Succession Act, SBC 2009, c 13, s 144 (British Columbia); Trustee Act, RSO 1990, c T.23, s 49 (Ontario); Estate Administration Act, RSY 2002, c 77, ss 97 (Yukon)).

[117] There are also concerns regarding who the compensation will benefit if directed to the estates of parents/caregiving grandparents. Pursuant to estate laws across the country, creditors take precedence over beneficiaries, (See, for example Trustee Act, RSO 1990, c T.23, ss 53, 57-59 (Ontario); Civil Code of Québec, CQLR c CCQ-1991, ss 2644-2659 (Quebec); Estate Administration Act, RSY 2002, c 77, ss 96-104 (Yukon). Where an estate is bankrupt, section 136 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, applies to determine the priority of creditors). For example, in Ontario, an estate trustee is required to pay the debts of the estate in the following order before any distribution can be made to beneficiaries: (i) reasonable funeral expenses; (ii) expenses related to the administration of the estates, including probate fees, professional fees and compensation for the executor/estate trustee; (iii) secured creditors; (iv) taxes; and (v) unsecured creditors, (See, Trustee Act, RSO 1990, c T.23, ss 48-59).

[118] The AFN submits that paying compensation directly to the children of the deceased parent/caregiving grandparent avoids many of the complications, costs and delays associated with estate administration. It avoids the complex requirements of probate, circumvents the payment of compensation to creditors, reduces expenses and thus maintains the entirety of the compensation payment and gives control over the compensation directly to the children of deceased parents/caregiving grandparents. It is also entirely in line with the approach taken by Quebec's Tribunal des droits de la personne in Commission des droits de la personne (Succession de Poirier) c Bradette Gauthier, in which Quebec's Commission des droits de la personne sought an order that compensation be paid directly to the deceased complainant's children, (See*, Commission des droits de la personne (Succession de Poirier) c. Bradette Gauthier*, 2010 QCTDP 10 at paras 6 and 130).

[119] The Caring Society notes that the Commission’s submission of March 9, 2020, suggesting that payments to estates would be appropriate in the context where it was difficult to locate proper beneficiaries does not apply in this context. There is an unquestionable link between the compensation payable to a deceased parent/caregiving grandparent and the lived experience of that person’s surviving child(ren).

[121] First Nations children who have lost a parent face compounded harms: the harm inflicted by Canada's discriminatory conduct and the harm of losing a parent. Evidence from the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (the MMIW Inquiry) and academic literature demonstrates that bereaved children face significant challenges, (See, Dr. Blackstock's Affidavit dated, June 30, 2023, at paras 56-58). The Revised Agreement provides a unique opportunity to provide additional compensation to First Nations who have lost a parent.

[122] In 2019 CHRT 39, at paras 13 and 258, the Tribunal acknowledged that the cap under the CHRA may not correspond to the level of suffering experienced by the victims in this case. The variation sought on this motion is a meaningful way that First Nations children and youth who have been impacted by Canada's discrimination along with the compounded harm of losing a parent may be compensated in excess of $40,000 plus interest. This is in the best interests of the child victims/survivors in this case and is an amendment that reflects both the spirit and scope of the Tribunal's previous compensation orders.

[123] This variation also reflects the spirit and intent of the Merit Decision, the Compensation Entitlement Order and the Tribunal's general approach in putting children first.

[124] A consent order sought as part of a Settlement Agreement provides more flexibility for the Tribunal to approve it as long as the orders sought are within the Tribunal's broad – but not unlimited - powers. In other words, the Tribunal cannot issue a consent order if it does not have the power under the CHRA. Further, as already said many times in 2022

CHRT 41, settlements and or consent orders are not a means to disentitle or reduce compensation already ordered. They are a firm foundation to be built upon.

[125] The Tribunal finds this consent order is not a mere clarification request. It is a variation of an order made by this Tribunal. This Tribunal already explained at length in 2022 CHRT 41 why it was not prepared to disentitle compensation to victims who had passed away waiting for the discrimination to be remedied. However, the consent order request does not propose to disentitle or reduce the compensation ordered by the Tribunal. The Tribunal finds the request does not propose a fundamental change of the order. Rather, it proposes a different first step in the process.

> [344] While estates are not people, the heirs of those estates are and they were signaled by the Tribunal's decision subsequently upheld by the Federal Court that they were entitled to compensation. It is unfair to now remove this from them because of financial choices resulting from merging proceedings and imposing a financial cap. These arguments are insufficient to justify an amendment to the Tribunal's orders on this point. As it will be revisited below, the Tribunal cannot amend its orders to reduce compensation or to disentitle victims/survivors. The Tribunal could accept variations of its orders if it does not remove gains for victims/survivors or a different compensation process and if supported by the evidence, which is a key consideration for this Tribunal for any order.
> (emphasis added)

[127] The Tribunal continues to rely on this legal finding and other legal findings discussed in 2022 CHRT 41, at paras. 155-201 and in all its other compensation orders.

[128] For example, in 2021 CHRT 7, the Tribunal indicated some of the important factors that are considered in an effective compensation remedy. This analysis and factors continue to apply here:

> [36] Furthermore, the Panel finds the entire compensation process is a part of the compensation remedy that is focused on a process that considers not just financial compensation but also other relevant factors such as creating a culturally safe and appropriate process to provide compensation in light of the specific circumstances of this case including historical patterns of discrimination, the vulnerability of victims/survivors who are minors or adults who lack legal capacity, access to justice, a clear and equitable process across Canada, the avoidance of unnecessary administrative burdens, etc.

[129] Furthermore, the main points gravitate around the following questions: Is there new evidence and compelling argument to consider that would support a finding to vary an order or a new process that would add and/or help refine the orders? Will this void the previous order and/or reduce the quantum of compensation or disentitle victims or simply add and refine the order in light of the new evidence, information and arguments provided in the best interest of First Nations children and families? The Tribunal believes it is the latter.

[130] Dr. Blackstock affirms in her affidavit that parental estates are now included in the Revised Agreement. The Caring Society set out to extrapolate, based on existing data, the number of parents whose children were removed from their homes, families, and communities, who would not have survived to the date of settlement approval.

[131] The Caring Society selected April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2023 as the date range over which it would estimate the number of parents whose children were removed from their homes, families and communities who passed away prior to the date of settlement approval. The Caring Society selected this period, as the First Nations-specific mortality information that it had access to was based on annualized statistics, making it difficult to select “partial year” periods to reflect deaths between January 1, 2006, and March 31, 2006, or from April 1, 2023 to settlement approval.

[132] More specifically, Dr. Blackstock affirms that the Caring Society’s estimation of the number of parents of First Nations children removed from their homes, families and communities who passed away between January 1, 2006 and March 31, 2023 was based on a 2018 paper authored by Randall Akee, of the University of California, Los Angeles’ Department of Public Policy and by Donna Feir, of the University of Victoria’s Department of Economics, titled First People Lost: Determining the State of Status First Nations Mortality in Canada Using Administrative Data. A copy of Professor Akee and Professor Feir’s paper is attached to Dr. Blackstock’s Affidavit, dated June 30, 2023, as Exhibit “K”.

[133] The Caring Society did not conduct similar estimates for parents of children who experienced discrimination related to Jordan’s Principle who themselves experienced a “worst case scenario” of compensation. Given that the piloting exercise has not yet been conducted, there is insufficient information to establish the “cohort” of parents from which to calculate the number of parents who would not have passed away prior to settlement approval. However, the Caring Society’s view is that mortality within this cohort can be considered by the Federal Court, on submissions from all parties including the Caring Society, as one of the factors in determining the reasonableness of the claims process proposed to distribute the $2,000,000,000 budget established for compensation to the parents of victims falling within the Jordan’s Principle and Trout Classes.

[134] For the Caring Society, an important aspect of the Revised Agreement (which we acknowledge is a deviation from the Tribunal’s order in 2020 CHRT 7) includes the provision that compensation that would otherwise be paid to the estates of deceased parents will be paid directly to the children of those deceased parents.

[135] Dr. Blackstock affirms that privileging children as beneficiaries of parental estates is an important and sacred component of the Revised Agreement.

[136] Dr. Blackstock’s evidence refers to the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (the “MMIWG Inquiry”), where she served as an expert witness, where evidence was shared regarding the harmful impacts on First Nations children who lose a parent, particularly when that loss is the result of a violent death. Experiencing loss of a parent or caregiver, particularly to violence, can result in children and youth harbouring intense feelings of loss and anger, unresolved trauma, depression and, at times, suicide.

[137] The MMIWG Inquiry also noted these children can face an increased risk of experiencing mental health challenges, substance misuse, involvement in the criminal justice system, becoming a young parent, and dying while young. Additional harmful impacts include weakened or permanently ruptured ties with siblings, extended family, and home communities; loss of culture, language, and sense of identity; risks of abuse of neglect; and an increased risk of homeless and poverty. The relevant sections of the MMIW Inquiry Report are attached to Dr. Blackstock’s Affidavit dated June 30, 2023, as Exhibit “L”.

[139] Evidence suggests that bereaved children are vulnerable for increased risk for social impairment – not only during the immediate post bereavement period but extending into adulthood. They also face educational challenges, social challenges, and mental health challenges. Moreover, depending on the family's circumstances at the time of the death, children and youth may face housing instability, family instability and a significant loss of love and nurturing required for healthy development. A selection of academic literature on this topic is attached to Dr. Blackstock's Affidavit dated June 30, 2023, as Exhibit "M".

[140] Throughout this case, the Caring Society's primary focus has been on supporting and advocating for the rights of First Nations children, youth and families harmed by Canada's discrimination. The Revised Agreement provides a unique opportunity to provide additional compensation to First Nations children and youth who have lost a parent – a traumatic experience for all children but an experience compounded by their experiences of discrimination in this case.

[141] In Dr. Blackstock's view, taking a child centered approach to directly compensating these children aligns with the spirit of the Tribunal's work and honours the memories of the children and youth who have passed on. Most children and youth who died during the long history of this case were surrounded by loving families and the child's estate ought to benefit those left behind.

[142] The Tribunal has carefully considered all evidence and arguments and it finds the MMIWG report relevant to this question. As found in previous rulings, the MMIWG Reclaiming Power and Place: The Final Report of the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls vol. 1a and vol. b, report is reliable. This National inquiry heard hundreds of witnesses and experts and this led to calls to justice in the form of recommendations that were accepted by Canada.

[143] The MMIWG report also found that when failure to find continuity or a sense of belonging can lead youth to adopt addictive lifestyles or to adopt unhealthy self-images leading to suicidal thoughts or attempts, (See MMIWG report at page 426). Importantly, the same analysis also showed that the strongest protective influence against Indigenous youth suicide was "high support, whether social or familial, (See MMIWG report at page 427).

[144] Further, Dr. Blackstock was recognized as an expert in child welfare before this Tribunal, she testified and/or provided affidavits for the Tribunal multiple times and her evidence was of great assistance to the Tribunal. Her resume filed in evidence has 50 pages of relevant experience and expertise. In other words, her evidence is reliable. More importantly, Dr. Blackstock has demonstrated throughout this case her quest for the best interest of children and her child-centric approach which is in line with the Tribunal's focus.

[146] Further, on a principled basis, the Tribunal finds it is more probable than not that First Nations children harmed by the systemic racial discrimination found by this Tribunal who lose a parent, experience compound harm - even if the scientific articles filed in evidence as part of this joint motion - are inconclusive and do not support such a finding. The Tribunal agrees with Dr. Blackstock's position on compound harm and her evidence. However, the Tribunal prefers the MMIWG report and other evidence in the record than the scientific articles provided. The Tribunal does arrive at the same conclusion as Dr. Blackstock without the articles. The Tribunal has already made findings of harms linked to the separation between a child and a parent. In 2019 CHRT 39:

> [147] The children who were unnecessarily removed from their homes, will not be vindicated by a system reform nor will their parents. Even the children who are reunified with their families cannot recover the time they lost with their families. The loss of opportunity to remain in their homes, their families and communities as a result of the racial discrimination is one of the most egregious forms of discrimination leading to serious and well documented consequences including harm and suffering found in the evidence in this case. (emphasis added)
> [155] […]
> > […]
> > As will be seen in the next section, the adverse effects generated by the FNCFS Program, corresponding funding formulas and other related provincial/territorial agreements perpetuate disadvantages historically suffered by First Nations people, (see 2016 CHRT 2 at, para. 394. 2019 CHRT 39, at para. 155), > > (emphasis changed).

[147] The trauma of losing a parent or grandparent through separation was found by this Tribunal to cause serious harm and suffering to a child and, as found by the Tribunal above, is in addition to the other aspects of the systemic racial discrimination. The Tribunal finds this also applies to the death of a parent or grandparent or family member. Moreover, Mary Wilson, former Truth and Reconciliation Commissioner, provided affidavit evidence on the harm of separating a child and a parent that was considered by this Tribunal:

> She affirms that she personally bore witness to fifteen hundred statements made to the TRC. Many were from those who grew up as children in the foster care system as it currently exists. She also heard from hundreds of parents with children taken into care. Over and over again, she states the Commissioners heard that the worst part of the Residential schools was not the sexual abuse but rather the rupture from the family and home and everything and everyone familiar and cherished. This was the worst aspect and the most universal amongst the voices they heard.
> Ms. Wilson notes in her affidavit that children removed from their parents to be placed in foster care shared similar experiences to those who went to residential schools. The day they remember most vividly was the day they were taken from their home. She mentions, as the Commissioners have said in their report, that child welfare may be considered a continuation of or, a replacement for the residential school system.
> (see 2018 CHRT 4 at para. 123).

[148] Moreover, losing the hope of an opportunity of reunification with a deceased parent or grandparent for example, can add further suffering to the child. Another example would be of a child who was removed and later finally reunited with a parent or grandparent who then passes away. It is reasonable to find that it is more probable than not that these situations would add further harm and trauma to a child's soul.

[149] The Tribunal made findings on the MMIWG report in previous rulings. Therefore, the full MMIWG report is part of the Tribunal's record. This supports Dr. Blackstock's evidence discussed above:

> Noting the inequities, participants across all four Guided Dialogues also emphasized the negative impact that foster care experiences have on the long-term safety and well-being of Indigenous women, girls, 2SLGBTQQIA people, and families as a whole. These impacts include:

> (…) allow parents and children to remain together throughout the healing process, and provide specialized support for children experiencing trauma, violence, or neglect in their family home;
> "Keep the families together during times of healing and a transition. Provide them with the support they need to work out their issues and rebuild their life.", (See MMIWG report vol. 1 b at page 115).

[150] Furthermore, the evidence and findings discussed above demonstrate the suffering and negative consequences associated with the separation between children and their parents. Therefore, it is reasonable to find that permanent separation caused by the death of a parent or of a grand parent can amount to compound harm for their children.

[151] Moreover, the administrative burdens referred to by the AFN are a factor to be considered by the Tribunal in the compensation process as explained above. The evidence supports the AFN's position and qualifies as a refinement of the order for an optimal implementation of the compensation orders. However, the Tribunal does not view the evidence as new evidence that was unavailable at the time the Tribunal heard the compensation matter and that now arises justifying a reopening of a final matter. This would be an incorrect characterization of the facts and of the evidence. This qualifies more appropriately as new considerations and examples of hardship forming part of the process and the implementation of the order. The Tribunal has remained seized of the implementation of its compensation orders and has made clear that refinements and additions during the compensation process and its implementation could be made if justified. This is the case here.

[152] In other words, the authority to vary the Tribunal's order as found in 2022 CHRT 41 flows from its ongoing supervisory role of the implementation of its orders and its retained jurisdiction. Moreover, this consent order request does not remove gains for victims/survivors which is in line with the Tribunal's 2022 CHRT 41 ruling.

[153] The Tribunal finds the quantum and spirit of the order honouring deceased victims of Canada's systemic racial discrimination remains unchanged under the Revised Agreement.

Rather, it is a different compensation process at the first step that is requested here and placing the living First Nations children of the deceased victims at the forefront. Further, the compensation payment to estates remains as a second step when the deceased victims do not have living children.

[154] This important information on the administrative burdens and the compound harm was not put before the Tribunal when it arrived at its findings and orders regarding estates. While this is not sufficient to reopen a final matter according to the case law, it is sufficient according to the Tribunal's previous orders, its retained jurisdiction on the compensation process and implementation and the Tribunal's clear intent to leave the door open for possible improvements, refinements and additions to further the implementation of its orders in the best interest of First Nations children and families.

[155] The requested order does not modify final orders on quantum. Moreover, the requested order does not deny, reduce or disentitle compensation to the deceased victims rather it provides a priority rank for their living child or children to receive compensation on a pro rata basis. The Tribunal finds this recognizes both the harms borne by the deceased and their living children and avoids unnecessary administrative burdens and costs.

> [36] Furthermore, the Panel finds the entire compensation process is a part of the compensation remedy that is focused on a process that considers not just financial compensation but also other relevant factors such as creating a culturally safe and appropriate process to provide compensation in light of the specific circumstances of this case including historical patterns of discrimination, the vulnerability of victims/survivors who are minors or adults who lack legal capacity, access to justice, a clear and equitable process across Canada, the avoidance of unnecessary administrative burdens, etc. Consequently, the Panel finds the compensation process remedy in this case can be viewed as a "special program, plan or arrangement" that is informed by First Nations parties in this case and a broad and liberal interpretation of sections 16 (1), 53(2)(a), 53 (2)(e) and 53 (3) of the CHRA and Supreme Court and Tribunal decisions discussed in 2021 CHRT 6 at paras. 51-79. Finally, on this point, the Panel determined that the CHRA analysis and reasoning found > in the scope of CHRA remedial provisions section in 2021 CHRT 6 at paras. 51-79 and 80 applies to the Draft Compensation Framework as a whole and supports the Panel's approval of the Draft Compensation Framework dated December 23, 2020, > (emphasis added).

[157] Both the AFN and the Caring Society refer to some of the above factors to be considered by the Tribunal namely, administrative burdens and the vulnerability of victims/survivors who are minors.

[158] For the above reasons, the Tribunal finds the Revised Agreement provides a base compensation in the amount of $40,000 and interest to be paid directly to the living child or children on a pro rata basis. When there are no living children, the compensation is to be paid to the victims' estate similar to the Tribunal's original order. This entitlement overlaps entirely with the cohort of victims with an existing Tribunal entitlement. If there are no surviving children, the compensation will be paid to the estate of the deceased caregiving parent or grandparent.

[159] In the case at hand, focusing on the children's compound harms first, is in line with a human rights approach and, the spirit of the Tribunal's views in this case.

[161] Moreover, the Tribunal discussed compensation flowing to the heirs of the victims in 2020 CHRT 7 at para. 140:

> In these circumstances, it is entirely appropriate to direct Canada to make payments that will flow through estates to the heirs of the victims of its discriminatory practices. This outcome is responsive to the nature of the harms, and best advances the goal of reconciliation between First Nations peoples and the Crown.

[162] Adopting a priority rank that focuses on children who are heirs of the deceased victims is a reasonable variation of the Tribunal's order justifying such an amendment.

[163] For the above reasons, the Tribunal finds there is compelling evidence and arguments in support of the variation in the best interest of First Nations children and families. The requested variation will remove many administrative burdens resulting in an effective implementation of the Tribunal's compensation orders for this category of victims. The Tribunal finds that it has the jurisdiction to vary the order found in 2020 CHRT 7:

> [152] Canada is ordered to pay compensation under s. 53(2)(e) pain and suffering ($20,000) and s. 53(3) wilful and reckless discriminatory practice ($20,000) to the estates of all First Nations children and parents or caregiving grandparents who have died after suffering discriminatory practices described in the Compensation Decision Order, including the referenced period in the Order above mentioned in Question 2.

[164] The order varying 2020 CHRT 7 in the order below now provides that compensation of $40,000 plus applicable interest shall be paid directly to the child(ren) of the deceased parent/caregiving grandparent on a pro rata basis where the estate of that deceased parent/caregiving grandparent would otherwise be entitled to compensation under 2020 CHRT 7. Where there are no surviving children, the compensation will flow to the estate of the deceased parent/caregiving grandparent.

[165] Finally on this point, the Tribunal finds the Revised Agreement now fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders.

(v) The Uncertainties Regarding Jordan's Principle Have Been Addressed

[166] The Tribunal in assessing the 2022 FSA in 2022 CHRT 41 made a number of findings that highlighted some uncertainties for the Jordan's Principle compensation category:

> [373] … it is impossible at the current point in time to know whether the implementation of Jordan's Principle under the FSA will result in the First Nations children identified under the Tribunal's orders receiving $40,000 under the FSA. […] there is little evidence of whether Jordan's Principle eligibility under the FSA will be interpreted in such a manner that it provides the victims/survivors under the Tribunal's orders the full entitlement they would have received under those orders.
> [375] The FSA sets out future work that is required before there can be certainty regarding which victims/survivors under the Tribunal compensation orders will be eligible under the FSA.

> [377] In order to be eligible for a guaranteed $40,000 Jordan's Principle compensation under the FSA, First Nations children must have both experienced a denial or delay in receiving an essential service and have experienced a "significant impact" because of the delay or denial. Article 6.06(3) of the FSA indicates that a "significant impact" will be defined in the Framework of Essential Services:
>
> [378] … the Framework on Essential Services does not provide further guidance on a "significant impact" and what is required to engage the higher level of compensation. Neither is "Significant Impact" a defined term in the FSA. Without this information, individual claimants cannot determine whether they could be entitled to more or less compensation under the FSA than they would be eligible to obtain under the Tribunal's orders.
> [379] The uncertainties in benefits from the outstanding definition of an "essential service" reflects the early stages of a negotiated settlement. … there is a real potential for reduction in compensation for some victims and disentitlements for others which is not permissible.

[167] The Tribunal found this may depart from the Tribunal's orders for this category and therefore cannot be considered to fully satisfy the Tribunal's orders and the request is premature since there are uncertainties at this time (See 2022 CHRT 41 at para. 379).

[168] This differed from the Tribunal's approach, which awarded $40,000 plus interest to a First Nations child who experienced a denial, gap, or unreasonable delay in the delivery of "essential services" that would have been available pursuant to a non-discriminatory definition and approach to Jordan's Principle.

[169] Moreover, the definition of "Delay" did not accord with the requirements of the Compensation Framework and instead were to be defined as "a timeline to be agreed to by the Parties and specified in the Claims Process''.

[170] The joint parties submit the Revised Agreement addresses these uncertainties and the overall approach to Jordan's Principle has been refined in harmony with the Tribunal's orders.

[171] The joint parties submit that the 2022 FSA did not include final criteria for determining eligibility for Jordan's Principle compensation. The parameters for determining eligibility for Jordan's Principle compensation in the Revised Agreement now more clearly reflect the Tribunal's approach pursuant to Jordan's Principle. The approach for determining eligibility for Jordan's Principle in keeping with this approach is to be subject to robust piloting before implementation.

[172] The definition of Jordan's Principle Class Member has been revised and now states: "Jordan's Principle Class Member" means an Essential Service Class Member who experienced the highest level of impact (including pain, suffering or harm of the worst kind) associated with the Delay, Denial, or Service Gap of an Essential Service that was the subject of a Confirmed Need. The Parties intend that the way that the highest level of impact is defined, and the associated threshold set for membership in the Jordan's Principle Class fully overlap with the First Nations children entitled to compensation under the Compensation Orders who will receive a minimum of $40,000 in addition to interest." (See, Revised Agreement, Article 1.01, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit). This aligns with the Tribunal's language in the Compensation Decision, specifically accounting for the harms and the impacts of Canada's discrimination.

[174] If the number of claimants was unexpectedly higher, the Revised Agreement provides that Jordan's Principle Class Members (those who suffered the highest level of impact, which is intended to overlap with all the Jordan's Principle children entitled to compensation under the Tribunal's Compensation Orders) will receive a minimum of $40,000, in addition to interest. The remaining funds in the budget would be shared pro rata by the lesser impacted Essential Service Class Members, (See, Revised Agreement, Art. 6.08(10)-(12)). Conversely, if the number of claimants is lower, upon the advice from the Federal Court-appointed Actuary, Jordan's Principle Class Members may be entitled to enhancement payments, (See, Revised Agreement, art. 6.08(15)). The Revised Agreement's primary focus in relation to the Essential Service Class is to ensure that Jordan's Principle Class members receive their entitlements as directed by the Tribunal.

[175] The term "Compensation Orders" is defined in the Preamble of the Revised Agreement as 2019 CHRT 39, 2020 CHRT 15, and 2020 CHRT 7, thus encompassing the terminology, guidance and approaches set out by the Tribunal in those orders. The Caring Society agrees with the AFN's submission on Jordan's Principle that there is no intention or requirement for a "jurisdictional dispute" in order for compensation to be paid to victims.

[176] The joint parties submit the definition of "Delay" has been amended to reflect the 12-hour and 48-hour timeframes ordered by the Tribunal in the Compensation Framework Order. While the 2022 FSA had left the definition of "Delay" as something to be determined in the future, the Revised Agreement is now directly in line with the Tribunal's orders, (See, Article Revised Agreement, 1.01, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit).

[177] The AFN submits that while the Revised Agreement still provides for the need to develop the threshold by which the highest level of impact with be objectively determined, it now specifies that the underlying basis for developing this threshold necessary for inclusion in the Jordan's Principle Class is ensuring full overlap with those children entitled to compensation under the Tribunals Compensation Orders, which is set out within the definition of the Jordan's Principle Class, (See Revised Agreement art 1.01 Definition "Jordan's Principle Class").

[178] This underlying principle informs each element of the means by which the threshold of impact level shall be determined under the Revised Agreement, and thereby whether an individual falls under the Essential Services Class or the Jordan's Principle Class, including the framework for essential services, accompanying instruments, such as the claims forms and questionnaire, as well as the associated robust and broad piloting, (See, Revised Agreement arts. 1.01 Definitions "Framework of Essential Services", "Essential Services", "Schedule F: Framework of Essential Services", 6.08(2)-(3), 6.08(10)(a)-(b)).

[179] The "framework of essential services", as developed with the assistance of experts, facilitates the streamlining of the compensation process and facilitates professional confirmation of the individual's need for an essential service. The framework is designed to allow claimants to identify whether they had a confirmed need for a service that was essential for the purposes of compensation. These objective criteria allow for the expedient administration of claims, avoiding the need for case-by-case individual and subjective inquiry for inclusion in the Essential Service Class, (See, Revised Agreement arts. 1.01 Definitions “Framework of Essential Services”, “Essential Services”, “Schedule F: Framework of Essential Services”, 6.08(2)-(3).33).

[180] The Revised Agreement continues to provide for instruments such as culturally sensitive claims forms and a questionnaire, which will assist the Administrator at the second stage of the analysis, being a determination of whether a child’s circumstances indicate the highest level of impact and thereby eligibility for inclusion into the Jordan’s Principle Class, with the accompanying minimum compensation of $40,000 and interest, in alignment with their Tribunal entitlement under the Compensation Orders, (See, Revised Agreement, art. 6.08(10)(a)). Critically, these instruments and questionnaire remain subject to Jordan’s Principle expert consultations, which are First Nations-led and continue to be facilitated by the AFN.

[181] The AFN states that the Revised Agreement also provides that the threshold of impact for qualification as a member of the Jordan’s Principle Class is subject to the results of piloting of the method developed in accordance with the framework of essential services. The AFN is currently involved with advancing these piloting efforts, which will include a number of potential Essential Service Class and Jordan’s Principle Class members, in a manner that respects the need for full overlap with those with an existing entitlement under the Tribunal’s compensation orders, and which minimizes any burdens on the victims/survivors. The piloting efforts will also assist in refining the framework of essential services, as well as the supporting instruments, such as the claims forms and questionnaire, (See Dr. Valerie Gideon’s affidavit dated June 30, 2023, at paras. 73-75).

[182] Further, the pilot is to be evidence-based, premised on the efforts of the AFN’s circle of experts, as well as additional independent researchers. All are of the view that the finalization of an effective approach premised on the framework of essential services, as well as the development of the threshold for inclusion in the Jordan’s Principle Class premised on the highest level of harm, requires piloting. This pilot is intended to gauge the quality and efficiency of the approach to compensation established for Jordan's Principle in the Revised Agreement, allowing for the refinement of each component of the claims assessment process and ensuring that it is in alignment with the Tribunal's Compensation Orders. This is the central component of these efforts, and is the primary outcome measured. The pilot will also assist in other important aspects of the compensation process, including gauging the effectiveness of the cultural and trauma-informed supports. All of these efforts and the ultimate determination remain subject to Federal Court approval and oversight.

[183] Finally, the Caring Society submits that with respect to the budget of $3,000,000,000 for compensation to children eligible for compensation under the Tribunal's orders regarding discrimination related to Canada's implementation of Jordan's Principle, the Caring Society's view is that, based on available evidence, this budget is sufficient. As detailed in Annex A, the Caring Society's best estimate of the number of children eligible for compensation under the Tribunal's Jordan's Principle orders is approximately 61,500 (based on demographic data from ISC regarding the number of individual children accessing services through Jordan's Principle in FY 21-22). However, there is significant uncertainty regarding that number, such that the $3 billion budget is an essential element of the Revised Agreement's ability to satisfy the Tribunal's compensation orders. This budget allows for base compensation for up to 75,000 First Nations children, and possibly more with growth on the portion of the settlement funds that will remain in trust.

[184] The Tribunal finds the evidence supports the joint parties' methodology described above. The Tribunal finds the calculations to set aside sufficient compensation funds for all eligible claimants to be thoughtful, reasonable and fair. Consequently, the Tribunal accepts those calculations and this methodology.

[185] Furthermore, the Revised Agreement ensures that those who suffered a worst-case scenario of discrimination in relation to Jordan's Principle receive $40,000 plus interest. This is directly in keeping with the guidance of the Tribunal in the Compensation Entitlement Order and the Eligibility Decision.

[186] The Tribunal finds that all the uncertainties described above have now been carefully addressed in the Revised Agreement in a manner that fully satisfies this Tribunal. There is now a clear methodology, clear definitions and clear criteria. There is no reduction in compensation for any victims/survivors, nor any disentitlements. There will be sufficient funds set aside to cover all eligible claimants. There is evidence that Jordan's Principle eligibility under the Revised Agreement will be interpreted in a manner that provides the victims/survivors under the Tribunal's orders the full entitlement they would have received under those orders. The future work that is required is clearly identified and accompanied by a defined and reasonable process and oversight by the Federal Court if the Revised Agreement is approved by the Federal Court.

(vi) Need for Clarification regarding Parents/Caregiving Grandparents under Jordan's Principle

[187] The AFN, the Caring Society and Canada seek a clarification of the Compensation Entitlement Order in relation to parents/caregiving grandparents under Jordan's Principle.

[188] In the case of a removed child, both the First Nations child and First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent are directly impacted by the lack of equitable FNCFS services available to the family. When a child is removed from a parent/caregiving grandparent, both experience direct discrimination, pain and suffering of the worst kind.

[189] Conversely, where a child experienced discrimination as a result of Canada's failure to fully implement Jordan's Principle, the First Nations parent/caregiving grandparent may not have a derivative experience of harm that equates to their child's experience. The parties are of the view that the Tribunal intended to compensate adults who were directly impacted at the highest level by Canada's discriminatory conduct.

[190] In order to capture the true intention of the Tribunal, the Revised Agreement provides that parents/caregiving grandparents of a child eligible for compensation pursuant to Jordan's Principle will receive compensation if they experienced the highest level of impact, including pain, suffering, or harm of the worst kind. The Revised Agreement contemplates different measures of impact to parents and the child who experienced a Jordan's Principle delay, denial or service gap.

[191] This approach is consistent with the Tribunal's overall approach in its Compensation Orders, which target the worst-case scenarios of discrimination in this case. Removals, by their very nature affect a parent's individual dignity in a fundamental way. Denials, service gaps, and the impact of unreasonable delays with respect to essential services are not necessarily interchangeable as between parents and children. To be sure, many First Nations parents (or caregiving grandparents) of a Jordan's Principle child have experienced worst-case scenarios resulting from discrimination against their children, such as: the death or removal of a child, and a family's forced relocation off-reserve. Therefore, the Revised Agreement contemplates differential criteria for assessing impacts to parents as opposed to those experienced by the impacted child.

[192] The impact that Caregiving Parents or Caregiving Grandparents have experienced will be assessed through objective criteria and expert advice, as developed through Schedule F: Framework of Essential Services and through piloting. These criteria will be subject to the Federal Court's approval, wherein the Caring Society will have standing.

[193] The Tribunal has already explained its authority to clarify its orders above. In sum, this flows from the Tribunal's retained jurisdiction and supervisory role for the effective implementation of its orders.

[195] In a previous ruling, the Tribunal determined that some measure of reasonableness is acceptable:

> [147] The Panel also agrees with the AFN and the Caring Society's positions on the definition of what is an "essential service" mentioned above. The Panel agrees that an "essential service" should be whether the service in question was necessary to ensure substantive equality in the provision of services, products and/or supports to the First Nations child. The Panel also agrees that a conduct that widened the gap between First Nations children and the rest of Canadian society and caused pain and suffering should be compensable > whenever it occurred, and not only when it had an adverse impact on the health or safety of a First Nations child.

> [148] Nevertheless, the Panel agrees with Canada that not all supports, products and services as currently approved by Canada since the Tribunal's rulings in 2017 CHRT 14 and 2017 CHRT 35 are equally necessary and lack thereof or delay cause harm to First Nations children. Therefore, some measure of reasonableness is acceptable. The examples provided in the Merit Decision and subsequent rulings and Compensation Decision refer to the clear examples of harm to children caused by Canada's discriminatory practices. However, as already explained in the Merit Decision and subsequent rulings, the adverse impacts experienced by First Nations children and their caregiving parents or grandparents as a result of Canada's discrimination amount to harm and the Panel opted for a compensation process that would avoid measuring the level of harm borne by each victim. However, some measure of reasonableness should be applied given that some examples recently brought forward by Canada may not be considered real harm by this Panel. The Panel is not privy to the parties' discussions and the full context surrounding those examples of services and is not in a position to make findings on an untested affidavit however, one example stands out. If a request for a laptop at school is made in July for the September start of the school year, Canada must make this determination within the prescribed timeframe despite the laptop not being required for two months (see Affidavit of Dr. Gideon of April 30, 2020, at para. 9). This is an example where it is difficult to see any harm to a child. A reasonableness analysis is particularly helpful in this case.
> (2020 CHRT 15 at paras. 147-48).

[196] The Tribunal further explained that compensation should accord with a reasonable interpretation of what is "essential":

> The Panel agrees with Canada that to be compensable, a product, support or service must accord with a reasonable interpretation of what is "essential" and that the definition should foresee this and should be finalised by the Caring Society, the AFN and Canada. However, the Panel disagrees that Canada's definition does that in an effective way given it is too narrow for the reasons mentioned above. This reasonable interpretation of what is essential must be done through an adequate substantive equality lens. The Panel agrees with the AFN and the Caring Society's arguments on this point.
> (2020 CHRT 15 at para. 151).

[197] The Tribunal agrees that some measure of reasonableness is also acceptable in the eligibility criteria applicable for caregiver parents/grandparents. The Tribunal agrees to confirm that caregiving parents (or caregiving grandparents) of Canada's discrimination towards Jordan's Principle victims/survivors must themselves have experienced the highest level of impact (including pain, suffering or harm of the worst kind) in order to receive compensation ($40,000 plus applicable interest) for their child's essential service denials, unreasonable delays and gaps. This is in line with the Tribunal's reasoning and orders, (see Grant v. Manitoba Telecom Services Inc., 2012 CHRT 10 at para.115 recently cited in Jane Doe v. Canada (Attorney General), 2018 FCA 183*,* at para. 29.). The reasoning above continues to apply and applies to caregiving parents (or caregiving grandparents).

[198] The Tribunal cautions parties not to import the stricter criteria of causal link/connection in human rights cases which was rejected by the Supreme Court in Quebec (Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse) v. Bombardier Inc. (Bombardier Aerospace Training Center), 2015 SCC 39 (CanLII), [2015] 2 SCR 789, at paras 50-51*.* Indeed, the Supreme Court wrote*: "It is therefore neither appropriate nor accurate to use the expression "causal connection" in the discrimination context" (para. 51).* This legal criteria has a different connotation than the terms used in other disciplines such as social work. The legal term causal link or causal connection is applied in medical malpractice and many litigation cases. Further, it is applied often in considering wage loss under the CHRA. For the Tribunal, the balance of probabilities and analysis to assess harm evaluates whether it is more probable than not that there exists a connection between the discrimination and the pain and suffering. In terms of assessing the pain and suffering (and Canada's wilful and reckless conduct), the Tribunal performs a principled and purposive analysis keeping in mind that the maximum compensation is reserved for the worst-case scenarios.

[199] The Tribunal believes that it is more probable than not that a parent or grandparent witnessing the child in their care suffering greatly would also suffer greatly. Perhaps not to the same degree as the child - sometimes less and sometimes more. The Tribunal believes this does not discount the parent or grandparent's resilience, courage, and dignity. They often are heroes who are so focused on the well-being of their child that they often discount their own feelings in order to be strong for that child. For example, a young child with terminal cancer who receives pain medication that effectively controls the pain and who does not comprehend the concept of death, suffers on many levels but not because of the concept of permanence attached to death. Their parents or grandparent's while not physically suffering, have to watch their child suffer and have this added moral and psychological pain of losing their child. It this situation, it is reasonable that both have experienced similar levels of pain and suffering.

[200] While this differs a little from the parties' arguments on this point, it is not in complete contradiction. The Tribunal also accepts that many caregiving parents/grandparents will not experience the same level of pain and suffering as their children. The approach adopted by the parties to the Revised Agreement includes flexibility to consider who has experienced the highest amount of suffering.

[201] The Tribunal accepts to clarify its order. However, the Tribunal does not rely on the articles filed in evidence to do so given they were not particularly helpful or conclusive. Moreover, there seems to be a disconnect between a reasonable understanding of human behaviour and what is found in some scientific studies. Further, the Tribunal is often asked to make compensation orders without the benefit of scientific evidence to support harms. If this were required, many complainants would not get justice.

[202] The Tribunal agrees that not all caregiving parents and grandparents under this category have suffered harm in the worst-case scenario akin to when a child has been removed from their care. In this category, there are some that suffered immensely and others who have suffered less. Not applying reasonableness here could result in some measure of unfairness and discount tremendous harm experienced by some parents/grandparents who, for example, lost children that died versus some parents/grandparents who did not obtain sporting equipment when their children needed it. Such evidence forms part of the Tribunal's record. Further, some of the tremendous harms mentioned above were discussed in previous rulings.

[203] Moreover, the Tribunal is satisfied that the process, explained by the parties above, will ensure that a reasonableness criterion is applied for this category of claimants in a fair manner, ensuring that those who suffered the most receive fair compensation.

[204] For those reasons, and given the Tribunal's previous orders and reasons, the clarification request aligns completely with the Tribunal's approach to the compensation remedies.

[205] Furthermore, the Tribunal finds the Revised Agreement now fully satisfies the Tribunal's orders on this point.

(vii) Opt-out provision

[206] The Tribunal was clear in the 2022 FSA Motion Decision on the importance of ensuring that victims/survivors have adequate time to consider the 2022 FSA and the Tribunal's 2022 FSA Motion Decision and previous Compensation Orders with the benefit of an appropriate opt-out period. It was of the view that the initial opt-out date of February 19, 2023, as described within the AFN's and Canada's materials on the 2022 FSA Motion Decision was too short and placed the victims/survivors in an untenable situation:

> The unfairness deepens as the FSA seems to force victims/survivors to opt out of both avenues of compensation if they are dissatisfied with the class action deal struck at the Federal Court. Such an opt-out scheme would place victims/survivors who are receiving less than their CHRT entitlement of $40,000 in an untenable situation whereby they either accept reduced entitlements under the FSA or opt-out of the FSA to be left to litigate against Canada from scratch. Such a proposal deepens the infringement of dignity for victims/survivors and may revictimize them and is therefore inconsistent with a human rights approach. This is concerning. (See 2022 CHRT 41, at para. 388).

[207] The Tribunal's concerns about the opt-out regime in the 2022 FSA (2022 CHRT 41 at paras. 385-390) have now been addressed. The parties to the Federal Court Class Actions have addressed the Tribunal's comments regarding the opt-out deadline. The opt-out deadline has already been extended to August 23, 2023 by the Federal Court (See, Article 1.01, Revised Agreement, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit and February 23, 2023, order of Justice Aylen in T-402-19), and, in the Minutes of Settlement, the AFN and Canada have agreed to seek a further extension to October 6, 2023, subject to Federal Court approval. Therefore, the Tribunal is now satisfied with this outcome.

[209] The Tribunal's Compensation Entitlement Order directed victims to receive interest to the date of judgment pursuant to subsection 53(4) of the CHRA at the Bank of Canada rate in keeping with the approach in Grant v. Manitoba Telecom Services Inc., 2012 CHRT 20. The 2022 FSA did not contemplate the payment of interest to the victims identified by the Tribunal. The Tribunal finds that this has been addressed in the Revised Agreement and now all victims/survivors identified by the Tribunal are entitled to receive interest to the date the settlement approval order is final in addition to their base compensation of $40,000.

[211] The Caring Society will have standing at the Claims Process hearing and therefore, should an issue arise with the applicability of the eligibility criteria, the Caring Society will have the opportunity to provide submissions to the Federal Court regarding the parameters of pain, suffering or harm of the worst kind for Jordan's Principle parents.

[212] The Caring Society will have ongoing involvement in the Federal Court proceedings (in which it will have standing on matters related to the Tribunal's orders, pursuant to the Revised Agreement). The Caring Society will be entitled to notice of proceedings before the Federal Court related to matters impacting the rights of the beneficiaries of the Tribunal's compensation orders, as well as the standing to make submissions on any applications pertaining to the administration and implementation of the Revised Agreement on compensation as it relates to those matters, (See, Article 22.05, Revised Agreement, Exhibit "F" to the AFN Affidavit).

[213] The Revised Agreement also provides for the Caring Society's involvement and participation following the end of the Tribunal's jurisdiction. Specifically, the Caring Society will have standing to make submissions to the Federal Court regarding the administration and implementation of the Revised Agreement after the Settlement Approval hearing, including approval of the Claims Process and distribution protocol, to the extent that issues impact the rights of the victims identified by the Tribunal. The Tribunal finds this provision provides for the ongoing role the Caring Society would have had under the Compensation Framework Order.

(x) Apology from the Prime Minister

[214] As mentioned above, according to the parties, this is the largest compensation settlement in Canadian history and it now includes a commitment from the Minister of Indigenous Services to request an apology from the Prime Minister.

[215] The terms of the Revised Agreement continue to call for an apology by the Prime Minister, (See, Revised Agreement at art. 24). The Tribunal cannot order apologies. However, the Tribunal completely agrees with this approach included in the Revised Agreement. The Tribunal also agrees with the Caring Society that the best apology Canada can offer is changed behaviour, so that this may be the last generation of First Nations children and youth that have to recover from their childhoods. This Tribunal believes this is true measurable reconciliation and the very reason as to why the Tribunal has remained, and continues to remain, seized of the implementation phase of its orders, and to monitor the reform ensuring the systemic racial discrimination is eliminated.

(xi) Role of the Federal Court

[216] The Revised Agreement is subject to the Supervisory role of the Federal Court should the Federal Court approve the Revised Settlement. This is an optimal approach given the class actions and the representative plaintiffs who are parties to the Revised Agreement. The Tribunal does not have jurisdiction over those class actions - the Federal Court does. This is why the Federal Court is asked to approve the Revised Agreement. Otherwise, the Tribunal alone could not approve it. Federal Court approval of the Revised Settlement would end the Tribunal's jurisdiction on the compensation orders. The Tribunal agrees with this outcome. The details are included in the order below.

(xii) Tribunal's interpretation of specific points in the Revised Agreements

[217] The Panel also wishes to address two points about its interpretation of the Revised Agreement.

[218] First, the Tribunal notes that Canadians cannot prospectively renounce their rights under the CHRA. Accordingly, the release in s. 10.01 of the Revised Agreement cannot release Canada from human rights violations for subsequent actions. The Tribunal wishes to explicitly note its observation that any human rights complaints for events post-dating the end of the Revised Agreement (2017 for Jordan's Principle; 2022 for removed children) are not precluded by the releases. The Tribunal understands the releases to intend to prevent Class Members who have not opted-out – as well as their estates, heirs, Estate Executors, estate Claimants, and Personal Representatives – from the Revised Agreement from claiming further compensation from Canada for harms described in the Revised Agreement even after 2017 and 2022.

[219] For non-class members, the Tribunal does not view the release as limiting liability for any discrimination that may occur subsequent to 2017 or 2022 should Canada fail to eliminate the systemic racial discrimination identified in this case and prevent the emergence of similar practices. Finally, the Revised Agreement cannot bar claims of discrimination in other federal programs or services.

[220] The Tribunal does not anticipate that its interpretation of the release differs from that of the parties. Further, the Tribunal clarifies that it has only considered the release from the perspective of the CHRA, not a civil or class action claim. The Tribunal intends its comments on the release to confirm what already appears obvious from the language of the release itself. This does not reflect hesitation on the Tribunal's part in finding that the Revised Agreement fully satisfies the Tribunal's compensation orders but the Tribunal's experience that it is often valuable to make wording abundantly clear. These comments should not cause the parties any hesitation in seeking the Federal Court's approval of the Revised Agreement.

[221] Second, the Tribunal finds that the Revised Agreement does not resolve the issue of long-term remedies, reform, eliminating the systemic discrimination found and preventing similar practices from recurring. Accordingly, this ruling does not address those issues.

F. Conclusion

[222] As explained above, the Tribunal finds that all categories of victims/survivors who were originally disentitled or had their entitlements reduced or who were not considered under the 2022 FSA have now been included in the Revised Settlement. This inclusion is done in a manner that fully accounts for the Tribunal's compensation orders on quantum, categories of victims/survivors and interest on compensation. The compensation will also be done in a manner that is culturally appropriate and safe for children and all victims/survivors and avoids having children testify. Therefore, the Tribunal finds the Revised Agreement fully satisfies all the Tribunal's compensation orders.

[223] As part of their submissions for this motion the Caring Society has described the Tribunal's approach in this case:

> Throughout this sacred and important case for First Nations children, youth and families, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal ("Tribunal") has focused on the human rights of First Nations children and youth, placing their right to substantive equality at the forefront of its analysis. The remedies ordered by the Tribunal acknowledge the egregious and harmful nature of the discrimination flowing from Canada's flawed and inequitable provision of child and family services and its discriminatory definition and approach to Jordan's Principle. The Tribunal awarded individual compensation to victims of Canada's wilful and reckless conduct to recognize the harm, trauma and victimization of First Nations children and families stemming from Canada's systemic violations of the Canadian Human Rights Act ("CHRA").

The Tribunal finds this is an appropriate characterization of the spirit of the Tribunal's compensation ruling.

[224] Further, the Tribunal emphasizes that its analysis has always placed the right of First Nations children and families to substantive equality at the forefront of all its rulings and orders including those related to Jordan's Principle, reform, cessation of the discriminatory practice and preventing it from reoccurring; and immediate, mid-term and long-term remedies. This continues to be the Tribunal's focus.

[225] Finally, the Panel looks forward to the next steps to be completed in this journey - namely complete reform; sustainable, long-term remedies for multiple generations to come; and the cessation of the discriminatory practice and the prevention of its reoccurrence.

G. Orders

Pursuant to section 53(2) of the CHRA, the Tribunal makes the following orders:

A) The Tribunal finds that the revised First Nations Child and Family Services, Jordan's Principle and Trout Class Settlement Agreement dated April 19, 2023, fully satisfies the Tribunal's Compensation Orders (2019 CHRT 39, 2020 CHRT 7, 2020 CHRT 15, 2021 CHRT 6, 2021 CHRT 7 and 2022 CHRT 41) in this proceeding;

B) The Tribunal finds that the Revised Agreement fully addresses the derogations identified by the Tribunal by providing full compensation to all those entitled further to the Tribunal's Compensation Orders, including: First Nations children removed from their homes, families and communities; First Nations caregiving parents/grandparents who experienced multiple First Nations children removed from their homes, families, and communities; and, First Nations children eligible for compensation due to denials, unreasonable delays, and gaps in essential services due to Canada's discriminatory approach to Jordan's Principle;

C) The Tribunal makes an order clarifying its order 2021 CHRT 7 further to the Compensation Framework, providing that together caregiving parents and caregiving grandparents will be limited to $80,000 in total compensation regardless of the number of sequential removals of the same child.

D) The Tribunal makes an order varying 2020 CHRT 7, providing that compensation of $40,000 plus applicable interest shall be paid directly to the child(ren) of the deceased parent/caregiving grandparent on a pro rata basis where the estate of that deceased parent/caregiving grandparent would otherwise be entitled to compensation under 2020 CHRT 7. Where there are no surviving children, the compensation will flow to the estate of the deceased parent/caregiving grandparent;

E) The Tribunal makes an order clarifying its order in 2019 CHRT 39, to confirm that caregiving parents (or caregiving grandparents) of Canada's discrimination towards Jordan's Principle victims/survivors must themselves have experienced the highest level of impact (including pain, suffering or harm of the worst kind) in order to receive compensation ($40,000 plus applicable interest) for their child's essential service denials, unreasonable delays and gaps;

F) The Tribunal makes an order finding that the claims process set out in the Revised Agreement and further measures to be developed by class counsel in consultation with experts (including the Caring Society) and approved by the Federal Court satisfies the requirements under the compensation framework as ordered in 2019 CHRT 39 and 2021 CHRT 7. This order supersedes the Tribunal's order in 2021 CHRT 7;

G) The Tribunal makes an order that, conditional upon the Federal Court's approval of the Revised Agreement, the Tribunal's jurisdiction over its Compensation Orders will end on the day that all appeal periods in relation to the Federal Court's approval of the Revised Agreement expire or, alternatively, on the day that any appeal(s) from the Federal Court's decision on the approval motion for the Revised Agreement are finally dismissed;

H) The Tribunal makes an order that the parties will report to the Tribunal, within 15 days of each of the following: (1) the result of the Federal Court's decision on approval of the Revised Agreement; (2) the expiry of the appeal period relating to the Federal Court's decision on the Revised Agreement or of an appeal having been commenced.

H. Retention of jurisdiction

This ruling does not affect the Panel's retention of jurisdiction on other issues and orders in this case other than as specified in A) and G). Consistent with the approach to remedies taken in this case, the Panel continues to retain jurisdiction on all its rulings and orders to ensure that they are effectively implemented and that systemic discrimination is eliminated.

The Panel will revisit its retention of jurisdiction once the parties have filed a final and complete agreement on long-term relief and reform, whether on consent or otherwise, that is found to be satisfactory by this Panel in eliminating the systemic discrimination found and preventing its reoccurrence or, after the adjudication of outstanding issues, if any, leading to final orders or, as the Panel sees fit considering the upcoming evolution of this case.

Settlement and Legal Fees Approval

[1] This class action about hidden foreign exchange fees on currency conversions in registered accounts has settled for $100 million. The plaintiffs seek judicial approval of the settlement agreement, class counsel's legal fees based on the 25 per cent contingent fee retainer and the payment of significant honoraria to the representative plaintiffs.

[2] For the reasons that follow, I approve the settlement agreement and the requested honoraria. I also approve a generous legal fees award but not on the basis of a straight-line application of a contingent fee percentage. In a large recovery or "mega" settlement such as we have here, the legal fees approved must take into account not only the risks incurred and results achieved but also the need to maintain the integrity of the legal profession.

Background

[3] The proposed class action against the BMO defendants for failing to disclose its foreign exchange mark-up in RRSP and other registered accounts was filed in 2006. The action was certified as a class proceeding seven years later in 2013.[1]

[4] The parties' motion for summary judgment on the common issues was heard and decided in 2020.[2] On the liability issues, I found that the BMO defendants were liable to the class over the 10-year class period for breach of trust, breach of fiduciary duty and breach of contract, and concluded that the appropriate remedy for the defendants' wrongdoing was an accounting and disgorgement of profits.[3]

[5] On damages, counsel agreed that the total amount of the impugned mark-up (excluding interest) was $102.9 million. Two issues had to be decided: (i) the profits realized on this amount after the deduction of 'reasonable and necessary expenses' and (ii) the appropriate "time value of money" or PJI amount.

[6] The defendants and their experts argued at the summary judgment motion that after the deduction of all reasonable and necessary expenses, the profit on the $102.9 million was about $38 million. Adding a simple PJI rate, the damages award would be about $52 million. The plaintiffs and their experts pushed for a much larger recovery based on an elevated measure of the time value of money. The class sought disgorgement of $420 million (based on the bank's internal rate of return) or $210 million (based on a typical rate of return on a balanced portfolio). If the court concluded that a simple PJI rate as prescribed by the Courts of Justice Act [4] was more appropriate, then the amount requested by class counsel was approximately $148 million.

[7] In the summary judgment decision, I directed that the 'reasonable and necessary expenses' (and hence the determination of the profits) would be decided on a reference and I concluded that the appropriate PJI rate would be the simple interest rate as set out in the legislation. I said this in my reasons for decision:

> The core finding is that the defendants' failure to disclose the amount of the markup fee charged on the foreign exchange conversions and the unauthorized self-payment are a breach of trust and fiduciary duty. The most appropriate remedy is an equitable accounting of the profits that were realized on the $102.9 million in undisclosed markup fees. There is no basis for an elevated interest award.
> The said profits, as well as the precise PJI amount, will be determined on the reference that will be conducted as soon as convenient. [5]

[8] Both sides filed notices of appeal. The defendants appealed primarily on the liability findings and the plaintiffs appealed on the time value of money issues and my "simple rate of interest" decision. Counsel on both sides, however, agreed to defer the appeals and first complete the reference as scheduled. Additional expert reports and factums were filed by both sides. The calculations in this additional material proceeded on the basis of my finding that a simple (and not elevated) PJI rate would be used. As class counsel explained in an affidavit filed on this motion for settlement approval:

> In terms of quantum, the defendants' position on the reference had not changed materially from summary judgment. They advanced a profit number of $37.6 million which, together with simple interest of 3.8% as per the Courts of Justice Act, resulted in a total of $52.4 million.
> The evidence of the class was that the defendants' profits were between $62 million and $97.8 million after accounting for the statute-barred amounts. Adding prejudgment interest under the Courts of Justice Act, the total recovery for the class would be between approximately $100 million and $145 million.

[5] MacDonald, supra, note 2, at paras. 102-103.

[9] Just days before I was to hear the reference, counsel advised that they had reached a settlement. After 15 years of litigation (12 years if you deduct the three-year stay[6]) the parties agreed to settle this action for a non-reversionary, all-inclusive sum of $100 million.

The settlement

[10] The settlement agreement provides for a speedy, no-claim process that will distribute the funds to some 135,000 class members. An accounting firm (Deloitte) will calculate each class member's entitlement based on the foreign currency transactions in their registered accounts. The defendants will distribute the funds directly to the class members on a pro-rata basis (subject to a $25 minimum threshold) either by direct deposit if the class member still has an account with the defendants or by cheque mailed to the class member.

[11] Because the distribution costs are $12 to $23 per class member, the parties agreed that payments will be made only if they exceed a $25 threshold. The defendants estimate that this $25 minimum (as well as any cheques that are returned uncashed) will mean that approximately $380,000 will not be distributed to class members and must therefore go cy-pres. The parties have agreed that the first $250,000 in cy-pres will be paid to the Class Action Clinic at the University of Windsor and the second $250,000 to the United Way of Canada which funds financial literacy programs across the country.

[12] The settlement agreement also provides that in addition to the $100 million settlement fund, the defendants will pay the costs of notice, administration, and distribution. All class member payments paid by direct deposit (estimated to be 41 per cent of the payments) will be completed within 90 days of settlement approval and reasonable efforts will be made to ensure that payments paid by cheque will be completed within 150 days of settlement approval.

Settlement approval

[13] As I advised counsel at the hearing, this settlement is easily approved.

[6] The parties agreed to stay the action until another proceeding commenced by other counsel, Skopit v. BMO Nesbitt Burns Inc., was decided. As it turned out, the Skopit action settled for a much smaller amount but the waiting time added three years to this action.

[14] The $100 million settlement amount is well within the required zone of reasonableness[7] — recall that the amount in dispute (with PJI included) ranged from a low of $52.4 million to a high of $145 million. The $100 million settlement amount is almost exactly in the middle.

[15] Add to this the fact that the action settled just a few days before the scheduled reference to determine the "profits" on the impugned $102.9 million in revenues. As the designated referee, I had already reviewed the expert reports and counsels' written submissions about 'reasonable and necessary expenses' and the appropriate 'profits' award and had a good understanding of what might be awarded. I can therefore advise the parties with a reasonable degree of confidence that the $100 million settlement amount (which arguably consists of about $64 million in principal and $36 million in simple PJI) is indeed fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class.

[16] The settlement is approved. Kudos again to both sides for achieving a reasonable resolution to such a long and hard-fought litigation.

Legal fees approval

[17] This is the issue that consumed most of the time at the hearing and that prompted several follow-up written submissions.

[18] The retainer agreement provides that class counsel (Paliare Roland Rosenberg Rothstein LLP) will be paid a contingency fee of 25 per cent of recovery (plus disbursements and taxes) and 10 per cent of any amount in excess of $500 million. The action settled for $100 million. Class counsel docketed $5.5 million in unbilled time and ended up carrying just under $900,000 in disbursements. They ask that the court approve the agreed-to $25 million in legal fees (plus disbursements and taxes).

[19] The applicable law is not in dispute. Under ss. 32 and 33 of the Class Proceedings Act,[8] class counsel's fee agreement must be judicially approved. The court will approve the fee agreement if it is "fair and reasonable."[9] If the agreement is not approved, then under s. 32(4)(a), the court may determine the appropriate amount.

[20] There is no question that class counsel have earned a premium legal fee well in excess of the $5.5 million in docketed time. This class action was truly self-made. It did not piggy-back on parallel U.S. proceedings; it did not use product recalls, corporate guilty pleas or government studies as a spring-board. Mr. MacDonald, the lead plaintiff, discovered a problem with the defendant's foreign currency conversion methods and retained class counsel. Class counsel embarked on a hard-fought 15-year litigation that involved a difficult summary judgment motion and an unexpected accounting reference and, as already noted, ended with a very fair and reasonable settlement.

[21] The issue is the determination of the appropriate legal fee. As I reminded counsel during the hearing, the straight-line application of the agreed-to contingency fee percentage — the "presumed validity" approach that I adopted in Cannon[10] and refined in Brown[11] — works well for most class action settlement amounts that average under $40 million but is not appropriate in large, "mega fund" settlements that are in the $100 million range or higher. As I noted in Brown:

> In Cannon, I embraced the percentage of the fund approach and accorded presumptive validity to the percentage that was agreed to in the contingent fee retainer agreement (up to one third) if certain conditions were satisfied … the risk incurred by class action lawyers, like personal injury lawyers, was best measured by the wins and losses in many cases over many years and not just by the specific case that was before the court. I was comfortable doing this because almost all of the settlements were under $40 million (i.e. they were not mega-fund cases) and there was rarely, if ever, any direct evidence in the record that the straight-forward application of the percentage approach resulted in legal fees that were excessive or otherwise unreasonable.[12]

[12] Ibid., at para. 46.

[22] A straight-line application of the contingency fee percentage in mega-settlements can result in undeserved windfalls and transform class action litigation into something approaching a lottery. Here is how I put it in Brown:

> It is of course important to incentivize class action lawyers to take on risky actions on a contingent fee basis and do them well. However, it is also important that the court's approval of class counsel's legal fees not result in windfalls …
> Mega-fund cases are rare and when they settle, and almost all of them settle, the size of the settlement fund can be in the hundreds of millions of dollars. A percentage of the fund approach, given economies of scale, will result in windfalls. Windfalls should be avoided because class action litigation is not a lottery and the CPA was not enacted to make lawyers wealthy.[13]

[23] My suggestion in Brown that Cannon should not be used where the recovery is more than $50 million was not intended as an automatic cut-off or "bright line" — indeed in Manulife Financial[14] I approved a 22.5 per cent contingency on a $69 million settlement. And here, as I freely admitted to class counsel during the hearing, I would have approved a 25 per cent contingency fee on say a $64 million settlement (which is arguably the core settlement amount minus PJI).

[24] Here, however, we have a $100 million settlement and a request for $25 million in legal fees.[15]

[25] The concern is the 9-digit size of the settlement and the need to ensure that the approval of legal fees in these so-called mega-settlements remains as principled as possible and not result in undeserved and unseemly windfalls. Because Cannon should not be used in mega-settlements, one must revert to the case-by-case approach and determine the fair and reasonable legal fee by considering the applicable law and comparable decisions.

[14] Ironworkers Ontario Pension Fund v. Manulife Financial Corp., 2017 ONSC 2669.

[15] At the hearing, class counsel reduced their request to $23 million and in their final written submission suggested that the approved legal fees should be "over $20 million."

[26] Although a wide range of factors may be considered,[16] the case law makes clear that the most important factors in determining whether the requested legal fee is fair and reasonable are the risks incurred and the results achieved[17] and also "whether the fee fixed by the agreement is reasonable and maintains the integrity of the profession".[18]

[27] It is the concern about the integrity of the profession that may best explain judicial approval of premium legal fees in mega-settlements. The concern about the integrity of the profession is said to be a concern about the "decency, honour and high-mindedness of the profession, both in substance and in public perception."[19] And the approval of straight-line percentages in mega-settlements resulting in undeserved or unseemly legal fees will obviously not maintain "the integrity of the profession."[20]

[28] It is therefore not surprising that the court's primary focus in mega-settlements is the actual dollar amount of the approved legal fee, not percentages or multipliers.[21] It is one thing to approve a $8 million legal fee (say 20 per cent of a $40 million settlement). It is quite another to approve a $50 million fee (20 per cent of a $250 million settlement).[22] The former is still a large number to be sure, but easier to explain and [16] The list of factors that judges may consider when assessing whether the legal fees request is fair and reasonable are lengthy and include (a) the time spent and work done; (b) the factual and legal complexities; (c) the risk undertaken; (d) the degree of responsibility assumed by class counsel; (e) the monetary value of the matters in issue; (f) the importance of the matter to the class; (g) the degree of skill and competence demonstrated by class counsel; (h) the results achieved; (i) the ability of the class to pay; (j) the expectations of the class as to the amount of the fees; and (k) the opportunity cost to class counsel in the expenditure of time in pursuit of the litigation and settlement. See Smith v. National Money Mart, 2010 ONSC 1334, varied 2011 ONCA 233; Fischer v. I.G. Investment Management Ltd., [2010] O.J. No. 5649 at para. 28 (S.C.J.).

[20] No judge would ever approve (and to their credit, no class counsel has ever asked for) a 25 per cent contingency fee on say a $1 billion settlement.

[22] Especially when the size of the "mega" recovery is more attributable to the happenstance of a large class size than to any corresponding assumption of risk or increase in effort on the part of class counsel.

justify in terms of risks incurred and results achieved than the latter which is more akin to a lottery win.

[29] It is evident from a survey of the mega-settlement decisions that the judge's approval of class counsel's legal fees, although certainly driven by an analysis of risks and results, is ultimately determined with an eye on the final dollar amount. The approved dollar amount is kept within appropriate bounds by using multipliers and fee/recovery ratios or percentages as cross-checks and guard-rails.

[30] This is particularly apparent in the billion-dollar settlements where legal fees ranging from $25 million to $50 million have been judicially approved. For example:

- Endean v. Canadian Red Cross Society[23] - $1.6 billion settlement in the Hepatitis C class action – court approved $52.5 million in legal fees – court noted involvement of multiple law firms in various provinces – and that the legal fees were 4.26 per cent of the recovery.

- Baxter v. Canada (Attorney General)[24] - $1.9 billion settlement in the Residential Schools class action – court approved $40 million in legal fees for the "national consortium" of class counsel and noted that the approved legal fees reflected a 2.73 multiplier (that is 2.73 times the docketed time).

- Manuge v. Canada[25] - $887 million settlement in the veterans' pension class action – court approved $35.5 million in legal fees and noted that the approved legal fees were 4 per cent of recovery.

- Brown v. Canada[26] - $800 million settlement in the "Sixties Scoop" class action – I would have awarded class counsel in the Brown side of the litigation (who had literally "bet the firm" and whose efforts were extraordinary in every respect) a maximum legal fee of $25 million –which amounts to about 6 per cent of the recovery.[27]

[27] Assuming that one-half of the $800 million settlement can be attributed to counsel in Brown, the resulting fee/recovery percentage would be 25/400 or just over 6 per cent. As it turned out, the final payment to class counsel

- Quenneville v. Volkswagen[28] - $2.1 billion settlement in the Volkswagen "defeat device" class action - consortium of 8 law firms sought $65 million in legal fees – agreed to accept $31.2 million plus disbursements and taxes – which I approved.

- McLean v. Canada (Attorney General)[29] - $2 billion settlement of the Indian Day Schools class action – court approved $55 million in legal fees – noted docketed time of $10 million – and that "legal fees will be in the 3% range."[30]

[31] For settlements in the billion-dollar-plus range, Canadian courts have approved legal fee amounts of $25 million to $50 million. As here, each of these class actions were hard-fought, multi-year lawsuits that generated a significant level of docketed time and, in the end, resulted in a good settlement. In addition to assessing the risks and results, the court also considered the number of law firms involved, sometimes used a multiplier on the docketed time as a cross-check, and almost always expressed the final dollar amount in terms of a fee/recovery percentage with the objective of staying within an acceptable 4 per cent.

[32] The lesson from legal fee approvals in the billion-dollar settlements — one that also applies to this $100 million settlement — is two-fold: (i) keep an eye on the actual dollar amount; and (ii) explain and justify the approved legal fee in a principled fashion that is consistent with comparable caselaw.

[33] In the billion-dollar settlements, judges have achieved an admirable level of consistency by using the fee/recovery ratio and concluding that a 3 to 5 percentage was acceptable. I do not suggest that the legal fees herein should be limited to 4 percent of recovery or $4 million. The docketed time alone was more than $5 million. And, as already noted, I would have approved $16 million in legal fees on a $64 million recovery by extending my approach in Cannon. And probably even $18 million on a $72 million recovery, given the length of the litigation, the docketed time and the commendable resolution. But as the billion-dollar decisions clearly show, nine or ten-digit settlements and legal fee requests of $25 million or more take judges into a very different comfort zone.

was higher than the suggested maximum of $25 million because of an unexpected decision from my Federal Court counterpart: see Brown v. Canada (Attorney General) 2018 ONSC 5456, at paras. 18-20.

[30] Ibid., at para. 54.

[34] What about mega-settlements in the $100 million range? These, of course, are more directly relevant. There are two comparable cases:

- CIBC v. Deloitte & Touche[31]– $122 million settlement of an auditor's negligence class action – the second stage of the litigation proceeded on the basis of a contingency fee agreement which provided for "two times docketed time" plus disbursements and taxes – Perell J. approved $22 million in legal fees based on the agreed 2.0 multiplier.

- Drywall Acoustic Lathing and Insulation Local 675 Pension Fund (Trustees of) SNC-Lavalin Group Inc.[32] – $110 million settlement of a securities class action – Perell J. approved $23.25 million in legal fees for Ontario class counsel, noting docketed time of $9.1 million and the corresponding 2.54 multiplier.

[35] As I read these decisions (admittedly a small sample), a $100 million settlement can result in approved legal fees of $20 million where they reflect 2 or 2½ times the docketed time.

[36] Here however, as already noted, class counsel docketed $5.5 million in time and at the end were carrying just under $900,000 in disbursements. A 2.5 multiplier would allow $13.75 million in fees. A 3.0 multiplier would allow $16.5 million in fees. The 4.0 multiplier, reserved for "the most deserving case"[33] and used by me in Brown, would result in $22 million in legal fees. However, this is not Brown where a tiny law firm risked its very survival and where I concluded that the use of the highest multiplier as a cross-check was fully justified.[34]

[37] In any event, as I have made clear in other decisions, I am not a fan of multipliers. I agree with the observation of a Federal Court colleague that in the context of mega-settlements, "the use of percentages and multipliers to assess class action legal fees is appropriate, but mainly to test their reasonableness and not to determine absolute entitlement."[35] In other words, their value is mainly in their use as cross-checks and guard-rails.

[33] See the Court of Appeal's direction in Gagne v. Silcorp (1998), 41 O.R. (3d) 417 (C.A.) at 425: that if a multiplier is used, the range of the appropriate multiplier is from "slightly greater than one to three or four in the most deserving case."

[38] Having examined the applicable caselaw, I come to the following conclusion: on a $100 million settlement, such as here, where the risks incurred by class counsel were real but not remarkable (more on this below), with about $5.5 million in docketed time, the upper bounds of a fair and reasonable legal fees award is at most $20 million.

[39] The question is this: given that I would have approved $16 million in legal fees on a $64 million recovery, and possibly even $18 million on a $72 million recovery, should any additional amount should be awarded to class counsel for achieving a $100 million recovery? Is there anything in the "risks incurred" or "results achieved" analysis that is particularly noteworthy and would move the legal fees needle closer to $20 million?

Risks incurred

[40] As discussed in Brown,[36] the primary risk incurred by class action is the risk of non-payment — that after many years of effort, several million dollars in docketed time and sizeable disbursements the action will fail, nothing will be recovered and class counsel will not be paid.[37] Most judges understand that it is the actual "impact"[38] of the non-payment that explains why the risk of non-payment is rewarded with a legal fee premium. A British Columbia judge put it best:

> It is well-recognized that when counsel assume a significant risk of not being paid, they are entitled to fees that exceed what would otherwise be reasonable when they succeed. The real risk of failure with personal consequences to counsel cannot be ignored. An enhanced fee is appropriate.[39]

counsel had "bet the firm", I would have approved $25 million in legal fees on a $400 million recovery. I hasten to add that class action litigation should not be about betting the firm — my point is simply that if "risk incurred" is to be a meaningful analytical tool, judges must go beyond a formulaic recitation of the well-known catalogue of "risks" (such as, for example, the risk of losing the certification motion) and assess the nature and extent of the actual financial impact on the particular class counsel firm.[40]

[42] Here, however, class counsel presented no hard evidence in this regard. Or even evidence that their firm was obliged to turn away paying retainers in order to conduct this litigation. They simply repeated the familiar menu of "risks" without any demonstration of actual financial impact on them or their firm.[41]

[43] Class counsel also resisted what I thought was a self-evident observation — that third-party funding should be a relevant factor in the "risks incurred" analysis. Here, class counsel had arranged for the Class Proceedings Fund to cover the risk of adverse cost awards and agreed to the CPF's usual 10 per cent levy. Given that no class action will ever proceed without a cost indemnity for the representative plaintiff,[42] class counsel will typically assume the adverse costs risk themselves or secure third-party funding. If the latter is arranged, the levy or price charged for this particular type of 'insurance policy' is routinely paid out of the settlement funds and not out of class counsel's legal fees.[43]

[44] In my view, it is time to acknowledge that third-party funding should be considered in the "risks incurred" analysis. Indeed, the amended CPA explicitly requires [40] It was the unworkability of the conventional approach to risk analysis in the context of "every day" settlements that compelled me to replace the "case by case" approach with the broader and more principled approach set out in Cannon and refined in Brown.

[41] Risk is best understood in terms of individualized impact. For example, an 80 per cent risk of rain (should it materialize) will have little if any impact on an indoor-wedding but enormous impact on an outdoor event. The risk that $1 million of docketed time will not be recovered will obviously have less of an impact in a large law firm than in a two-person law office.

[42] As Strathy J. noted in Dugal v. Manulife, 2011 ONSC 1785 at para. 28: "No rational person would risk an adverse costs award of several million dollars to recover several thousand dollars or even several tens of thousands of dollars."

[43] Private sector funders typically charge 7 to 8 per cent of recovery; the CPF levy is 10 per cent.

it.[44] However, I concede that it may be unfair to impose this metric retroactively on a class action that probably began under a different expectation 15 years ago.

[45] In any event, I conclude that there is nothing particularly noteworthy in the "risks incurred" by class counsel in this matter that would move the legal fee needle from the $16 or $18 million level to the $20 million level.

Results achieved

[46] Nor is there anything in the "results achieved" assessment that would do the same.

[47] I agree that class counsel achieved a good result. I also agree that even in the stratosphere of nine or ten-digit mega-settlements, large recoveries should be rewarded with appropriately commensurate legal fees.[45] Indeed, we saw this in our review of the billion-dollar settlements where fees in the range of $25 million to $50 million were judicially approved.

[48] My concern in this case is the sizeable PJI component and the extent to which this should figure in the "results achieved" analysis. It is beyond dispute that this litigation was propelled from the outset with a clear understanding that "the time value of money" would be a significant ingredient in the compensation calculation. This was evident from the statement of claim, the submissions on the summary judgment motion and the accounting reference, the terms of settlement and the settlement agreement itself.

[49] If part of the $100 million settlement includes PJI (perhaps as much as $36 million) should not the "results achieved" be adjusted to accommodate this reality? For example, if only $64 million was actually recovered by class counsel's efforts and the rest simply by the passage of time and the application of a legislatively prescribed interest rate, should this not be relevant in the determination of "fair and reasonable" legal fees?

[50] Here, it is reasonably arguable that at least $30 million of the $100 million was PJI and that the $18 million legal fee that would probably have been awarded on a $72

[44] Section 32(2.2) of the amended CPA, S.O. 2020, c. 11, Sched. 4 (which applies to proposed class proceedings filed after October 1, 2020) provides that "the court shall consider …. (c) the existence of any funding arrangement that affected the degree of risk assumed by the solicitor in providing representation."

[45] As the B.C. court noted in Endean, supra, note 23, at para. 80: "A reasonable fee should bear an appropriate relationship to the amount recovered."

million settlement is already fair and reasonable and needs no further enhancement. However, it can also be noted, from a class member's perspective, that class counsel recovered almost the entirety of the $102.9 million amount in dispute, full stop.

[51] The upshot of the "risks incurred" and "results achieved" analysis is this: the most this court can justify and explain in a principled fashion consistent with comparable caselaw is a legal fees award that falls within a range of $18 million to $20 million. The right number may well be around $19 million.

[52] However, given that this was a truly self-made class action that consumed 15 years of litigation, 10,000 hours in docketed time and resulted in a genuinely commendable settlement, I am prepared to err on the side of caution and in favour of class counsel.

[53] This court approves $20 million for legal fees, plus disbursements and taxes.

Honoraria approval

[54] Class counsel asks for judicial approval of honoraria totalling $70,000 for the representative plaintiffs — $50,000 to Mr. MacDonald, $10,000 to Mr. and Mrs. Zopas together, and $10,000 to Mr. Halasz. Class counsel have filed detailed evidence describing their specific contributions.

[55] As a general rule, representative plaintiffs do not receive additional compensation for simply doing their job as class representatives. It is only where they can demonstrate a level of involvement and effort that goes beyond what is normally expected and is truly extraordinary, or where there is evidence that they were financially harmed because of their role as class representative that a significant honorarium will be justified.[46]

[56] Here, I am persuaded on the evidence that a performance honorarium at a level of $10,000 is justified for Mr. MacDonald and for Mr. and Mrs. Zopas because of their extraordinary level of dedication and commitment over a long and difficult 15-year litigation. The same can be said about Mr. Halasz although he only joined the action as a representative plaintiff in 2017. I note, however, his level of contribution and the fact that he lives in Ottawa and had to take personal time off work from his job at the National Research Council to attend in Toronto for cross-examinations and participate in a mediation. The requested honorarium is justified.

[57] Mr. MacDonald deserves more than just a performance honorarium. He is entitled to the additional $40,000 because of the financial harm he sustained as the lead plaintiff in what became a high-profile class action in the banking community. His employment as an investment advisor became strained and he had to leave the industry well before his retirement age. Comparable employment was hard to find. Mr. MacDonald eventually obtained a contract position teaching banking and finance courses at a local community college. However, his income today is much less than when he worked as an investment advisor. And, as Mr. MacDonald noted in his affidavit, the repercussions from this class action continue to be felt: "I … worry that the publicity associated with the action has and may continue to have a negative impact on my future career prospects."

[58] I therefore have no difficulty concluding that Mr. MacDonald suffered significant financial hardship in taking on the role and responsibilities of the lead representative plaintiff. The request for a $50,000 honorarium is more than justified.

[59] Each of the requested honoraria is approved.

Disposition

[60] The settlement is approved. As are class counsel's legal fees in the amount of $20 million, plus disbursements and taxes, and the requested honoraria.

[61] Orders to go accordingly.

[62] My thanks again to all counsel for their assistance. I am particularly grateful to Mr. Eizenga, who represented class counsel on the legal fees issue, for his submissions and insights.

Signed: Justice Edward P. Belobaba

This was a motion by the parties under rule 334.29 of the Federal Courts Rules seeking approval for their negotiated settlement of the class action taken with respect to the Service Income Security Insurance Plan Long Term d isability (SISIP LTd) policy. This action was allowed to proceed as a class action and it challenged, in particular, the defendant's practice of deducting monthly Pension Act disability benefits from the LTd income payable to disabled class members. It was determined that the defendant's interpretation of the applicable SISIP LTd policy and its practice were unlawful. That determination was not appealed and the parties negotiated to work out the financial implications of the judgment rendered. Counsel for the class also sought approval for their claim to legal fees under rule 334.4 of the Rules payable from the proceeds of the proposed settlement but this claim was opposed by the defendant's counsel on the ground that the proposed amount of legal fees was excessive.

Il s'agissait d'une requête des parties présentée au titre de la règle 334.29 des Règles des Cours fédérales par laquelle les parties sollicitaient l'approbation de leur règlement négocié quant au recours collectif concernant la police d'assurance invalidité prolongée (a IP) applicable du Régime d'assurance revenu militaire (Ra RM). L'autorisation a été donnée de poursuivre cette action comme recours collectif; celui-ci contestait, en particulier, la pratique de la défenderesse de déduire les prestations d'invalidité mensuelles versées aux membres du groupe atteints d'une invalidité au titre de la Loi sur les pensions des sommes qui leur sont versées à titre d'a IP. Il a été décidé que la manière dont la défenderesse interprétait l'a IP applicable du Ra RM et sa pratique étaient illégales. a ucun appel n'a été interjeté à l'égard de cette décision, et les parties ont entrepris des négociations en vue de régler les questions liées aux incidences financières du jugement rendu. Les avocats du groupe ont aussi demandé l'approbation de la Cour, au titre de la règle 334.4 des Règles, pour que leurs honoraires soient prélevés à même les sommes recouvrées au titre du règlement proposé, mais les avocats de

The value of the financial settlement in question was estimated at more than $887 million which included the net present value of monies payable in the future to disabled class members. Similar offsets of Pension Act benefits from a number of other federal financial support programs were removed. The central component of the proposed settlement was the full recovery by approximately 7 500 class members or their families of all amounts unlawfully deducted or which would otherwise have been deducted in the future from their SISIP LTd income. a lso negotiated were reasonable rates for pre- and post-judgment interest, the establishment of a $10 million bursary fund that could be accessed by class members and their families and a streamlined process for administering the payment of refunds and for resolving future claim disagreements.

The principal issue was whether the class action settlement should be approved. The appropriate amount of legal fees claimed by counsel for the class also had to be determined.

Held, the class action settlement should be approved and the legal fees claimed by counsel for the class granted in accordance with the reasons for order.

The vast majority of submissions made by class members expressed strong approval of the terms of settlement including the claim to legal costs. The overwhelming tone of the submissions to the Court was complimentary to the plaintiff and to his legal team and strongly supportive of the settlement. Based on this support, it could satisfactorily be said that the settlement was viewed very favourably by almost all class beneficiaries.

The criticism that the settlement ought to have imposed upon the government an indemnity obligation for legal costs failed to recognize that, in the Federal Court, legal costs are not, except in exceptional circumstances, payable by either party to a class proceeding regardless of the outcome pursuant to rule 334.39 of the Rules. In the absence of any provision in the Rules for the separate payment of costs, it was not unreasonable for the parties to negotiate a settlement that provided for legal costs to be borne out of the settlement proceeds.

La valeur du règlement pécuniaire en question a été estimée à plus de 887 millions de dollars, un chiffre qui comprend la valeur actualisée nette des montants qui seront versés aux membres du groupe qui ont une invalidité. d e plus, la défenderesse a mis fin à la déduction des prestations versées au titre de la Loi sur les pensions des sommes versées au titre d'un certain nombre d'autres programmes fédéraux de soutien financier. L'élément central du règlement proposé était le recouvrement intégral, par les 7 500 membres du groupe ou par leur famille, des montants qui ont illégalement été déduits ou qui auraient autrement été déduits à l'avenir de leur revenu d'a IP du Ra RM. Par ailleurs, les parties ont négocié des taux raisonnables en ce qui a trait aux intérêts avant et après jugement, à la création d'un fonds de perfectionnement de 10 millions de dollars auquel les membres du groupe et leur famille pourront avoir accès et à un processus simplifié quant à la gestion du paiement des remboursements et quant au règlement des différends possibles à l'égard des réclamations.

Il s'agissait principalement de savoir si le règlement de recours collectif devait être approuvé. Le montant approprié des honoraires des avocats du groupe devait également être déterminé.

Jugement : Le règlement de recours collectif doit être approuvé et les honoraires des avocats du groupe doivent être accordés en conformité avec les motifs de l'ordonnance.

La grande majorité des observations des membres du recours collectif exprimaient leur forte approbation envers les modalités du règlement, y compris quant à la réclamation relative aux honoraires. Les observations formulées à la Cour consistaient, en très grande majorité, en des compliments envers le demandeur et son équipe d'avocats ainsi qu'en un fort appui envers le règlement. Compte tenu de cet appui, on peut raisonnablement dire que le règlement était perçu de manière très favorable par presque tous les bénéficiaires du groupe.

La critique selon laquelle le règlement aurait dû imposer au gouvernement une obligation d'indemniser eu égard aux dépens ne tient pas compte du fait que, sauf dans des circonstances exceptionnelles, la Cour fédérale n'adjuge les dépens à ni l'une ni l'autre des parties dans le contexte d'un recours collectif, et ce, peu importe l'issue du recours, conformément à la règle 334.39 des Règles. Vu que les Règles ne contiennent pas de dispositions prévoyant que les dépens peuvent être payés séparément, il n'était pas déraisonnable de la part des parties de négocier un règlement portant que les dépens pouvaient être intégrés au produit du règlement.

n otwithstanding some expressed concerns by a few class members, the proposed settlement of this action was approved. It was a generous, complete and thoughtful resolution of the issues that were raised in the litigation and would provide substantial financial assistance to thousands of disabled Canadian Forces (CF) veterans and their families. The terms of settlement were also the product of extensive negotiations between the parties and it would not serve the interests of the vast majority of class members to send the parties back into further discussions to address the concerns of a handful of those who opposed the arrangement. In short, it represented a fair and reasonable compromise that was in the best interests of the class as a whole.

a s for the claim by class counsel to legal costs, it was left to the Court under rule 334.4 to determine the appropriate amount thereof. Rule 334.4 requires that legal fees payable to class counsel must be fair and reasonable. In determining what is fair and reasonable, the Court had to look at a number of factors including the results achieved, the extent of the risk assumed by class counsel, the amount of professional time actually incurred, the causal link between the legal effort and the results obtained, the quality of the representation, the complexity of the issues raised by the litigation, the character and importance of the litigation, and the fees approved in comparable cases.

The high quality of the legal work performed by class counsel led to the favourable liability outcome. The litigation risk assumed by class counsel was substantial and almost certainly exceeded the tolerance level of others, a factor that favoured premium costs recovery. The evidence showed that the law firms retained on behalf of the class worked for more than 6 years and amassed more than 8 500 hours of unbilled time. The settlement of the class would provide meaningful compensation for several thousand deserving CF veterans, a factor that favoured the award of a costs premium to class counsel. The public interest in this case was more properly situated around the interests of the class than the supposed interest of the general public in controlling compensation for lawyers engaged in class litigation.

While a contingency fee agreement entered into between legal counsel and a representative plaintiff in a proposed class proceeding may be relevant and sometimes a compelling consideration in the final assessment of legal fees, such a fee agreement will not necessarily be a primary consideration because it is most often executed at an early point in time when very little is known about how the litigation will unfold. The contingency fee agreement that was executed by the plaintiff

Malgré les réserves exprimées par quelques membres du groupe, le règlement proposé relativement à la présente action a été approuvé. Il constituait une solution généreuse, exhaustive et réfléchie aux questions qui ont été soulevées au cours du litige, et il fournirait une aide financière substantielle aux milliers d'anciens combattants des Forces canadiennes (FC) ayant une invalidité et à leur famille. Les modalités du règlement étaient aussi le produit de longues négociations entre les parties et il ne servirait pas les intérêts de la grande majorité des membres du groupe de renvoyer les parties à la table de négociations pour qu'elles traitent des réserves exprimées par une poignée de personnes qui s'opposent à l'accord. Bref, le règlement constituait un compromis juste et raisonnable qui était dans les meilleurs intérêts du groupe dans son ensemble.

Quant aux honoraires demandés par les avocats du groupe, il appartenait à la Cour, en application de la règle 334.4, de déterminer le montant approprié de ces honoraires. La règle 334.4 exige que les honoraires accordés aux avocats du groupe soient justes et raisonnables. Lorsque la Cour a été appelée à déterminer ce qui est juste et raisonnable, elle a dû examiner un certain nombre de facteurs, y compris les résultats obtenus, l'étendue du risque assumé par les avocats du groupe, la quantité d'heures de travail effectivement consacrées au litige, le lien de causalité entre les efforts déployés par les avocats et le résultat obtenu, la qualité de la représentation, la complexité des questions soulevées par le litige, la nature et l'importance du litige et les honoraires approuvés dans des affaires comparables.

La grande qualité du travail juridique effectué par les avocats du groupe a conduit au résultat favorable. Le risque assumé par les avocats du groupe en lien avec le litige était important et excédait presque assurément le degré de tolérance d'autres confrères, un facteur militant en faveur d'une majoration des frais recouvrés. La preuve a révélé que les cabinets d'avocats retenus pour le compte du groupe ont travaillé plus de 6 ans au recours collectif et qu'ils ont investi plus de 8 500 heures de travail non facturé. Le règlement du présent recours collectif conférera une indemnisation digne de ce nom à plusieurs milliers d'anciens combattants des FC, un facteur qui milite en faveur de l'octroi de dépens majorés aux avocats du groupe. L'intérêt public en l'espèce s'articulait plutôt autour des intérêts du groupe que de l'intérêt général prétendu de la population à garder sous contrôle la compensation offerte aux avocats ayant participé au recours collectif.

Bien qu'une convention d'honoraires conditionnels conclue entre les avocats et un représentant demandeur dans le contexte d'un recours collectif projeté puisse être pertinente et qu'elle puisse parfois être une considération déterminante lors de l'examen définitif concernant les honoraires, une telle convention d'honoraires ne sera pas nécessairement une considération principale parce que celle-ci est plus souvent signée à un stade précoce de l'affaire, où on en sait fort peu

g iven all the factors considered in this case, legal fees in an amount equal to 8 percent of the retroactive refunds payable to class beneficiaries were approved. The recovery of legal costs herein was in keeping with the fees approved in comparable cases and represented a sufficient incentive to counsel to take on high-risk litigation without unduly impacting on the much-needed recoveries of disabled CF veterans.

sur son déroulement futur. La convention d'honoraires conditionnels qui a été signée par le demandeur n'était pas réellement importante dans le contexte du présent examen parce que le demandeur et les avocats du groupe ont essentiellement renoncé à cette convention.

Compte tenu de tous les facteurs exposés en l'espèce, des honoraires d'un montant correspondant à 8 p. 100 des remboursements rétroactifs qui seront versés aux prestataires du groupe ont été approuvés. Le recouvrement des honoraires décrit en l'espèce était conforme aux honoraires approuvés dans des affaires comparables et représentait un incitatif adéquat pour les avocats afin qu'ils acceptent des mandats relatifs à des recours collectifs à haut risque, sans pour autant avoir une incidence indue sur les sommes recouvrées par les anciens combattants des FC, dont ceux-ci avaient grand besoin.

The following are the reasons for order and order rendered in English by

[1] Barnes J.: This proceeding was initiated by statement of claim filed on March 15, 2007. In mid-February 2008, a motion to certify the proceeding as a class action was argued before me at Halifax, n ova Scotia and by a decision rendered on May 20, 2008, I certified the proceeding as a class action: see Manuge v. Canada, 2008 FC 624, [2009] 1 F.C.R. 416. That decision was appealed by the defendant and on February 3, 2009 the Federal Court of a ppeal set aside my certification order: see Canada v. Manuge, 2009 FCa 29, [2009] 4 F.C.R. 478. That decision was further appealed by the plaintiff, d ennis Manuge, to the Supreme Court of Canada and on d ecember 23, 2010 that Court, by unanimous decision, restored my order thereby allowing the action to Re Qu ÊTe présentée au titre de la règle 334.29 des Règles des Cours fédérales par laquelle les parties sollicitaient l'approbation de leur règlement négocié quant au recours collectif concernant la police d'assurance invalidité prolongée (a IP) applicable du Régime d'assurance revenu militaire (Ra RM) et par laquelle les avocats du groupe demandaient l'approbation de leurs honoraires au titre de la règle 334.4 des Règles. Le règlement de recours collectif a été approuvé et les honoraires ont été accordés conformément aux motifs de l'ordonnance.

Voici les motifs de l'ordonnance et l'ordonnance rendus en français par

proceed as a class action: see Manuge v. Canada, 2010 SCC 67, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 672.

[2] To their credit, the parties then jointly proposed to bring an issue of law before the Court for summary determination. That matter was argued before me at Halifax and by decision rendered on May 1, 2012, I determined that the defendant's interpretation of the applicable Service Income Security Insurance Plan Long Term d isability (SISIP LTd) policy and that, in particular, the practice of deducting monthly Pension Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. P-6, disability benefits from the LTd income payable to disabled class members was unlawful: see Manuge v. Canada, 2012 FC 499, [2013] 4 F.C.R. 647. That determination was not appealed and the parties undertook extensive negotiations with a view to working out the financial implications of my judgment.

[3] These reasons are issued in connection with a motion by the parties under rule 334.29 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 (Rules) seeking Court approval for their negotiated settlement of this class action. Counsel for the class also seek Court approval for their claim to legal fees under rule 334.4 payable from the proceeds of the proposed settlement. That claim is opposed by counsel for the defendant on the ground that the proposed amount of legal fees is excessive.

g eneral Principles a pplicable to Class a ction Settlements

[4] Court approval of a class action settlement is appropriate where, in the overall circumstances, it is deemed to be fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole: see Bodnar v. Cash Store Inc., 2010 BCSC 145, 84 C.P.C. (6th) 49, at paragraph 17. In Châteauneuf v. Canada, 2006 FC 286, 54 C.C.P.B. 47, décision unanime rendue le 23 décembre 2010, a rétabli mon ordonnance, ce qui permettait que l'action soit poursuivie comme recours collectif : voir Manuge c. Canada, 2010 CSC 67, [2010] 3 R.C.S. 672.

[2] Les parties, et cela est tout à leur honneur, ont ensuite conjointement proposé de présenter une question de droit à la Cour, en vue d'obtenir un jugement sommaire. Cette affaire a été débattue devant moi à Halifax, et j'ai statué, par décision rendue le 1er mai 2012, que la manière dont la défenderesse interprétait la police d'assurance invalidité prolongée (a IP) applicable du Régime d'assurance revenu militaire (Ra RM) et, particulièrement, que la politique de déduire les prestations d'invalidité mensuelles versées aux membres du groupe atteints d'une invalidité au titre de la Loi sur les pensions, L.R.C. (1985), ch. P-6, des sommes qui leurs sont versés à titre d'assurance invalidité prolongée était illégale : voir Manuge c. Canada, 2012 CF 499, [2013] 4 R.C.F. 647. a ucun appel n'a été interjeté à l'égard de cette décision, et les parties ont entrepris des négociations approfondies en vue de régler les questions liées aux incidences financières de mon jugement.

[4] Il y a lieu que la Cour approuve un règlement de recours collectif dans le cas où, au vu des circonstances globales, elle juge que le règlement est juste et raisonnable, et qu'il est dans le meilleur intérêt du groupe dans son ensemble : Bodnar v. Cash Store Inc., 2010 BCSC 145, 84 C.P.C. (6th) 49, au paragraphe 17. d ans at paragraph 7, Justice d anièle Tremblay-Lamer, described the general approach to the approval of a class settlement in this Court:

> The Court with a class action settlement before it does not expect perfection, but rather that the settlement be reasonable, a good compromise between the two parties. The purpose of a settlement is to avoid the risks of a trial. e ven if it is not perfect, the settlement may be in the best interests of those affected by it, particularly when the risks and the costs of a trial are considered. It is always necessary to consider that a proposed settlement represents the parties' desire to settle the matter out of court without any admission by either party regarding the facts or regarding the law.

[5] It is not open to the reviewing court to rewrite the substantive terms of a proposed settlement nor should the interests of individual class members be assessed in isolation from the interests of the entire class: see Dabbs v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [1998] O.J. n o. 1598 (g en. d iv.) (QL), at paragraphs 10–11.

[6] It will always be a particular concern of the Court that an arms-length settlement negotiated in good faith not be too readily rejected. The parties are, after all, best placed to assess the risks and costs (financial and human) associated with taking complex class litigation to its conclusion. The rejection of a multi-faceted settlement like the one negotiated here also carries the risk that the process of negotiation will unravel and the spirit of compromise will be lost.

The Terms of the Proposed Settlement

[7] The settlement proposed by the parties includes a number of advantageous financial and administrative terms. The value of the financial settlement has been estimated at more than $887 million which includes the net present value of monies payable in the future to disabled class members. The financial effect of the settlement has also been extended voluntarily by the defendant by the removal of similar offsets of Pension Act benefits from a number of other federal financial support programs.

la décision Châteauneuf c. Canada, 2006 CF 286, au paragraphe 7, la juge d anièle Tremblay-Lamer a décrit la démarche générale de la Cour en matière d'approbation d'un règlement de recours collectif :

> La Cour saisie d'un règlement d'un recours collectif n'y cherche pas la perfection, mais plutôt que le règlement soit raisonnable, un bon compromis entre les deux parties. Le but d'un règlement est d'éviter les risques d'un procès. Même imparfait, le règlement peut être dans les meilleurs intérêts de ceux qui sont affectés, particulièrement si on le compare aux risques et au coût d'un procès. Il faut toujours tenir compte qu'un règlement proposé signifie le désir des parties de régler le dossier hors cour sans aucune admission de part et d'autre ni quant aux faits ni quant au droit.

programmes fédéraux de soutien financier, a sciemment amplifié l'incidence financière du règlement.

[8] The central component of the proposed settlement is the full recovery by approximately 7 500 class members or their families of all amounts unlawfully deducted or which would otherwise have been deducted in the future from their SISIP LTd income. The agreed retroactive recovery of benefits dates back to June 1, 1976, that being the date the Pension Act offset began. This part of the settlement resulted from a concession by the defendant to abandon its limitations defences and to expand the class to include disabled Canadian Forces (CF) members who would otherwise have been left out. The agreement also provides for the recovery of offsets by the spouses and minor children of deceased members in lieu of the cumbersome and complex process of recognizing estate claims.

[9] In addition, the parties have negotiated reasonable rates for pre- and post-judgment interest dating back to 1992 totalling more than $80 million as of February 14, 2013. Interest continues to accrue at $1.3 million per month.

[9] d e plus, les parties ont négocié des taux raisonnables en ce qui a trait aux intérêts avant et après jugement, qui remontent à 1992 et qui s'élevaient à 80 millions de dollars en date du 14 février 2013. Les intérêts continuent de s'accumuler, à raison de 1,3 million de dollars par mois.

[10] It is acknowledged by the parties that the payment of LTd benefits to members of the class will attract income tax. Because SISIP LTd benefits constitute taxable income, the payment of income tax is essentially unavoidable. In order to mitigate the impact of tax on lump sum recoveries, disabled recipients will be permitted to spread their retroactive refunds over the years it would have been payable if that option reduces their tax exposure. Further tax mitigation measures include a cash top up of 3.27 percent on retroactive LTd benefits payable to members and the right to deduct legal fees as an expense incurred in the recovery of taxable income.

[11] In recognition of the hardships experienced by some members of the class, the parties have agreed to establish a $10 million bursary fund to be administered over a period of 15 years by the a ssociation of u niversities and Colleges of Canada. This fund can be accessed by class members and their families for part-time or full-time study and is expected to generate bursaries of up to $1 300 for each eligible applicant.

[12] The parties have also negotiated a streamlined process for administrating the payment of refunds and for resolving future claim disagreements. Specifically, a number of members of the class were subjected to Pension Act offsets that exceeded the value of their SISIP LTd benefits. These members came to be identified as "zero sum" members. Because the SISIP administrator had not maintained medical and financial information for zero sum members, it was not possible to readily determine their ongoing eligibility for LTd benefits. This barrier to recovery was resolved, in part, by allowing the SISIP administrator to access medical data from other government sources and by establishing proxy indicators for determining a person's ongoing level of disability. a proxy would include the recognition of "total disability" under other disability programs such as the Canada Pension Plan. For members released after n ovember 30, 1989, the defendant has agreed unconditionally to treat all zero sum members as disabled during the initial 24-month own occupation disability period.

[13] For class members who disagree with the defendant's assessment of disability or with the amount payable, a simple and binding appeal process has been established. Class counsel have undertaken to represent those members on any appeal brought before an agreed and experienced arbitrator who will be paid by the defendant.

[14] The proposed settlement also provides for the appointment of a monitor who will be responsible for assessing the defendant's compliance with its terms. The monitor will report quarterly and will be paid by the defendant.

[15] Finally, save for a remaining issue between the parties concerning the calculation of Consumer Price Index (CPI) benefits payable under the SISIP policy (to be resolved later by the Court), the settlement provides for a release of the defendant from further liability in connection with claims arising, or which could have been raised, in this litigation.

The Views of Class Members

[16] The preliminary notice of settlement invited class members to write to counsel either supporting or opposing the terms of settlement. Two hundred and sixty-nine responses were received by counsel and submitted by affidavit to the Court. a small number of class members wrote directly to the Court. a t the hearing of the motion to approve the proposed settlement, a number of class members appeared and, of those, several addressed the Court. The vast majority of those submissions expressed strong approval of the terms of settlement including the claim to legal costs. Only 15 of the written submissions expressed general disagreement with the settlement and another 18 opposed only the claim to legal fees. a further 30 class members advocated for the defendant to satisfy the claim to legal fees advanced by class counsel.

[17] The overwhelming tone of the submissions to the Court was complimentary to Mr. Manuge and to his legal team and strongly supportive of the settlement. a few examples will be sufficient to illustrate this general view. g eorge Hrynewich wrote the following:

[14] Le règlement proposé prévoit aussi la nomination d'un surveillant, qui aura la responsabilité de vérifier si la défenderesse se conforme aux modalités du règlement. Le surveillant présentera un rapport chaque trimestre et sera rémunéré par la défenderesse.

L'opinion des membres du groupe

[17] Les observations formulées à la Cour consistaient, en très grande majorité, en des compliments envers M. Manuge et son équipe d'avocats ainsi qu'en un fort appui envers le règlement. Quelques exemples suffiront pour illustrer cette opinion générale. M. g eorge Hrynewich a rédigé ce qui suit :

a s for the settlement, I will get back what was clawed back by SISIP. The interest amounts are fine as far as I am concerned, because honestly, I probably would have spent the money and not made any interest on it. Lawyer fees—of course everyone would like to see things like this lower, but I was expecting them to be higher, so I feel that they are fair. They did a lot of work for us and put up with a lot. It would be nice to see them give Mr. Manuge a little bit more for his work in starting the suit and carrying on with it. We cannot escape income tax, and I would rather see them hold back too much now and have the Canada Revenue a gency (CRa) give me a refund later, than have to scramble to pay money back to CRa next year. In summary, I have to say that I am satisfied that we accomplished the main goals that I wanted to see accomplished when I joined this lawsuit. I did not join this expecting to get rich and I think the settlement is reasonable and fair.

[TRADUCTION] Le règlement me permettra de récupérer ce que le Ra RM m'a arraché. Le montant à titre d'intérêts est acceptable en ce qui me concerne, parce qu'honnêtement, j'aurais probablement dépensé l'argent et je n'aurais gagné aucun revenu d'intérêt. Les honoraires des avocats? C'est certain que tout le monde aimerait que ces frais-là soient moins élevés, mais je m'attendais à ce qu'ils soient plus élevés, de sorte que j'estime qu'il sont justes. Ils ont travaillé beaucoup pour nous et ils ont dû composer avec plusieurs problèmes. Ce serait bien si M. Manuge pouvait en obtenir un peu plus pour tout le travail qu'il a fait pour lancer l'action en justice et la poursuivre. On ne peut échapper à l'impôt sur le revenu, et je préférerais plutôt que l'a gence du revenu du Canada (l'a RC) retienne trop d'argent et qu'elle me rembourse plus tard, plutôt que d'avoir à trouver les moyens de lui redonner de l'argent l'année prochaine. e n bref, je dois dire que je suis convaincu que nous avons atteint les buts principaux que je voulais qu'on accomplisse lorsque je me suis greffé à cette action en justice. Je ne m'y suis pas joint en m'attendant à devenir riche et je crois que le règlement est raisonnable et juste.

Perhaps most of all I would like to see this end, and end while we are ahead. If someone could promise me that I would definitely get more money, but that it would take several more years and might cause us to lose some of the other things we have gained, I would say no thanks. You would have to be able to guarantee that I would get hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not a million, before I would say that I would even think about it. But this is just my opinion and I will respect the opinion of the majority of the suit members, as well as the judgment and decisions of the court.

Peut-être, et surtout, j'aimerais que ce processus prenne fin, et qu'il prenne fin alors que nous avons un règlement favorable. Si quelqu'un me promettait que j'obtiendrais définitivement plus d'argent, mais que cela pourrait nécessiter plusieurs années supplémentaires et nous faire perdre certains de nos autres gains, je lui dirais non merci. Cette personne devra pouvoir me garantir que j'obtiendrais des centaines de milliers de dollars, voire un million, avant que je lui dise que je songerais même à y penser. Ce n'est que mon avis, et je respecte l'opinion de la majorité des membres du groupe, ainsi que le jugement et les décisions de la Cour.

monumental task that clearly was not for the weak. Your diligence and professionalism should set a standard for all to emulate.

I still find it difficult, no, impossible to guess-estimate the amount that would come our way however at this point it is a mute point! Had it not been for the courage of d ennis Manuge and Peter d riscoll, as well as their determination to see it through, we (the class members) would have absolutely nothing to look forward or dream about.

I, as a class member and disabled Veteran, with my family, support the a greement and the proposed legal fee percentage as outlined by McInnes Cooper in the email dated 9 January 2013 sent to all Class Members.

I can't say this enough, "THan K YOu so very much" for giving us hope and "a little piece of ourselves back".

[18] g iven the strong support for the settlement expressed by the vast majority of class members who made submissions and the general notoriety of this case and its outcome within the community of disabled veterans, I am satisfied that the settlement is viewed very favourably by almost all class beneficiaries. Certainly, if there was general dissatisfaction with the settlement, I would have expected that more than a few members of the class would have expressed their concerns to the Court.

[19] It is apparent from the submissions received from class members that some of the opponents to the proposed settlement mistakenly believe that the Court has the authority to unilaterally amend its terms. With the exception of the approval of legal fees under rule 334.4 of the Rules, the Court has no authority to alter a settlement reached by the parties or to impose its own terms upon them. The Court is limited to either approving or rejecting a settlement in its entirety.

[20] Three recurring issues of concern to some class members had to do with the payment of income tax on retroactive payments of LTd income, the unwillingness of the government to contribute to the legal costs incurred by the class and the absence of an award for compte dans le présent recours collectif. Il s'agissait d'une tâche monumentale, pour laquelle il fallait manifestement des nerfs solides. La minutie et le professionnalisme dont vous avez fait preuve devraient être la norme à imiter.

Je trouve toujours qu'il est difficile… non, impossible, d'estimer les sommes qui nous seront accordées; cela dit, à ce stade-ci, cela n'a pas d'importance! Si ce n'avait été du courage de dennis Manuge et de Peter driscoll, ainsi que de leur détermination à aller jusqu'au bout, nous (les membres du groupe) n'aurions rien à quoi nous attendre, ni à espérer.

À titre de membre du groupe et d'ancien combattant invalide, j'appuie, tout comme ma famille, l'accord et le pourcentage d'honoraires, tels que décrits par McInnes Cooper dans le courriel daté du 9 janvier 2013 et envoyé à tous les membres du groupe.

Je ne saurais assez dire « MERCI beaucoup », pour nous avoir donné de l'espoir ainsi que « redonné une petite partie de nous-mêmes ».

[20] Le paiement d'impôt sur le revenu tiré des prestations rétroactives d'a IP, la réticence du gouvernement à contribuer au paiement des frais juridiques engagés par le groupe et l'absence d'indemnité à titre de dommages-intérêts généraux ou punitifs étaient trois questions general or punitive damages. a few individuals had specific concerns including the mother of a deceased veteran who objected to the exclusion of extended family from the class.

[21] The concern expressed by a few members of the class about the failure to incorporate a recovery for general damages is not persuasive. This was a breach of contract claim where such recoveries are infrequently recognized and certainly not in substantial amounts. Counsel also points out with some justification that the agreed $10 million bursary fund represents a form of surrogate recovery for the personal hardships experienced by some members of the class over the years. Protecting claims to general damages would also have required class members to produce individual medical evidence and presumably to testify about the hardships they had experienced. In my view such an approach would have been more time-consuming, expensive and complex than warranted by the benefits that would likely have been generated.

[22] The criticism that the settlement ought to have imposed upon the government an indemnity obligation for legal costs fails to recognize that in this Court legal costs are not, except in exceptional circumstances, payable by either party to a class proceeding regardless of the outcome: see rule 334.39 of the Rules. This provision was adopted to eliminate a practical barrier to the commencement of a class proceeding by a representative plaintiff who might otherwise be exposed to a substantial costs award if the case was ultimately unsuccessful. In the absence of any provision in our Rules for the separate payment of costs, it was not unreasonable for the parties to negotiate a settlement that provided for legal costs to be borne out of the settlement proceeds.

[23] a few members of the class complain that income tax will be payable on their retroactive LTd payments. Taxes are, however, the inevitable consequence of the application of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C., 1985 (5th Supp.), c. 1, and the manner in which SISIP LTd premiums were paid over the years. u nder the proposed settlement, class members are entitled to a 3.27 percent gross up for taxes and will be able to elect to receive benefits over time if that creates a more favourable tax outcome. These measures will mitigate the impact of income tax on taxable recoveries. It must also be kept in mind that had class members received their full LTd benefits in accordance with the SISIP policy that income would have been taxable at the time of receipt.

[24] n o class action settlement will ever be perfect. Recovery is always limited to those who meet the definition of a class member under the terms of certification. In cases like this involving thousands of unique individual claims, it is impossible and undesirable to treat every beneficiary equally in either financial or administrative terms. It is inevitable that a settlement like this one will leave a few people behind or benefit some ahead of others. In this case those distinctions are of insufficient weight to reject the proposed settlement.

[25] n otwithstanding the concerns expressed by a few members of the class, I have no hesitation in approving the proposed settlement of this action. It is a generous, complete and thoughtful resolution of the issues that were raised in the litigation and it will provide substantial financial assistance to thousands of disabled CF veterans and their families. The terms of settlement are also the product of extensive negotiations between the parties. It would not serve the interests of the vast majority of class members—many of who are suffering financially—to send the parties back into further discussions to address the concerns of a handful of those who oppose the arrangement. It is also a settlement that is supported by the vast majority of class members who took the opportunity to make their views known to the Court. In short, it represents a fair and reasonable compromise that is in the best interests of the class as a whole and it is, accordingly, approved.

[24] Il n'y aura jamais de règlement de recours collectif parfait. Le recouvrement est toujours confiné aux personnes qui répondent à la définition de membre du groupe, selon les modalités de l'autorisation. d ans des affaires, comme celle en l'espèce, qui concernent des milliers de réclamations uniques, il est impossible et non souhaitable de traiter chaque prestataire de la même manière, autant d'un point de vue financier que d'un point de vue administratif. Il est inévitable qu'un règlement comme celui en l'espèce laisse pour compte quelques personnes ou profite davantage à certains. d ans le cas présent, ces écarts ne sont pas assez importants pour rejeter le règlement proposé.

[25] Je n'ai aucune hésitation à approuver le règlement proposé relativement à la présente action, et ce, en dépit des réserves exprimées par quelques membres du groupe. Il constitue une solution généreuse, exhaustive et réfléchie aux questions qui ont été soulevées au cours du litige, et il fournira une aide financière substantielle aux milliers d'anciens combattants des FC ayant une invalidité et à leur famille. Les modalités du règlement sont aussi le produit des longues négociations entre les parties. Il ne servirait pas les intérêts de la grande majorité des membres du groupe — dont un bon nombre éprouvent des difficultés financières — de renvoyer les parties à la table de négociations pour qu'elles traitent des réserves exprimées par une poignée de personnes

[26] I would be remiss if I failed to recognize legal counsel, Mr. Manuge and the g overnment of Canada for the generosity of spirit and compromise that so obviously motivated their negotiations and which led to the resolution of the long-standing grievance that was at the heart of this case. Without the tenacity of Mr. Manuge, the essential goodwill of the parties and the hard work of all legal counsel involved, this settlement would not have been possible.

[27] The claim by class counsel to legal costs is a different matter. The parties do not agree on that issue and, in any event, it is left to the Court under rule 334.4 to determine the appropriate amount for those costs.

[28] a t the heart of the application of rule 334.4 is the requirement that legal fees payable to class counsel be fair and reasonable: see Parsons v. Canadian Red Cross Society, 2000 CanLII 22386, 49 O.R. (3d) 281 (S.C.J.) (Parsons). In determining what is fair and reasonable the Court must look at a number of factors including the results achieved, the extent of the risk assumed by class counsel, the amount of professional time actually incurred, the causal link between the legal effort and the results obtained, the quality of the representation, the complexity of the issues raised by the litigation, the character and importance of the litigation, the likelihood that individual claims would have been litigated in any event, the views expressed by the class, the existence of a fee agreement and the fees approved in comparable cases. Some authorities have also recognized a broader public interest in controlling the fees payable to the legal profession: see Endean v. Canadian Red Cross Society, 2000 BCSC 971, [2000] 8 W.W.R. 294 (Endean), at paragraph 73.

qui s'opposent à l'accord. Ce règlement a aussi reçu l'assentiment de la grande majorité des membres du groupe qui ont saisi l'occasion de faire connaître leur opinion à la Cour. e n résumé, le règlement constitue un compromis juste et raisonnable, qui est dans les meilleurs intérêts du groupe dans son ensemble et qui est, par conséquent, approuvé.

[28] L'obligation que les honoraires accordés aux avocats du groupe soient justes et raisonnables est au cœur de l'application de l'article 334.4 des Règles : voir Parsons v. Canadian Red Cross Society, 2000 CanLII 22386, 49 R.J.O. (3e) 281 (C.S.J.) (Parsons). Lorsque la Cour est appelée à déterminer ce qui est juste et raisonnable, elle doit examiner un certain nombre de facteurs, y compris les résultats obtenus, l'étendue du risque assumé par les avocats du groupe, la quantité d'heures de travail effectivement consacrées au litige, le lien de causalité entre les efforts déployés par les avocats et le résultat obtenu, la qualité de la représentation, la complexité des questions soulevées par le litige, la nature et l'importance du litige, la probabilité que les réclamations individuelles aient été soumises aux tribunaux de toute façon, les opinions exprimées par le groupe, l'existence d'une convention d'honoraires et les honoraires approuvés dans des affaires comparables. On a aussi reconnu, dans certaines décisions, qu'il existe un intérêt public général à ce qu'un contrôle soit exercé sur les honoraires payables aux avocats : voir Endean v. Canadian Red Cross Society, 2000 BCSC 971, [2000] 8 W.W.R. 294 (Endean), au paragraphe 73.

The Quality of Legal Representation and the Results a chieved

[29] The certification and liability determinations that provided the impetus for this settlement resulted from the skillful and tenacious advocacy of class counsel in the context of an adversarial contest involving equally skilled and tenacious opposing counsel. The issues were thoroughly briefed and persuasively argued and there is no question that the high quality of the legal work performed by class counsel led to the favourable liability outcome.

[30] The terms of settlement are equally impressive. e very dollar deducted will be returned to class members or their families with appropriate interest. n otwithstanding the impact of legal fees, the amounts recovered by class members will provide meaningful and, in many cases, badly needed compensation. The defendant's withdrawal of its limitation defences will add many more claimants to the class and will allow for recoveries dating back to 1976. a $10 million bursary program will be put in place as a surrogate for potential claims to general damages. a s discussed above, general damages are notoriously difficult to prove in breach of contract cases. That is particularly true for cases where claimants are medically disabled and the psychological impacts arising from financial deprivation are often hard to isolate from other underlying conditions. The solution adopted by the parties to resolve this issue was novel and creative. The same can be said for the inclusion of surviving spouses and dependant children in lieu of the immense difficulties that would arise from involving the estates of deceased members. Simple and cost effective measures have been put in place to resolve any ongoing disputes about entitlements and it is anticipated that the take-up rate for beneficiaries will approach 100 percent. These are results that would not have been reasonably contemplated by anyone at the outset of this litigation. Indeed, if settlement negotiations had been undertaken before my judgment was rendered, a reasonable outcome would have been substantially less favourable to the class than this one. The excellence of the legal representation provided by class counsel and the success that was achieved in the settlement negotiations are factors that favour a significant premium in the assessment of costs.

que ce processus entraînerait. d es mesures simples et efficientes ont été mises en place pour résoudre tout différend qui persisterait concernant les prestations, et on s'attend à ce que les prestataires acceptent celles-ci dans une proportion approchant 100 p. 100. Il s'agit de résultats qui n'auraient pas été raisonnablement envisagés par quiconque au début du présent litige. e n fait, si les négociations quant au règlement avaient été entreprises avant que j'aie rendu mon jugement, l'issue raisonnablement envisageable aurait été substantiellement moins favorable aux membres du groupe que celle en l'espèce. L'excellente représentation juridique offerte par les avocats du groupe et le succès obtenu dans le contexte des négociations quant au règlement sont des facteurs qui militent en faveur d'une majoration importante dans la taxation des dépens.

Litigation Risk

[31] There can be no doubt that legal counsel for the class exposed themselves to a significant level of risk in taking on this case. Once the case was finally certified as a class action, counsel were committed to bringing it to a final conclusion on behalf of all of the members of the class: see Slater Vecchio LLP v. Cashman, 2013 BCSC 134, [2013] 8 W.W.R. 392.

[32] In the ordinary course of this type of litigation, counsel could expect to be engaged for many years. In this case tens of thousands of pages of documents were expected to be discoverable and extensive witness examinations and other pre-trial work was contemplated. When class counsel accepted the retainer there was no expectation that the determinative legal issue would be resolved in a summary way and that no appeal would be taken from that decision. g iven the defendant's adversarial approach to the motion to certify, counsel would have assumed that they were exposing themselves to a financial risk measured in the potential loss of professional time and disbursements of probably tens of millions of dollars. This was also not a case where the defendant's liability approached a level of certainty. The claim to Charter relief [Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, being Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B, Canada Act 1982, 1982, c. 11 (u .K.)

[R.S.C., 1985, a ppendix II, n o. 44]] was doubtful at best and the point of contractual interpretation that ultimately drove the settlement was neither a sure thing nor invulnerable to appeal. While there was likely a political dimension to the ultimate settlement, it is doubtful that much, if anything, would have been recovered if my liability ruling had been unfavourable to the class and had then withstood an appeal.

[33] e ven the motion to certify this action exposed counsel to considerable risk. a lthough my decision to certify was reinstated by the Supreme Court of Canada, the likelihood of obtaining leave to that Court was only about one in ten. Furthermore, that decision turned on a contentious issue of jurisdictional law that had long been unresolved in the national jurisprudence. Counsel for Mr. Manuge undertook a three-year process to achieve certification. They also assumed tens of thousands of dollars of out-of-pocket expenses and agreed to indemnify Mr. Manuge for his potential exposure to legal costs before the Supreme Court of Canada.

[34] The litigation risk that class counsel assumed is also illustrated by the fact that the grievance that was at the centre of the case had been well known for more than 30 years and had attracted no litigation either individually or as a class proceeding until Mr. Manuge's claim was taken up by Mr. Peter d riscoll in 2007.

[35] Counsel for the defendant points out that the litigation risk decreased significantly once a decision was taken not to appeal my judgment. In the result, it is argued that the value of professional time incurred by class counsel after that point ought to be discounted.

[36] Counsel for the class argues that the defendant's initial opposition to the proceeding was the cause of much of the legal work that was incurred. a ccording to this view, the defendant's initial conduct in the defence of the claim diminishes the weight of its current argument that the claim to legal fees is excessive.

[37] a t this stage, I am not particularly concerned about the positions taken by the parties before the settlement was achieved. It is sufficient to observe that the litigation risk assumed by class counsel is primarily measured by the risk they assumed at the outset of the case. This point was made by Justice Warren Winkler in Parsons, above, in the following passages [at paragraphs 29, 36–38 and 42]:

> Moreover, class action litigation introduces additional complications. Complex class actions subsume the productive time of counsel. The risk undertaken by counsel is not merely a function of the probability of winning or losing. Some consideration must also be given to the commitment of resources made by the class counsel and the impact that this will have in the event the litigation is unsuccessful. Winning one of two class actions may be a reasonable hallmark of success. However, for the lawyer who's first action turns out to be a loser, the complete exhaustion of resources may leave him or her unable to conduct another action. Thus the real risk undertaken by class counsel is not merely a simple reciprocal of the "judgmental probability of success" in the action, even if that calculation could be made with any degree of certitude. There is a point in complex class action litigation where, degree of risk notwithstanding, class counsel may truly be, as Mr. Strosberg put it in his submissions, "betting his or her law firm". This must be considered in assessing the "risk" factor in regard of the appropriate fee for counsel.
> It is apparent from the record that even though this litigation was conducted from the middle of 1998 forward as a negotiation toward a settlement, the risks assumed by class counsel were no less real at any point than if that time had been devoted to a disposition through a trial process.

> Il appert du dossier que, même si le présent litige a pris la forme d'une négociation en vue d'un règlement à compter du milieu de l'année 1998, les risques assumés par l'avocat du groupe n'en étaient pas moins réels que s'il avait consacré ses heures professionnelles à l'obtention d'une décision dans un processus judiciaire, et ce, à tous les stades du litige.

In addition, the legislation enabling class proceedings introduces several features that distinguish these actions from ordinary litigation. One aspect that bears on the risk inherent in class actions is the requirement of court approval of any settlement reached. Protracted negotiations involve a commitment of the time and resources of counsel and the litigants. However, in a class proceeding, a court will not approve a settlement that it does not regard as being in the best interests of the class, regardless of whether class counsel take a different view. Thus, class counsel may find themselves in the position of having committed time and resources to the negotiation of a settlement, that they believe is in the best interests of the class, only to find that the court will not approve the settlement achieved. While this creates a risk simpliciter, it also creates an advantage for a defendant who can successfully extend the negotiations to the point that class counsel's resources are exhausted before making a "final settlement offer" that may not ultimately receive court approval. In those cases, class counsel may have exhausted their resources attempting to obtain a reasonable settlement only to find themselves, as a consequence, unable to pursue the litigation. a ccordingly, the risk in a class proceeding is not merely a function of whether or not litigation is anticipated and whether or not that litigation will be successful. Rather, there are risks inherent in the adoption of, and commitment to, any particular strategy for achieving a resolution.

In view of the foregoing, I am unable to accept the contention that there was less risk in this proceeding merely because the parties chose to proceed down a negotiation route. Moreover, contrary to the submissions made by certain of the intervenors, it is apparent that the time and resources committed to the negotiations by the class counsel meant that the risk was increasing rather than decreasing as the negotiations continued. a s the parties moved toward a settlement, the negotiations became more difficult as the issues narrowed with the result that the risk of an insurmountable impasse increased rather than diminished. This made the negotiations more perilous as they progressed.

The expenditures of class counsel in terms of time and money were at risk of loss if any politician in authority decided as a matter of expediency or policy not to settle the class proceedings or decided to unilaterally institute a no-fault compensation program and thereby bypass class counsel and the litigation. There was always the inherent danger that the pan-Canadian settlement would be impossible to achieve, either because of a d e plus, la législation autorisant les recours collectifs introduit plusieurs caractéristiques qui distinguent ces actions d'un litige ordinaire. u n des aspects qui alourdit le risque inhérent aux recours collectifs est l'exigence que tout règlement conclu soit approuvé par la cour. d e longues négociations nécessitent que les avocats et les parties y consacrent du temps et des ressources. Cependant, la cour n'approuvera pas un règlement de recours collectif qu'elle juge ne pas être dans le meilleur intérêt du groupe, et ce, sans égard à la question de savoir si les avocats du groupe sont d'avis contraire. Par conséquent, les avocats du groupe peuvent se trouver dans la situation d'avoir consacré du temps et des ressources en vue de la négociation d'un règlement, qu'ils croient être dans le meilleur intérêt du groupe, seulement pour réaliser que la cour n'approuvera pas le règlement qui a été conclu. Bien que cette situation constitue un risque en soi, elle entraîne aussi un avantage pour le défendeur, qui peut réussir à prolonger les négociations jusqu'à ce que les ressources des avocats du groupe soient épuisées, avant de présenter une « offre définitive de règlement » qui peut ultimement ne pas être approuvée par la cour. d ans de tels cas, les avocats du groupe peuvent avoir épuisé leurs ressources en tentant d'obtenir un règlement raisonnable et, par conséquent, être incapables de poursuivre le litige. Il s'ensuit que, dans le contexte d'un recours collectif, le risque n'est pas simplement apprécié en fonction des questions de savoir si un procès est prévu et si le groupe aura gain de cause. Il existe plutôt des risques inhérents à l'adoption et au maintien d'une stratégie donnée en vue du règlement de l'affaire.

Compte tenu de ce qui précède, je ne peux souscrire à la prétention selon laquelle le degré de risque dans la présente affaire était moins élevé du fait que les parties ont choisi de négocier. d e plus, contrairement à ce que certains intervenants ont fait observer, il semble que le fait que les avocats du groupe aient consacré du temps et des ressources dans les négociations occasionnait, au fur et à mesure que ces négociations continuaient, une augmentation du risque plutôt qu'une diminution. Les négociations devenaient plus difficiles du fait que les parties se rapprochaient d'un règlement, puisque les questions devenaient plus pointues, ce qui entraînait un accroissement, et non une diminution, du risque d'aboutir dans une impasse. La progression des négociations faisait en sorte qu'elles devenaient de plus en plus périlleuses.

Les dépenses des avocats du groupe, autant sur le plan du temps consacré que sur le plan financier, risquaient de devenir des pertes si un politicien au pouvoir avait décidé, pour des raisons de commodité ou de principe, de ne pas régler de recours collectifs ou d'instaurer de manière unilatérale un régime de compensation sans égard à la faute, et ainsi court-circuiter l'avocat du groupe et le litige. Il y avait toujours le reluctance on the part of a particular government or a class in a particular action to approve an agreement.

[38] In my view the litigation risk assumed by class counsel was substantial and almost certainly exceeded the tolerance level of others. This is a factor favouring a premium costs recovery, in part, to motivate counsel to take on difficult class litigation involving potentially deserving claims that might not otherwise be pursued.

Time and effort expended

[39] The affidavit of lead counsel, Mr. d riscoll, discloses that the two firms retained on behalf of the class worked for more than 6 years (involving 20 legal professionals) and amassed more than 8 500 hours of unbilled time. Considerable further work remains including the direct supervision of the refund process and monitoring and assisting with individual appeals. The efforts undertaken to date to respond to enquiries from hundreds of highly engaged class members have been considerable and will undoubtedly continue. Out-of-pocket expenses are now approaching $200 000 and are estimated to exceed $260 000 before the case is concluded. a ll of the file expenses have been borne by counsel and were, in considerable measure, at risk. Class counsel value their current unbilled time at more than $3.2 million. This seems to me to be a reasonably fair valuation. However, it is important to recognize that much of the billable time expended and all of the file disbursements have been carried by these law firms for several years and that considerable work remains to monitor and manage the individual claims of class members.

danger intrinsèque qu'un règlement pancanadien puisse être impossible à obtenir, en raison de la réticence d'un gouvernement en particulier ou du groupe partie à une action en particulier à approuver une entente.

Le temps et les efforts consacrés

[39] L'affidavit de Me d riscoll, l'avocat principal, révèle que les deux cabinets d'avocats retenus pour le compte du groupe ont travaillé plus de 6 ans sur le recours collectif (qui a nécessité 20 avocats) et qu'ils ont investi plus de 8 500 heures de travail non facturé. Il leur reste d'autres tâches considérables à accomplir, y compris superviser directement le processus de remboursement ainsi que fournir de l'aide relativement aux appels interjetés à titre individuel par les membres du groupe et suivre l'évolution de ces appels. Ils ont déployé des efforts considérables jusqu'à maintenant afin de répondre aux demandes de renseignements provenant de centaines de membres très actifs du groupe, et continueront sans doute de ce faire. Les frais remboursables s'élèvent maintenant à tout près de 200 000 dollars, et on estime que ceux-ci excéderont 260 000 dollars d'ici la conclusion de l'affaire. Les avocats ont assumé l'ensemble des dépenses liées au dossier, lesquelles représentaient, dans une très large mesure, un risque. Les avocats du groupe évaluent à plus de 3,2 millions de dollars leurs heures de travail non facturé à ce stade-ci. Cette évaluation me semble raisonnablement juste. Cependant, il est important de reconnaître que ces cabinets d'avocats ont assumé, pendant plusieurs années, les coûts liés à une grande partie des heures de travail facturables et l'ensemble des débours liés au dossier et qu'il leur reste un travail considérable à effectuer relativement à la surveillance et à la prise en charge des réclamations des membres du groupe à titre individuel.

The Importance of the Litigation to the Class

[40] This was important litigation dealing with a long-standing, contractual grievance involving thousands of disabled CF veterans. Since 1976, the practice of deducting Pension Act disability payments from SISIP LTd benefits had been the source of hardship drawing considerable third-party criticism. until my liability judgment was delivered, the government of Canada forcefully defended its position. The settlement of this class action will provide meaningful compensation for several thousand deserving CF veterans and will likely represent the fourth highest financial payout in Canadian class action history. These are factors that favour the award of a costs premium to class counsel.

The Public Interest

[41] If there is a public interest that pertains to matters such as this, it is more properly situated around the interests of the class than the supposed interest of the general public in controlling compensation for lawyers engaged in class litigation. In my view it is relevant in assessing the reasonableness and fairness of class action legal fees to consider the impact of those fees on the individual recoveries of class members. This, I think, is what was of concern in Killough v. Canadian Red Cross Society, 2007 BCSC 941, [2008] 2 W.W.R. 482 (Killough), where at paragraph 8, the Court referred to the impact of the agreed fee on the fund that would otherwise be available to the class.

L'intérêt public

[42] For someone like Mr. Manuge whose claim to retroactive LTd benefits is estimated at less than $10 000, the deduction of legal fees of about $1 500 could not be considered to be unfair or unreasonable. However, for a CF veteran suffering from a major, work-limiting disability, the deduction of more than $37 000 from an award of $250 000 will result in a meaningful financial deprivation. In short, those who are arguably the most in need of their retroactive recoveries are the ones carrying most of the burden of legal costs. This is a factor that supports a reduction in the award of costs to class counsel.

d'un montant de plus de 37 000 dollars d'une indemnisation de 250 000 dollars entrainera une perte importante d'un point de vue financier. e n bref, les personnes qu'on pourrait qualifier de celles ayant le plus besoin de leurs indemnités rétroactives sont celles qui assument la plupart de la responsabilité quant aux honoraires. Il s'agit d'un facteur qui milite en faveur d'une diminution de la somme accordée aux avocats du groupe.

The Contingency Fee a greement, the Claim to a Percentage Recovery and the u se of a Multiplier

La convention d'honoraires conditionnels, la réclamation d'un pourcentage du recouvrement et le recours à un multiplicateur

[43] I accept that a contingency fee agreement entered into between legal counsel and a representative plaintiff in a proposed class proceeding may be relevant and, sometimes, a compelling consideration in the final assessment of legal fees. It strikes me, nonetheless, that such a fee agreement will not necessarily be a primary consideration because it is most often executed at an early point in time when very little is known about how the litigation will unfold. I made essentially the same point in my decision to certify this proceeding in Manuge v. Canada, 2008 FC 624 [cited above], at paragraph 34:

> One other concern raised by the Crown involves the magnitude of the contingency fee that would be payable under the terms of the retainer agreement entered into between Mr. Manuge and his legal counsel. That agreement provides for a fee of 30% of any favourable financial judgment plus disbursements. The agreement also duly notes that the fee payable "shall be subject to approval by the Court." There is certainly nothing inappropriate about a contingency fee arrangement in a case like this one where the outcome is unpredictable and where the amounts individually in issue appear insufficient to support litigation. The amount of fee payable at the end of a class proceeding is, of course, subject to assessment by the trial court and must bear some reasonable relationship to the effort actually expended and to the degree of risk assumed by counsel. I have no reservations about the ability of the Court to deal with this issue, if necessary, in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction.[1] > u n autre point soulevé par la Couronne concerne l'ampleur des honoraires conditionnels qui seraient payables au titre du mandat de représentation en justice conclu entre M. Manuge et son avocat. Ce mandat prévoit des honoraires représentant 30 p. 100 de tout jugement rendu en faveur de M. Manuge, outre les débours. Le mandat précise aussi que les honoraires payables [TRADUCTION] « devront être approuvés par la Cour ». Il n'y a évidemment rien d'illégitime à ce que soit conclu un accord d'honoraires conditionnels dans un cas comme celui-ci, dont l'issue est imprévisible et où les sommes, considérées isolément, ne semblent pas justifier un recours aux tribunaux. Le montant des honoraires payables à l'issue d'un recours collectif dépendra naturellement de l'appréciation du juge de première instance et devra être proportionnel aux efforts effectivement consentis et au risque pris par l'avocat. Je n'ai aucune réserve sur l'aptitude de la Cour à examiner cet aspect, au besoin, dans l'exercise de sa fonction de surveillance[1].

[44] When Mr. Manuge entered into the fee agreement with his legal counsel, no one knew that the issue of certification would ultimately reach the Supreme Court of Canada or that the determinative liability issue would be finally resolved after a short hearing on agreed evidence and without extensive discovery or a trial. Similarly, no one could have accurately predicted the outcome of the negotiations that led to the settlement now before the Court including the willingness of the respondent to abandon what was likely a viable, if partial, limitations defence.

[45] The contingency fee agreement that was executed by Mr. Manuge and which purported to award legal fees of 30 percent of amounts recovered on behalf of members of the class is of no particular significance to this assessment. That is so because Mr. Manuge and class counsel have essentially walked away from the agreement. What they are now seeking is the approval of legal fees representing approximately 7.5 percent of the gross value of the settlement inclusive of past and future benefits. It is also proposed that the fees be payable wholly from the past amounts due to class members which would represent about 15.7 percent of the total value of the retroactive entitlements of class members.

[46] a part from the obvious fact that the fees now claimed represent about one-quarter of the amount provided for in the initial contingency fee agreement, I was not provided with a clear explanation for how the figure of $65 million was reached beyond the observation that the figure was set at less than the amount of accrued interest included within the settlement. The figure claimed for legal fees is thus not much more than a number and a very large number at that.

[47] The use of percentages and multipliers to assess class action legal fees is appropriate, but mainly to test their reasonableness and not to determine absolute entitlement. e ach approach has its place. The multiplier

appears to be a tool better suited to cases where the social benefits achieved may be greater than the amounts recovered and where a percentage approach would likely under-compensate counsel. In the so-called common fund cases the use of a percentage appears to be preferred because it tends to reward success and to promote early settlement.

[48] In my view there is a danger in placing undue emphasis on either a multiplier or a percentage recovery in a case like this. My concern is the same as that expressed by Justice Ian Pitfield in Killough, above, in the following passages [at paragraphs 45–48]:

> With respect, other factors do not elevate the contribution of counsel in this action to the level of contribution of counsel in relation to the earlier settlement. While time accumulated on the matter and comparative multipliers are relevant and useful, caution must be exercised when using them as benchmarks for the assessment of the reasonableness of any fee. The principal concern is that there is no means of assessing whether the accumulated time was necessary and represented a reasonable and productive use of counsel's time. Class actions must not represent an open-ended invitation to accumulate time without regard to productivity.
> The accumulation of substantial time charges in relation to a legal matter does not always justify compensation at base rates or multiples thereof. Conversely, low time endeavours may justify fees that are many multiples of the book value of accumulated time.
> Multipliers and percentage of recovery comparisons are completely arbitrary. The efficacy of multipliers is affected by the reasonableness, which cannot be assessed with any confidence, of the base of accumulated time and hourly rates from which the multiplier is derived. The percentage of recovery comparison is reduced and therefore made to appear more favourable by comparing the total fee to a global settlement amount that included the benefit pool, the administration fund, goods and services tax and provincial sales tax where applicable, and the aggregate of legal fees. Legal fees were included notwithstanding the repeated assertion in affidavits and submissions that legal fees were independent of any other settlement consideration.

Chaque méthode a son utilité. Le multiplicateur semble être une méthode qui convient davantage à des cas où les effets sociaux bénéfiques obtenus peuvent être plus importants que les sommes recouvrées et où la méthode du pourcentage entraînerait probablement une compensation insuffisante pour les avocats. Le recours à un pourcentage semble être privilégié dans ce que l'on appelle les affaires de fonds communs, parce que cette méthode tend à récompenser la réussite et à favoriser un règlement rapide.

> L'accumulation importante de temps facturé en lien avec une affaire juridique ne justifie pas toujours une compensation établie au moyen de taux de base ou de multiples de ceux-ci. e n revanche, des démarches qui nécessitent peu de temps peuvent justifier des honoraires plusieurs fois plus élevés que la valeur comptable aux heures consacrées.
> Les comparaisons entre la méthode du multiplicateur et celle du pourcentage du recouvrement sont complètement arbitraires. L'efficacité des multiplicateurs est affectée par le caractère raisonnable, qui ne peut nullement être apprécié en fonction des heures accumulées et des taux horaires desquels le multiplicateur est dérivé. La comparaison du pourcentage de recouvrement est réduite, et, par conséquent, elle semble être plus favorable en comparant les honoraires globaux à un montant global de règlement qui comprenait l'ensemble des prestations, le fonds de gestion, la taxe sur les produits et services et la taxe de vente provinciale le cas échéant, et l'ensemble des honoraires. Les honoraires ont été inclus, sans égard à l'affirmation, répétée à maintes reprises dans les affidavits et les observations, selon laquelle les honoraires n'étaient pas liés à aucune autre considération du règlement.

In sum, while counsel must be fairly and reasonably compensated for the risk assumed by and the work done on behalf of any class, the assessment of fairness and reasonableness is ultimately more subjective than it is objective.

[49] The defendant places considerable emphasis on the relatively low value of professional time expended by class counsel and then argues for the use of typical multiplier of 1.5 to 3.5. This seems to me to be overly simplistic and largely insensitive to the factors favouring a premium recovery. The efficiency of counsel in getting to an excellent result is something to be rewarded and not discouraged by the rigid application of a multiplier to the time expended. Here I agree with the views expressed by Justice g eorge Strathy in Helm v.Toronto Hydro-Electric System Ltd., 2012 On SC 2602 (CanLII), 40 C.P.C. (7th) 310, at paragraphs 25–27:

The proposed fee represents a significant premium over what the fee would be based on time multiplied by standard hourly rates. Is that a reason to disallow it? If the settlement had only been achieved four years later, on the eve of trial, when over a million dollars in time had been expended, would the fee be any more or less appropriate? Should counsel not be rewarded for bringing this litigation to a timely and meritorious conclusion? Should counsel not be commended for taking an aggressive and innovative approach to summary judgment, ultimately causing the plaintiff to enter into serious and ultimately productive settlement discussions?

[TRADUCTION] Les honoraires proposés représentent une majoration importante en comparaison à une situation où ils seraient calculés en fonction de la multiplication du temps consacré par les taux horaires réguliers. e st-ce que cela justifie pour autant de refuser de tels honoraires? Seraient-ils plus appropriés, ou moins appropriés, si le règlement avait été conclu quatre années plus tard, à la veille du procès, alors que plus d'un million de dollars en heures de travail facturable auront été accumulées? Les avocats ne devraient-ils pas être récompensés pour avoir réussi à obtenir une conclusion rapide et louable quant au présent litige? n e devraient-ils pas être félicités pour avoir adopté une stratégie dynamique et innovatrice à l'égard du jugement sommaire, laquelle a fait en sorte que le demandeur a pu entreprendre des négociations de règlement sérieuses et qui se sont en fin de compte avérées productives?

Plaintiff's counsel are serious, responsible, committed and effective class action counsel. They are entrepreneurial. They will likely take on some cases that they will lose, with significant financial consequences. They will take on other cases where they will not be paid for years. To my mind, they should be generously compensated when they produce excellent and timely results, as they have done here.

Les avocats du demandeur sont des professionnels sérieux, responsables, engagés et efficaces en matière de recours collectif. Ils font preuve d'esprit d'initiative. Ils accepteront certaines causes qu'ils perdront, ce qui leur occasionnera des conséquences importantes sur le plan financier. Ils accepteront des mandats relatifs à des affaires, pour lesquels ils ne seront pas payés pendant des années. À mon avis, ils devraient être généreusement compensés lorsqu'ils obtiennent des résultats excellents de manière rapide, comme en l'espèce.

For those reasons, I approve the counsel fee.

a lso see Vitapharm Canada Ltd. v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. (2005), 12 C.P.C. (6th) 226 (Ont. S.C.J.), at paragraph 107.

[50] It can be equally unhelpful to look for guidance from authorities where legal fees have been approved as a percentage of the amounts recovered. a reasonable fee should bear an appropriate relationship to the amount recovered: see Endean, above, at paragraph 80. Cases that generate a recovery of a few million dollars may well justify a 25 percent to 30 percent costs award. It is more difficult to support such an approach where the award is in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Presumably that is the reason why class counsel are not relying on the initial contingency fee allowance of 30 percent. That is also the reason that the three authorities that represent the strongest comparators to this case in terms of amounts recovered fall at the bottom of the scale of costs awarded in percentage terms: see Baxter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2006 CanLII 41673, 83 O.R. (3d) 481 (S.C.J.); Endean, above; and Killough, above.[2] These comparable decisions do not support an award of costs in this case of approximately 7.5 percent or, in financial terms, $65 million.

Conclusion

[51] Having regard to all of the considerations outlined above, I will approve legal fees in an amount equal to 8 percent of the retroactive refunds payable to class beneficiaries (including the cancellation of debts owing

2 In Baxter, above, a costs award representing 4.87 percent of a projected payout of almost $2 billion was approved. This resulted in legal fees of between $85 and $100 million. In Endean, above, legal fees of $52 500 000 were approved representing 4.26 percent of the total amount recovered. In Killough, above, legal fees of $37 290 000 were agreed between the parties and were not to be deducted from the settlement proceeds. This figure was approved by the Court—albeit with reservations—and it represented 3.64 percent of the total award.

Voir aussi la décision Vitapharm Canada Ltd. v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. (2005), 12 C.P.C. (6th) 226 (C.S.J. Ont.), au paragraphe 107.

[50] Il n'est pas non plus d'une grande utilité de s'inspirer des précédents dans lesquels les honoraires approuvés constituaient un pourcentage des montants recouvrés. d es honoraires raisonnables devraient avoir un lien adéquat avec la somme recouvrée : voir Endean, précitée, au paragraphe 80. Les affaires étant à l'origine de recouvrements de quelques millions pourraient bien justifier une adjudication des dépens correspondant à 25 à 30 p. 100 du recouvrement global. Il est plus difficile d'appuyer une telle solution lorsque la décision prévoit le recouvrement de centaines de millions de dollars. On peut supposer qu'il s'agit du motif pour lequel les avocats du groupe n'invoquent pas l'indemnité de 30 p. 100 prévue dans la convention d'honoraires conditionnels. Il s'agit aussi du motif pour lequel le pourcentage de dépens accordés dans les trois précédents qui se comparent le mieux à la présente affaire en ce qui concerne les sommes recouvrées était situé au bas de l'échelle : voir Baxter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2006 CanLII 41673, 83 R.J.O. (3e) 481 (C.S.J.); Endean, précitée, et Killough, précitée[2]. Ces décisions comparables n'appuient pas une adjudication des dépens d'approximativement 7,5 p. 100, ou, en termes financiers, 65 millions de dollars, dans la présente affaire.

Conclusion

2 d ans la décision Baxter, précitée, une adjudication des dépens correspondant à 4,87 p. 100 d'un paiement projeté de presque deux milliards de dollars a été approuvée. Cela a donné lieu à des honoraires se situant entre 85 et 100 millions de dollars. d ans la décision Endean, précitée, des honoraires de 52 500 000 dollars ont été approuvés, ce qui représentait 4,26 p. 100 du total de la somme recouvrée. d ans la décision Killough, précitée, les parties ont consenti à des honoraires de 37 290 000 dollars, et ceux-ci n'ont pas été déduits des produits du règlement. Ce montant a été approuvé par la Cour — non sans réserve — et il représentait 3,64 p. 100 du montant total accordé.

by class members to Manulife Financial). This figure is approximately 4 percent of the total value of the settlement. In addition I will approve the deduction of an amount equal to 0.079 percent of refunds payable to class beneficiaries (including the cancellation of debts by class members to Manulife Financial) as an indemnity for out-of-pocket expenses. Class counsel are also authorized to deduct required goods and services tax, harmonized sales tax and/or provincial sales tax from refunds payable to class beneficiaries and to remit those amounts to the Canada Revenue a gency or to the appropriate provincial agency.

[52] I am satisfied that the above recovery of legal costs is in keeping with the fees approved in the comparable cases. More importantly it represents a sufficient incentive to counsel to take on high-risk class litigation without, at the same time, unduly impacting on the much-needed recoveries of disabled CF veterans. I am grateful to counsel for their thorough briefing of the relevant jurisprudence and, in particular, to counsel for the Minister who brought the required adversarial balance to the process.

[53] Class counsel have undertaken to create a fund for veterans in need of legal assistance with the allocation of $1 003 420 from their costs award. In addition they propose to pay to Mr. Manuge an honorarium of $50 000 in recognition of his significant contribution to the prosecution of this action. Several members of the class argued that Mr. Manuge ought to receive more than $50 000. However, to the extent that the Court has any control over the use of costs awarded to counsel, I do not think it appropriate that Mr. Manuge receive more than the amount described in the preliminary notice of settlement sent to class members. That was the basis on which the proposal would have been considered by class members and it is not desirable that a unilateral and ex post facto alteration be made at this stage. The proposal l'annulation des dettes des membres du groupe à la Financière Manuvie). Ce montant représente approximativement 4 p. 100 de la valeur totale du règlement. d e plus, j'approuverai la déduction d'un montant correspondant à 0,079 p. 100 des sommes à rembourser aux prestataires du groupe (y compris l'annulation des dettes des membres du groupe à la Financière Manuvie), à titre d'indemnité pour les frais remboursables. Les avocats du groupe sont aussi autorisés à déduire la taxe sur les produits et services, la taxe de vente harmonisée ou la taxe de vente provinciale des sommes à rembourser aux prestataires du groupe, selon le cas, ainsi qu'à remettre ces montants à l'a gence du revenu du Canada ou à l'organisme provincial approprié.

[53] Les avocats du groupe se sont engagés à créer un fonds d'aide juridique à l'intention des anciens combattants, par l'allocation d'un montant de 1 003 420 dollars, lequel est tiré des dépens qui leur ont été accordés. d e plus, ils proposent de payer à M. Manuge des honoraires de 50 000 dollars, en reconnaissance de son apport important relativement à la présente action. Plusieurs membres du groupe ont prétendu que M. Manuge devrait recevoir un montant supérieur à 50 000 dollars. Cependant, dans la mesure où la Cour a une forme de contrôle sur les dépens accordés aux avocats, je ne crois pas qu'il soit approprié que M. Manuge reçoive un montant supérieur à celui décrit dans l'avis préliminaire de règlement qui a été envoyé aux membres du groupe. Il s'agissait des modalités de la proposition qui aurait été

REASONS FOR ORDER – COUNSEL FEES

PHELAN J.

I. Introduction

[1] This is the decision concerning the approval of counsel fees and the payment of honorariums to named plaintiffs in the Indian Day Schools Settlement Agreement [Settlement and/or Agreement]. The matter proceeded separately from the Settlement Approval Hearing but immediately after its conclusion. While this is a separate decision from the Settlement Approval, this decision should be read with the "Settlement Approval Decision".

[2] Under Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, all payments to counsel flowing from a class proceeding must be approved by the Court. The Court must ensure that legal fees payable to Class Counsel are "fair and reasonable" in all of the circumstances (Manuge v R, 2013 FC 341 at para 28, 227 ACWS (3d) 637 [Manuge]).

[3] By operation of the Settlement, Class Counsel fee approval is severable from the approval of the Settlement and the Court can approve the Settlement separately from approval of Counsel Fees. The pertinent provisions are Sections 2.02 and 2.03 of the Settlement as set out below:

> 2.02 Effective in Entirety
>
> Subject to 2.03, none of the provisions of this Agreement will become effective unless and until the Federal Court approves this Agreement.
> 2.03 Legal Fees are Severable
> In the event that the Federal Court does not approve the legal fees set out in 13.01 and 13.02 but otherwise approves the Agreement, > the provisions of the Agreement other than 13.01 and 13.02 will come into effect on the Implementation Date. 13.01 and 13.02 will not come into effect unless and until the Federal Court so orders.

[4] The Class Counsel fee arrangements were negotiated and concluded after the Settlement had been concluded. The evidence is that this was an arm's length, good faith negotiation separate from the Settlement.

[5] The fees at issue are $55 million inclusive of disbursements and applicable taxes payable after the Implementation Date plus a further $7 million in legal fees payable to Class Counsel for legal services rendered for a period of four (4) years after the Implementation Date.

[6] All fees are to be paid by the Defendant Canada and not by any of the members of the Survivor or Family Classes.

[7] The legal fees regime under the Settlement is captured in sections 13.01-13.05:

>
> Canada agrees to pay Class Counsel in respect of their legal fees and disbursements the amount of fifty-five million dollars ($55,000,000.00) plus applicable taxes within thirty (30) days after the Implementation Date.
>
> 13.02 Post-Implementation Fees
> Within thirty (30) days after the Implementation Date, Canada will pay to Class Counsel the additional sum of seven million dollars ($7,000,000.00) in trust for legal fees, applicable taxes and disbursements to be rendered by Class Counsel to Survivor Class Members for services rendered for a period of four (4) years after the Implementation Date. Fees and disbursements of Class Counsel incurred after the Implementation Date shall be approved by the Court on a quarterly basis. Any amount remaining in trust, including interest, after all such legal services have been completed and fees and disbursements approved shall be transferred by Class Counsel to the McLean Day Schools Settlement Corporation, to be used for Legacy Projects or as may be ordered by the Court.

13.03 Scope of Ongoing Legal Services

(1) Class Counsel agrees that it will provide legal advice to Survivor Class Members on the implementation of this Settlement Agreement, including with respect to the payment of compensation, for a period of four (4) years after the Implementation Date.

(2) Class Counsel agrees that it will not charge any Survivor Class Member for fees or disbursements in respect of any matter related to the administration of the Federal Court Class Action or to the implementation of this Settlement, including the payment of compensation.

13.04 Pre-Approval of Fees Required

No legal fees or disbursements may be charged to Survivor Class Members or Family Class Members in respect of compensation under this Settlement or any other legal advice relating to this Settlement by legal counsel other than Class Counsel without the prior approval of such fees or disbursements by the Federal Court on a motion under Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules on notice to the Parties.

13.05 No Other Fees to be Charged

The Parties agree that it is their intention that all payments to Survivor Class Members under this Agreement are to be made without any deductions on account of legal fees or disbursements.

II. Background

[8] The nature of the litigation, the history of it, the risks of litigation and the benefit of the Settlement are set out in the Settlement Approval Decision.

[9] The initial claim against Canada regarding Indian Day Schools had been commenced by Joan Jack [Jack] in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench. She and her partner Louay Alghoul [Alghoul] were granted the opportunity to make submissions on this matter of fees.

[10] While there was no formal request by Jack and Alghoul, a fair reading of their submissions is a request that this Court not approve Counsel Fees unless they are compensated in some fashion for this initial work.

[11] Jack's evidence, also discussed in the Settlement Approval Decision, is that she took this matter on under a contingency arrangement in 2009. By 2012, the burden of the litigation caused the bankruptcy of her firm. No other firm was prepared to undertake the case or assist her due to the complexity and risk.

[12] Jack then joined up with Alghoul & Associates to continue the litigation. However, by 2016, the class plaintiffs (principally Garry McLean) were dissatisfied with the lack of progress and ended the retainer. Gowling WLG [Gowling] was then retained and after some initial trouble with the transfer of files and a complaint against Jack to the Law Society, the matter was transferred to Gowling.

[13] When Gowling took over the matter, they obtained a retainer agreement with a 15% contingency fee. That agreement has clearly been superseded by this current arrangement.

[14] Neither Jack nor Alghoul took steps to preserve a solicitor's lien or claim against Gowling. If they have any such rights, they are not a proper matter for this Court to adjudicate. If there had been any fee sharing agreement regarding the class proceeding between Gowling and Jack or Alghoul, the Court would have likely had to approve it under Rule 334.4. However, as no such fee sharing agreement exists, any other claim between Jack and Alghoul and Gowling is a matter under the Manitoba action and a matter within that province (see Bancroft-Snell v Visa Canada Corp, 2016 ONCA 896 at paras 67, 111, 133 OR (3d) 241). The assessment of Gowling's position in this litigation takes into account the fact that they took over a case which had some initial work performed and was a case with considerable complexity, burden and risk.

[16] Approval of counsel fees has become an increasingly more challenging matter. Class Counsel are caught in the unenviable position of being the "client" in the matter of fees.

[17] To assist the Court and Class Counsel and to ameliorate potential criticism of Class Counsel fees, the Court appointed W.A. Derry Millar, an experienced counsel and former Treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada, as Amicus Curiae [Amicus]. As said before, in doing so, the Court is not in any sense expressing or implying concern about the professional standards or ethical conduct of Gowling or the members of the firm responsible for this file.

[18] The Amicus filed a Brief and made submissions in Winnipeg. In carrying out his mandate, the Amicus attended at Gowling's offices to review relevant records. In his Brief, the Amicus confirmed the factors identified by Gowling's counsel as the relevant factors for the Court in assessing the counsel fees. He also confirmed the reliability of the expenses.

[19] In summary, the Amicus agreed with Gowling's position on the relevant factors and the conclusions and confirmed that the fees agreed to are consistent with the applicable case law (including the honorarium of $7,500 to be paid to each of the named plaintiffs).

[20] Through the Settlement Approval Hearing process, some Class Members objected to the proposed fees based on the absolute quantum, often tied into their concerns with the "restrictions" on retaining other counsel in the Settlement. There was little, if any, guidance from the objections as to what a "fair and reasonable" fee should be.

III. Analysis

[21] Gowling advanced two propositions supporting fee approval. The first is that the process taken to negotiate the fee is sufficient assurance to justify approval. The second is the more traditional approach of examining a list of relevant factors to establish that the fees are "fair and reasonable".

[22] In respect of the first proposition - the process - counsel relied on Adrian v Canada (Minister of Health), 2007 ABQB 377, 418 AR 215 [Adrian], in which the settlement was concluded and then the fees settled. That court concluded that because of the process of negotiating a reasonable settlement before the fees were discussed, it was not necessary to review the established factors. There are other cases of similar conclusions.

[23] With the greatest respect to those decisions, this approach is inconsistent with the "hands on" approach courts must exercise in fee approvals and it tends toward the "rubber stamping" so often rejected by courts (see e.g. Baxter v Canada (Attorney General) (2006), 83 OR (3d) 481 at para 12, [2006] OJ No 4968 [Baxter]).

[24] The process is not determinative, but it is an important factor. However, it is still the Court's obligation to ensure that what comes out of a proper process is "fair and reasonable". Therefore, I accept that the process is a positive and important factor to be considered with other relevant factors.

[25] The Federal Court has an established body of non-exhaustive factors in determining what is "fair and reasonable". In Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 82, 293 ACWS (3d) 697 [Condon]; Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at paras 78-98, 281 ACWS (3d) 702 [Merlo]; and Manuge at para 28, the factors included: results achieved, risk undertaken, time expended, complexity of the issue, importance of the litigation to the plaintiffs, the degree of responsibility assumed by counsel, the quality and skill of counsel, the ability of the class to pay, the expectation of the class, and fees in similar cases. The Court's comments follow but it should be borne in mind that the factors weigh differently in different cases and that risk and result remain the critical factors (Condon at para 83).

A. Results Achieved

[26] This is a large class action settlement. The base amount of $1.47 billion to $1.6 billion includes only Level 1 compensation and the Legacy Fund, not Level 2-5 claims. Total compensation is reasonably expected to exceed $2 billion. It also affects a substantial number of people - more than 120,000 Day School survivors. The $200 million Legacy Fund itself is also a significant achievement in amount and purpose that will affect families and communities of survivors, as well as the survivors.

[27] The benefits of the Settlement are set out in the Settlement Approval Decision. They are significant and the result of extensive time and effort in the negotiation of the Settlement.

B. Risk

[28] This was always a risky case. The extent of that risk is confirmed, in part, by the experience (and bankruptcy) of former counsel. The case lay dormant because of the risk and burden of prosecuting the case. Those risks included:

- Uncertainty as to class size;
- Uncertainty as to certification due to the multitude of individual issues;
- A class period that presented challenges of time, diversity and unavailability of witnesses and records;
- The extensive burden of evidence gathering, discoveries, and expert evidence;
- The range of defences available to the Defendant which could limit the class size and breadth of the proceedings;
- The complexity of legal and factual issues in the areas of constitutional and indigenous law including the lack of precedent in a rapidly developing area of law;
- The challenge of derivative claims of Family Class Members including in respect of some provincial laws; and
- The very real prospect of losing some or all of the action at trial.

[29] In Manuge, Justice Barnes emphasized the element of risk. He concluded at paragraph 37 that risk is to be assessed at the time it is assumed by counsel - not with the benefit of hindsight where many may be tempted to say “but this result was inevitable”. If it was, there would have been a number of firms who would have offered to assume carriage of the litigation.

[30] Justice Winkler in Parsons v Canadian Red Cross Society, 49 OR (3d) 281, [2000] OJ No 2374 [Parsons], discussed the risks inherent in these kinds of cases.

> [29] Moreover, class action litigation introduces additional complications. Complex class actions subsume the productive time of counsel. The risk undertaken by counsel is not merely a function of the probability of winning or losing. Some consideration must also be given to the commitment of resources made by the class counsel and the impact that this will have in the event the litigation is unsuccessful. Winning one of two class actions may be a reasonable hallmark of success. However, for the lawyer who's [sic] first action turns out to be a loser, the complete exhaustion of resources may leave him or her unable to conduct another action. Thus the real risk undertaken by class counsel is not merely a simple reciprocal of the “judgmental probability of success” in the action, even if that calculation could be made with any degree of certitude. There is a point in complex class action litigation where, degree of risk notwithstanding, class counsel may truly be, as Mr. Strosberg put it in his submissions, “betting his or her law firm”. This must be considered in assessing the “risk” factor in regard of the appropriate fee for counsel.
>
> [36] It is apparent from the record that even though this litigation was conducted from the middle of 1998 forward as a negotiation toward a settlement, the risks assumed by class counsel were no less real at any point than if that time had been devoted to a disposition through a trial process.

proceeding, a court will not approve a settlement that it does not regard as being in the best interests of the class, regardless of whether class counsel take a different view. Thus, class counsel may find themselves in the position of having committed time and resources to the negotiation of a settlement, that they believe is in the best interests of the class, only to find that the court will not approve the settlement achieved. While this creates a risk simpliciter, it also creates an advantage for a defendant who can successfully extend the negotiations to the point that class counsel's resources are exhausted before making a “final settlement offer” that may not ultimately receive court approval. In those cases, class counsel may have exhausted their resources attempting to obtain a reasonable settlement only to find themselves, as a consequence, unable to pursue the litigation. Accordingly, the risk in a class proceeding is not merely a function of whether or not litigation is anticipated and whether or not that litigation will be successful. Rather, there are risks inherent in the adoption of, and commitment to, any particular strategy for achieving a resolution.

[38] In view of the foregoing, I am unable to accept the contention that there was less risk in this proceeding merely because the parties chose to proceed down a negotiation route. Moreover, contrary to the submissions made by certain of the intervenors, it is apparent that the time and resources committed to the negotiations by the class counsel meant that the risk was increasing rather than decreasing as the negotiations continued. As the parties moved toward a settlement, the negotiations became more difficult as the issues narrowed with the result that the risk of an insurmountable impasse increased rather than diminished. This made the negotiations more perilous as they progressed…

[42] … The expenditures of class counsel in terms of time and money were at risk of loss if any politician in authority decided as a matter of expediency or policy not to settle the class proceedings or decided to unilaterally institute a no-fault compensation program and thereby bypass class counsel and the litigation. There was always the inherent danger that the pan-Canadian settlement would be impossible to achieve, either because of a reluctance on the part of a particular government or a class in a particular action to approve an agreement.

[31] The last point in Justice Winkler's decision is particularly relevant. When Class Counsel took on the mandate, they accepted it without any assurance that politically the case would settle and certainly not achieve this result. Cases with public policy elements have their own unique risk of being caught up in the political debates. In the present case, it was not until October 2017 that the responsible minister received a mandate letter giving some comfort that resolution might be possible.

[32] As the dockets examined by the Amicus confirm, the Class Counsel team devoted substantial time and effort on the file. In addition to the risk of not being paid, those counsel would have put parts of their practice on hold, turning away work and putting the firm at risk of a significant loss.

[33] It is not a requirement of this factor that the firm "bet the farm" (as described in other cases, such as Parsons). That is an unrealistic threshold, but in this case one firm "lost the farm". The financial risk to the firm and to the lawyers is a real risk and a risk that should be rewarded.

C. Time Expended

[34] The record confirms that Class Counsel expended significant time and expense. As of the hearing, the firm had recorded fees of approximately $8 million and disbursements of approximately $470,000. As confirmed by the Amicus, the hourly rates of the six main lawyers were consistent with the year of call and experience of Toronto and Ottawa counsel.

[35] It is estimated that there is likely $2.0 to $2.5 million more in fees and disbursements through to implementation of the Settlement.

[36] Accepting that time docketed would ultimately be about $10.5 million, the agreed-upon fees represent a five times multiplier. However, the use of a multiplier as the basis for approving the fee is not appropriate. As commented upon in Condon and in Manuge, the multiplier may reward the inefficient and punish the efficient.

[37] Nevertheless, it serves as a useful check but nothing more - a factor but not a key one.

D. Complexity

[38] The Settlement Approval Decision discusses to some extent the complexity of the case. It has procedural, evidentiary and legal complexities that encompass a large number of claimants across the vastness of Canada. The administration of the Settlement will continue to require commitment and expenditures because of those complexities.

E. Importance to the Plaintiffs

[39] The affidavits of named plaintiffs like the late Garry McLean, Margaret Swan, Angela Sampson, Mariette Buckshot, Claudette Commanda and Roger Augustine all attest to the importance of the litigation to them and to members of their community.

[40] The thousands of objectors and supporters all confirm, if only by their participation, the importance of this litigation. One cannot ignore its historic importance.

F. Degree of Responsibility assumed by Counsel

[41] This case is somewhat unique in large class action settlements (those exceeding $500 million) because one firm had complete carriage of the case. The usual model has been a consortium of law firms on the plaintiffs' side.

[42] In this case, Gowling assumed complete responsibility for the case. It had to draw upon the expertise of multiple lawyers in a large number of areas of law but particularly in Indigenous law, constitutional law, public law, personal injury law, class action law and corporate/charities (not for profit) law.

G. Quality and Skill of Counsel

[43] There is no doubt as to Gowling's high standing in the legal community and in the areas of law relevant to this litigation. The firm and the Indigenous Law Group in particular have been involved in numerous landmark cases and transactions. It has a number of lawyers from Indigenous communities across the country.

[44] The Court has had an opportunity to observe many of the Gowling lawyers involved throughout this litigation process and has seen their dedication and expertise.

H. Ability of Class Members to Pay

[45] It is obvious that Class Members did not and do not have the ability to pay for the services of Class Counsel. That was clear from the context of the case, and the affidavits of such people as Angela Sampson.

I. Expectation of the Class

[46] It is fair to say that the representative plaintiffs expected to pay 15% of the proceeds obtained in the litigation as fees, and a separate amount for disbursements - all as contained in the Retainer Agreement.

[47] The agreed upon $55 million for fees and disbursements represent approximately 3% of the total Settlement.

[48] The agreed fees, as per the Settlement, are a substantial advantage to the Class Members as the Defendant is absorbing that cost. Nothing is deducted from the amounts going to Class Members.

[49] To this substantial advantage is the further $7 million for the provision of legal advice to individual Class Members. Class Members can obtain legal advice without any deduction from their compensation.

[50] The Retainer Agreement falls away with the approval of the Settlement resulting in a substantial benefit to the Class.

J. Fees in Similar Cases

[51] There is no question that the negotiated legal fee of $55 million is substantial but it must be considered in context.

[52] That fee, in the context of the minimum Level 1 settlement payment of $1.27 billion plus $200 million for the Legacy Fund, represents 3.74% of the value of the Settlement.

[53] That percentage is further reduced by the amounts which would be paid out for Level 2 to 5 claims with no additional amount for fees. It is estimated that the total payout could approach $2 billion for a fee percentage of approximately 2.75%.

[54] In summary, the legal fees will be in the 3% range.

[55] In my view, this range is consistent with other mega-fund type settlements such as "Hep C" (Parsons and related cases at $52.5 million on $1.5 billion settlement, approximately 3.5%), "Hep C – Pre/Post" (Adrian and related cases at $37.2 million on $1 billion settlement, approximately 3.7%), "IRRS" (Baxter and related cases at approximately 4.5%), "60's Scoop" (Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641, 296 ACWS (3d) 36, and Brown v Canada (Attorney General), 2018 ONSC 5456, 298 ACWS (3d) 704, at $75 million on $625-875 million, at its lowest approximately 4.6%), and Manuge at 3.9% (paid by the Class).

[56] To this must be added the $7 million for future legal services. If the amount is not consumed, the remaining balance is paid over to the Legacy Fund.

K. Honorarium

[57] I agree with the proposal to award each of the named plaintiffs an honorarium of $7,500 to be paid out of the Class Counsel fees. Honorariums are given when the representative plaintiff(s) contribute more than the normal effort of such a position - for example, forfeiting their privacy to a high profile class litigation and participating in extensive community outreach (see Merlo at paras 68-74). Honorariums to representative plaintiffs are to be awarded sparingly, as representative plaintiffs are not to benefit from the class proceeding more than other class members (Eidoo v Infineon Technologies AG, 2015 ONSC 2675 at paras 13-22, 253 ACWS (3d) 35).

[58] In this case, there are three representative plaintiffs, Claudette Commanda, Roger Augustine, and Mariette Buckshot, and three additional named plaintiffs, Garry McLean (who was a representative plaintiff until he passed away), Angela Sampson, and Margaret Swan. The Plaintiffs seek honorariums for all six named plaintiffs. The case law cited before the Court only discussed awarding honorariums to representative plaintiffs, meaning those plaintiffs confirmed as representative plaintiffs in the certification order. However, this is a unique case where all named plaintiffs made that extra effort in advancing the claim and essentially took on the role of representative plaintiffs in their instructions to counsel and communication with Class Members. They took the risk of initiating the claim, pursued it to the extent of terminating original counsel, seeking out new counsel, and instructing on the myriad of issues which arose as the case was recast and proceeded through litigation and negotiation.

[59] They put their personal histories out in public to advance the case and they participated in community outreach and countering misinformation about the case - sometimes in the face of personal repercussions.

[60] Further, the honorariums come from the fees Class Counsel have earned. If Class Counsel is content, it serves no useful purpose for the Court to interfere.

IV. Conclusion

[61] For all these reasons, the Court will approve the Class Counsel fee provisions of the Settlement and order Class Counsel to pay $7,500 to each of the six named plaintiffs from the Class Counsel fees when paid out.

ORDER AND REASONS

[1] This matter was certified as a class action for settlement purposes by Order of this Court on January 13, 2017. This class action relates to gender and sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination of women who worked in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police [RCMP].

[2] This is a Motion by the Representative Plaintiffs seeking approval of the terms of the proposed settlement of this class action. The Defendant [Canada] consents to the terms of the settlement. The proposed settlement has a number of features and benefits that extend beyond a strictly monetary compensation scheme and as a result, the Settlement Agreement goes well beyond what the Plaintiffs may have been awarded after a trial.

[3] For the reasons that follow, I approve the settlement, I approve the payment of an honorarium of $15,000 to each of the Representative Plaintiffs, Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson, and I approve counsel fees.

I. Background

[4] On October 6, 2016, the Representative Plaintiffs and the Defendant reached an agreement to settle the claims for gender and sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination of women who worked in the RCMP since September 16, 1974 [Settlement Agreement]. The settlement is national in scope, therefore the Representative Plaintiffs consolidated the action filed in British Columbia in 2012 by Ms. Merlo [Merlo Action], and an action filed in Ontario in 2015 by Ms. Davidson [Davidson Action].

[5] In their claims the Representative Plaintiffs make allegations of gender-based bullying, discrimination, and harassment, which they both experienced while they were employed with the RCMP. The Plaintiffs claim that this harassment and discrimination has impacted their careers within the RCMP and has caused them to suffer physical and psychological damage, personal expense, and loss of income.

[6] On certification as a class action, the primary class was defined to include all female current and former living Regular Members, Civilian Members and Public Service Employees who worked within the RCMP since September 16, 1974. This date is significant as it is the first date on which women were eligible to join the RCMP. Including historical claims is significant as those claims would have been otherwise time barred due to the expiry of limitation periods.

[7] Secondary class members were defined to include those with a derivative claim in accordance with applicable family law legislation arising from a family relationship with a primary class member.

[8] In support of this Motion for approval the parties rely upon the following Affidavits:

- Affidavit of Whitney Santos sworn May 11, 2017 [Santos Affidavit]
- Affidavit of Mandy Ng affirmed May 11, 2017
- Affidavit of Janet Merlo sworn May 10, 2017
- Affidavit of Linda Gillis Davidson affirmed May 11, 2017

II. Key terms of the Settlement Agreement

[9] The Settlement Agreement contains non-monetary and monetary terms.

[10] The non-monetary terms are significant as they represent relief that would not otherwise be available to the class following a trial as they would be beyond the jurisdiction of the court, i.e. institutional change initiatives within the RCMP, a public apology, and the creating of a scholarship. The following from the Settlement Agreement provides an overview of the Settlement terms:

> B. The Plaintiffs and the Defendant ("the Parties") recognize and acknowledge that gender and sexual orientation based harassment, gender and sexual orientation based discrimination, and sexual assault, including physical assault in the course of conduct constituting harassment have no place in the RCMP and wish to enter into this Settlement Agreement to:
> > (a) restore confidence in the RCMP as an organization that values equity and equality;
> >
> > (b) implement measures to eliminate workplace harassment and discrimination in the RCMP; and
> >
> > (c) resolve the Claims of Primary Class Members who experienced and/or continue to experience gender and/or sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination (as defined below) while working in the RCMP during the Class Period;
> C. The Parties agree to: a) implement change initiatives and best practices aimed at eliminating Harassment in the RCMP and increasing equality and b) compensate Class Members who suffered injury as a consequence of that Harassment.

[11] The monetary terms of the settlement are outlined in the Santos Affidavit as follows:

> 11. As described in detail below, the Settlement provides six levels of compensation ranging from $10,000 to $220,000. For women whose claims are assessed at levels 5 and 6, compensation in an aggregate total of up to 10% of the claimant's award will be awarded to their spouses and children.
> Compensation Levels
> 12. The Settlement provides six levels of compensation. Each level sets out a non-exhaustive list of culpable conduct and effect on the victim. The multiple levels recognize that there are many different forms of gender and sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination, and each will have a unique impact on the victim.

> 13. The amount of compensation paid for each level reflects the recoveries class members might recover at trial with some compromise to take into account potential litigation risks (defences, statutory bars, limitation periods, contributing causes, etc.) and the fact that the adjudication process under the Settlement is confidential and non-adversarial. There is also, of course, the benefit of receiving compensation now rather than having to wait for the uncertain outcome of a trial and potential appeals.
> 14. The Compensation Levels and criteria are in Schedule B, Appendix 6 of the Settlement Agreement
> […]
>
> The Claims Process
>
> 15. The Settlement creates a confidential, non-adversarial procedure for assessing claims that is based on document review and claimant interviews. The process is designed to be a safe environment for class members to tell their stories.
>
> […]
>
> Confidentiality
> 24. The Settlement incorporates numerous safeguards to protect the privacy of claimants and to maintain confidentiality in the claims process. Confidentiality was a significant concern for class members, many of whom had experienced retaliation while working within the RCMP after making complaints that they experienced harassment and/or discrimination. The Settlement incorporates multiple measures to protect the identity of claimants, thereby encouraging class members to feel safe when making claims under the Settlement.

III. Notice of Proposed Settlement

[12] Following the certification of the class action, Class counsel undertook an extensive communication plan to advise potential class members of the proposed settlement and to advise them of the date of the settlement approval hearing. The right of class members to object to the settlement and the right to opt out were also detailed in the communications.

[13] At the hearing, I was advised that communications were sent to over 20,000 class members. As well, a copy of the Settlement Agreement had been made available on Class counsel websites and on the Assessor's website.

IV. Issues

[14] The following are the issues for determination on this Motion:

(a) Approval of the Proposed Class Settlement Agreement

(b) Approval of the Notice Plan and Appointment of Assessor

(c) Relief from Rule 334.21(2)

(d) Honorarium to Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson

(e) Class Counsel Fees and Disbursements

V. Analysis

(a) Approval of the Proposed Class Settlement Agreement

[15] Rule 334.29 of the Federal Court Rules, SOR/98-106 [Rules] provides as follows:

Approval	Approbation
334.29 (1) A class proceeding may be settled only with the approval of a judge.	334.29 (1) Le règlement d'un recours collectif ne prend effet que s'il est approuvé par un juge.
Binding effect	Effet du règlement
(2) On approval, a settlement binds every class or subclass member who has not opted out of or been excluded from the class proceeding.	(2) Il lie alors tous les membres du groupe ou du sous-groupe, selon le cas, à l'exception de ceux exclus du recours collectif.

[16] On approving a settlement, the test to be applied "is whether the settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole" (C*ardozo v Becton, Dickinson & Co*, 2005 BCSC 1612, 145 ACWS (3d) 381 citing at para 16 Dabbs v Sun Life Assurance Co of Canada, [1998] OJ No 1598, (24 February 1998), Ontario, 96-CT-022862 (Ont Gen Div) at para 9, aff'd (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 429, 5 CCLI (3d) 18 (Ont Gen Div); Haney Iron Works Ltd v Manulife Financial (1998), 169 DLR (4th) 565, 9 CCLI (3d) 253 (BCSC) at para 27; and Fakhri v Alfalfa's Canada, 2005 BCSC 1123, 47 BCLR (4th) 379 at para 8).

[17] While the court has the power to approve or reject a settlement, it may not modify or alter a settlement (Haney Iron Works, supra at para 22; Dabbs, supra at para 10).

[18] The settlement is judged by a standard of reasonableness, not perfection (Châteauneuf v Canada, 2006 FC 286 at para 7, 54 CCPB 47).

[19] The factors to consider when the reasonableness of a settlement is being assessed have been delineated in a number of cases (Fakhri, supra at para 8) and are addressed below.

i. Likelihood of recovery or the likelihood of success

[20] It is evident from the litigation history of the Merlo and Davidson actions that there are many complex issues with these claims. Success was not guaranteed.

[21] There were various defences available to the Defendant. There was a risk that the Plaintiffs would not be successful at certification or at the common issues trial. Even if the Plaintiffs were able to get over these hurdles, they faced the prospect of appeals and individualized proceedings which could take an additional ten (10) years to complete. For these reasons, the Parties submit that any litigation discount factored into this settlement is outweighed by the potential litigation risks and inevitable delays of carrying on with the litigation.

[22] Furthermore, as part of the settlement, potential barriers to recovery and defences which would have otherwise been available to Canada have been waived.

ii. Amount and nature of discovery evidence

[23] The Parties submit that although this litigation has not reached the discovery phase, Class counsel developed a complete understanding of the underlying facts and circumstances of the claims.

[24] The Santos Affidavit details the steps taken by Klein Lawyers LLP in 2012, in creating a detailed questionnaire that was sent to each potential class member who contacted the firm. In 2014, Klein Lawyers LLP contacted the approximately 150 class members who completed detailed questionnaires. With this information, Klein Lawyers LLP was able to prepare charts illustrating the types of harassment experienced by 147 class members, the impacts of that harassment, and the experiences of class members after reporting such behaviour to the RCMP.

[25] I accept the submissions of Class counsel that even without discovery they had a wealth of information on the nature of the claims they were advancing. They were also well positioned to understand the factual matrix of these claims and the challenges they would face in moving forward with the litigation. Potential bars to recovery were a real risk. These factors informed the decision making process as counsel considered the proposed settlement and provided their recommendations to the Plaintiffs.

iii. Settlement terms and conditions

[26] The Parties submit that the Settlement Agreement is fair, efficient and in the best interests of the class.

[27] The inclusive class definition and a class period that dates back to 1974, provides compensation to class members who would otherwise be barred (because of limitation periods) from successfully pursuing an action. Further, considering the very personal and painful nature of the claims, the settlement process includes a non-adversarial claims process with numerous safeguards to protect the privacy of claimants.

[28] There are 6 levels of compensation, ranging between $10,000.00 – $220,000.00 dependent upon the nature of the conduct and its impact on the victim. Compensation is also available to spouses and children of claimants whose claims are assessed at the two highest levels (level 5 or level 6). The settlement is on a “claims made” versus a “lump sum” basis. This means there is no ceiling or cap on the total compensation that may be paid to members of the class. Therefore there is no risk of depletion of the settlement fund, nor is there any necessity to prorate claims. Simply put, every approved claim will be paid by the Defendant.

[29] At this stage, Class counsel conservatively estimates there will be over one thousand (1,000) claimants with an estimated pay out of approximately 89 million dollars.

[30] In the Settlement Agreement, the amounts allocated for non-pecuniary damages for the psychological injuries caused by workplace harassment is in line with, or exceeds, the amounts awarded in reported cases (Sulz v Canada (AG), 2006 BCSC 99, 263 DLR (4th) 58, aff'd 2006 BCCA 582, 276 DLR (4th) 391; Rees v Canada (Royal Canadian Mounted Police), 2004 NLSCTD 138, 239 Nfld & PEIR 1, rev'd 2005 NLCA 15, 246 Nfld & PEIR 79; Martin v Alberta (Workers' Compensation Board), 2014 SCC 25, [2014] 1 SCR 546; Clark v Canada, [1994] 3 FCR 323, 76 FTR 241; Unger v Singh, 2000 BCCA 94, 133 BCAC 265; Wong v Luong, 2004 BCSC 1489, 135 ACWS (3d) 354; Chancey v Chancey (1999), 86 ACWS (3d) 885, [1999] BCJ No 551 (SC); Kinsella v Logan (1996), 179 NBR (2d) 161, 63 ACWS (3d) 840 (CA). rev'ing (1995), 163 NBR (2d) 1, 55 ACWS (3d) 542 (QB); Nagy v Canada, 2005 ABQB 26, 41 Alta LR (4th) 61, aff'd 2006 ABCA 227, 272 DLR (4th) 601; J.R.I.G. v Tyhurst, 2001 BCSC 369, 103 ACWS (3d) 635, aff'd 2003 BCCA 224, 226 DLR (4th) 447).

[31] The claims process will be handled the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., who has previously administered class actions settlements involving institutional abuse. He also played a significant role in assisting the parties to reach this settlement. He is highly regarded by the parties and they are satisfied that he will act fairly and compassionately in the role as Assessor.

[32] Ensuring a confidential process for claimants is an overarching feature of the settlement because of the nature of the psychological injuries. The settlement also includes a number of confidentiality safe guards which are particularly important for current serving members of the RCMP. The RCMP will not see the claims and they will not know the identity of the claimants. The RCMP designated contact will work from a secured room with access to the physical premises and to the records restricted.

[33] The settlement has strong support from class members. This settlement has a number of benefits beyond financial compensation, including an apology, change initiatives for the RCMP and the creation of a scholarship. These could not have been achieved through litigation.

iv. Recommendations and experience of counsel

[34] Class counsel, Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C., are highly experienced in class action litigation. Both firms have practiced in the specialized area of class action litigation for over 20 years.

[35] They have been involved in this litigation since the claims were filed. They recommend the settlement to Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson based upon a consideration of the benefits of the terms of the settlement as against the risks of continuing with the litigation. Their professional opinions are that the settlement affords the best opportunity for class members to be fairly compensated.

v. Future expense and likely duration of litigation

[36] If this settlement is not approved, the Merlo Action and the Davidson Action will resume. In the Merlo Action, the Defendant objected to certification and the certification hearing took 7 days. In the Davidson Action, part of the claim was struck (2015 ONSC 8008, 262 ACWS (3d) 648). The certification hearing started in 2016 and a decision has not yet been rendered.

[37] Based on the history of those proceedings to date, the Plaintiffs face the prospect of appeals; followed by the probability of further individualized proceedings which themselves may be subject to appeals.

[38] In reality, many years of litigation lie ahead if this settlement is not approved.

vi. Recommendations of neutral parties

[39] The parties concede that they would not have reached this settlement without the assistance of the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., who has been a neutral participant in the settlement negotiations since April 2016.

[40] Additionally the parties were assisted by a number of experts who helped frame the terms of settlement, including the internal change initiatives within the RCMP, and also helped develop the compensation protocol.

[41] Psychologist Dr. Daylen helped to develop the recommended assessment protocol for this matter and proposed the contents of the different compensation levels which later became integrated, with some modification, into the Settlement Agreement.

[42] Professor Llewellyn is a Law Professor with an expertise in restorative justice. She provided guidance on the structure of the settlement process to ensure it was relational and restorative. Her recommendations assisted the parties in including restorative justice features in the Settlement Agreement such as change initiatives and the public apology.

[43] Dr. Berdahl is an expert in organizational behavior and workplace harassment. She was retained to prepare a report for the certification application in the Merlo Action. Her report outlines the necessity for confidentiality in the claims process and she made recommendations on steps to advance positive cultural changes within the RCMP.

vii. Number of objectors and nature of objections

[44] As of the date of the Motion, approximately 20,000 class members were provided with notice of the certification and notice of the settlement hearing. From that mass communication, only three written objections were received. Two of the objections are from individuals who are not included in the class definition. Therefore these were in effect objections to the class definition rather than objections to the settlement. The one other objection was from an individual who objected to the settlement amount on the basis that her claim would exceed the amounts provided for in the settlement. In which case, opting out of the settlement would have been the option open to this particular claimant.

[45] No objections were voiced at the hearing.

viii. Presence of good faith and absence of collusion

[46] Negotiations towards settlement in the Merlo Action started in early 2014 and continued into 2015. In January 2016, negotiations in both the Merlo and Davidson actions were undertaken and culminated in the Settlement Agreement. There were a total of ten in person settlement meetings and numerous conference calls and various forms of other communications.

[47] The Parties explain that this litigation has been ongoing for over five (5) years, and that the successful rounds of negotiations included the assistance of the neutral party the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C..

[48] Legal counsel for the Plaintiffs was assisted throughout the process by a number of experts who made important contributions to the framework of the Settlement Agreement.

[49] Based on the above, I am satisfied that all parties acted in good faith and there is no evidence of collusion.

ix. Communication with class members

[50] Following the certification of this class action on January 13, 2017, a robust notice distribution scheme to potential class members was undertaken. Class counsel estimates that over 20,000 notices were sent out. Notices were also published in newspapers throughout the country.

[51] Class counsel advise that they have been contacted by over a thousand (1000) women wishing to participate in this Settlement

[52] The representative Plaintiffs have also had a hands-on role in the settlement discussions and communication with potential class members.

x. Information conveying to the court the dynamics of, and the positions taken by the parties during the negotiation

[53] The Merlo and Davidson actions were pursued as stand-alone claims and although there was some settlement discussion, both actions continued along their litigation path.

[54] As settlement negotiations in both the Merlo and Davidson actions were brought together, there were several reports addressing the issue of gender harassment within the RCMP. These reports provided the Parties with additional information as to the nature of the harassment problem in the RCMP and the steps that would be required to address the problem.

[55] In early 2014, the Defendant expressed an interest in a global settlement. Negotiations continued through 2015 and 2016. The Settlement Agreement was signed by all parties on October 6, 2016.

xi. Conclusion

[56] Having outlined and considered all the factors above, this Court finds the proposed Settlement Agreement fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole. The Settlement Agreement is approved.

(b) Approval of the Notice Plan and Appointment of Assessor

[57] In addition to approval of the Settlement Agreement, the Parties also seek approval that the office of the Assessor (Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C.) be responsible for disseminating the Notice to class members. The Honorable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., conducted individual interviews and assessments to determine compensation in an out of court settlement for victims of sexual abuse by Catholic priests in the Diocese of Bathurst and Archdiocese of Moncton, New Brunswick. Based on his experience in this role, as well as his many years as a Supreme Court Justice, the Representative Plaintiffs believe that the Honourable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., will fairly assess the claims and will deal with all claimants in a sensitive and empathetic manner. The Honorable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., retained Versailles Communications to prepare a Notice Plan. The Notice will inform class members of how they may submit claims. The proposed manner of distribution for the Notice is the same as the distribution that was approved by this Court for the Notice of Certification and Settlement Approval Hearing.

[58] The Settlement Agreement is posted on the websites of Class counsel (Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C.), as well as on a settlement website which was created by the office of the Assessor (https://merlodavidson.ca/en/).

[59] The Notice will be distributed by:

- direct mail to potential class members;
- posting on the Assessor's website, Class counsel's websites, and the RCMP's website and intranet;
- publication of the Notice in major Canadian newspapers;
- an advertising campaign on Facebook; and
- posting in all RCMP physical premises.

[60] I approve the Notice Plan and I also approve the appointment of the Honorable Mr. Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., as the assessor to administer the settlement and determine which claimants are eligible for compensation pursuant to the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

(c) Relief from Rule 334.21(2)

[61] The Representative Plaintiffs seek relief from the application of Rule 334.21(2) of the Rules, supra, which states:

334.21 (2) A class member shall be excluded from the class proceeding if the member does not, before the expiry of the time for opting out specified in the certifying order, discontinue a proceeding brought by the member that raises the common questions of law or fact set out in that order.	334.21 (2) Le membre est exclu du recours collectif s'il ne se désiste pas, avant l'expiration du délai prévu à cette fin dans l'ordonnance d'autorisation, d'une instance qu'il a introduite et qui soulève les points de droit ou de fait communs énoncés dans cette ordonnance.

[62] They rely upon Rule 55 of the Rules which states:

55 In special circumstances, in a proceeding, the Court may vary a rule or dispense with compliance with a rule.	55 Dans des circonstances spéciales, la Cour peut, dans une instance, modifier une règle ou exempter une partie ou une personne de son application.

[63] They argue that this would be an appropriate case to apply the relief provided for in Rule 55.

[64] This Court has held in Chow v Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [1998] 161 FTR 156 at para 8, 46 Imm LR (2d) 231, in explaining the requirement of special circumstances, that "implicit, in special circumstances is, on the one hand, justice and, on the other hand, that there be no prejudice." This Court further noted in Pearson v Canada (2000), 195 FTR 31 at para 5, 100 ACWS (3d) 44, that "any application of rule 55 must accord with the general principles espoused by the Federal Court Rules".

3 These Rules shall be interpreted and applied so as to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every proceeding on its merits.	3 Les présentes règles sont interprétées et appliquées de façon à permettre d'apporter une solution au litige qui soit juste et la plus expéditive et économique possible.

[66] The Parties submit that the Representative Plaintiffs should not be excluded from this proceeding, since allowing them to participate in the settlement claims process does not cause prejudice, actual or otherwise, upon the Defendant as they will discontinue the British Columbia and Ontario actions upon approval of the Settlement Agreement by this Court. They argue that the application of Rule 55 accords with the general principles of the Rules and specifically encompassed in Rule 3.

[67] The Court accepts these submissions and finds that, in these specific circumstances, Rule 334.21(2) shall not apply to the Representative Plaintiffs.

(d) Honorarium to Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson

[68] The payment of an honorarium of $15,000 to each the Representative Plaintiffs is requested on the basis that this is an exceptional case and the contributions of the Representative Plaintiffs are worthy of recognition in the form of honorarium payment. If approved, the payment will be payable out of Class counsel fees.

[69] This request is based upon their important contributions to this litigation and their considerable time and efforts as the Representative Plaintiffs. They each commenced their own class actions in BC and Ontario, and actively advanced those claims. This included publicizing their personal account of the gender and sexual orientation harassment which they endured within the RCMP. This has required the public re-living of painful events.

[70] They gave their name and gave their face to high profile class litigation and by necessity, they forfeited their privacy for the benefit of many others who can remain anonymous. Being prepared to spearhead such a cause comes at a personal cost and a deprivation of privacy.

[71] They have both travelled for the litigation and Settlement meetings, they have given media interviews to raise awareness of this class proceeding, and encouraged other class members to come forward with their experiences. They have had personal contact with hundreds of potential class members.

[72] In Robinson v Rochester Financial Ltd, 2012 ONSC 911 at para 43, [2012] 5 CTC 24, a list of considerations were identified in assessing whether the representative plaintiff(s) should receive an honorarium, as follows:

> (a) active involvement in the initiation of the litigation and retainer of counsel;
>
> (b) exposure to a real risk of costs;
>
> (c) significant personal hardship or inconvenience in connection with the prosecution of the litigation;
>
> (d) time spent and activities undertaken in advancing the litigation;
>
> (e) communication and interaction with other class members; and
> (f) participation at various stages in the litigation, including discovery, settlement negotiations and trial.

[73] In Eidoo v Infineon Technologies AG, 2015 ONSC 2675, [2015] OJ No 2062, citing at paragraph 13 The Law of Class Actions in Canada, by Warren K. Winkler et al, (Toronto: Canada Law Book, 2014), the Ontario Superior Court explains how usually compensation to the representative plaintiff is appropriate uniquely in situations where the plaintiff has provided services which are over and above the usual duties of a representative plaintiff.

[74] I have no difficulty concluding that this case warrants the award of honorarium to both Representative Plaintiffs, Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson, in the amount of $15,000.00 each.

(e) Class Counsel Fees and Disbursements

[75] Approval of legal fees in the amount of 15% is also sought. Both Representative Plaintiffs signed contingency fee agreements agreeing to pay 33.3%, however, because of the structure of the settlement, class members will only be paying 15% of recovery toward legal fees.

[76] No objections to the legal fees were raised.

[77] The Federal Rules provide:

Approval of payments	Approbation des paiements
334.4 No payments, including indirect payments, shall be made to a solicitor from the proceeds recovered in a class proceeding unless the payments are approved by a judge.	334.4 Tout paiement direct ou indirect à un avocat, prélevé sur les sommes recouvrées à l'issue d'un recours collectif, doit être approuvé par un juge.

[78] In Cardozo v Becton, Dickinson & Co, (supra at para 25), the British Columbia Supreme Court outlined various factors to be considered by the court in assessing the reasonableness of fees. These factors are addressed below.

i. Results achieved

[79] The terms of the settlement have been outlined above and offer advantages for class members which would not have been available had the matter proceeded through litigation. The class and class period are broadly defined, and the claims-made settlement ensures each approved claim will be paid. As well, the confidential and non-adversarial claims process is a significant feature of the settlement process considering the nature of the claims.

[80] The monetary compensation available under the Settlement Agreement is reasonable and within the range of compensation that might be awarded at trial.

[81] The Settlement Agreement also provides for non-monetary benefits for class members, namely, a public apology and the implementation of measures aimed at reducing and eliminating gender and sexual orientation based harassment in the RCMP.

[82] Class counsel also successfully negotiated settlement terms that the Defendant would not rely upon limitation periods or statutory bars to any of the class claims.

[83] Class counsel will also continue to be involved in settlement administration.

ii. Risks undertaken

[84] The litigation risks assumed by Class counsel here was substantial. The fact that no other Canadian law firms filed parallel actions indicated that this matter was seen by other lawyers as being highly complex and unlikely to succeed. Furthermore, Class counsel pursued this litigation to completion on their own rather than with a consortium of counsel from various provinces.

[85] Some of the risks associated with these claims included the fact that there was little accurate information as to the extent of gender and sexual orientation based harassment in the RCMP. Counsel was also aware that securing evidence to advance the claims was likely to require years of contested litigation and discoveries. There was a risk that the class would not be certified given the plethora of individual issues involved.

[86] The Defendant opposed certification of both the Merlo and Davidson actions. Based upon the submissions filed in those actions which were included in the Motion Record, it is clear that Canada was forcefully defending the claims.

[87] These were not claims that had a guarantee of success at the end of the day.

iii. Time expended

[88] The Parties submit that Class counsel diligently litigated the actions and engaged in intense settlement negotiations. Class counsel devoted considerable time and resources to the prosecution of the actions. In some cases, they hired personnel specifically to work on these claims. Many of the class members were interviewed and a total of six experts were retained. Class counsel also covered the costs of disbursements. By taking on litigation of this magnitude, counsel states that they were unable to explore or embark on other potentially lucrative class actions.

iv. Complexity of the matter

[89] This was multi-faceted complex class litigation with substantive legal complexity involving novel claims with potential legislative barriers. Expertise in in the areas of psychology, psychiatry, and the study of gender dynamics and gender and sexual orientation based harassment and discrimination were necessary. Additionally, class members were seeking more than monetary compensation. They wanted a public apology from the RCMP for the harassment experienced by class members, and they wanted to see initiatives and changes implemented within the RCMP to reduce and eliminate harassment. While relief of this nature is outside the litigation realm, these were factors which the class members insisted upon and which added a level of complexity for Class counsel.

v. Degree of responsibility assumed by counsel

[90] The Merlo Action in British Columbia was commenced in 2012 and the Davidson Action in Ontario was commenced in 2015. No other parallel actions were filed. Class counsel assumed complete responsibility for commencing and prosecuting this litigation.

vi. Importance of the matter to the client

[91] As indicated in the Merlo and Davidson Affidavits, this was deeply personal litigation. Their claims were for serious psychological injuries that impacted their lives and the lives of other class members in many diverse and significant ways.

[92] The Plaintiffs also wanted a settlement which would have a lasting impact of the culture of the RCMP by helping reduce the incidents of gender and sexual orientation based discrimination. Their insistence on an apology and change initiatives demonstrates the importance of this this litigation to the Plaintiffs.

vii. Quality and skill of counsel

[93] As noted above, there is no question that Class counsel is highly experienced in the specialized field of class actions. Their experience has been noted in other class action decisions

viii. Ability of the class to pay

[94] Given the nature of the defences raised by the Defendant, class members could likely not have been able to afford to retain legal counsel on a fee for service basis. Of note as well is that Class counsel here did not seek any third party litigation financing in this case. In doing so, Class counsel incurred added financial risk.

ix. Client and the class' expectation

[95] By signing the contingency fee agreements, Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson expected to pay legal fees of 33.33% of whatever they recovered. However, as Class counsel was able to negotiate a contribution from the Defendant toward Class Counsel Fees, the amount for legal fees that will be paid by each class member will only be 15%.

[96] The Notice of Settlement Approval Hearing informs class members that Class counsel will ask the Court to approve a Class Counsel Fee of 15% payable from the compensation awarded to each class member under the Settlement Agreement.

[97] No class member objected to the legal fees.

x. Fees in similar cases

[98] The Parties submit that a contingency fee of 33.33% in a class action has been held to be presumptively valid on the basis of the decisions in Middlemiss v Penn West Petroleum Ltd, 2016 ONSC 3537, [2016] OJ No 2936; Cannon v Funds for Canada Foundation, 2013 ONSC 7686, [2013] OJ No 5825.

xi. Conclusion

[99] I am satisfied in all of the circumstances that the fees meet the criteria for approval and I therefore approve the fees. In addition to being reasonable, the fees are less than those provided for by the contingency fee agreements signed by both Ms. Merlo and Ms. Davidson. I would also note that the fact that Class counsel was willing to act on a contingency fee basis for these claims, which faced a number of hurdles, achieves one of the policy objectives of class proceedings which is access to justice for those who might not otherwise be able to afford legal representation.

[100] Furthermore, pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, the Defendant has agreed to pay the reasonable disbursements. Accordingly there will be no deduction from the amounts paid to the class members for disbursements.

ORDER in T-1685-16

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1) The Settlement of this action as set out in the Settlement Agreement, including the Recitals, and Schedules and Appendices, in Schedule "A" attached to this Order, is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of Class Members, and is approved.

2) The Settlement and this Order are binding on the Parties and on every Class Member, including Persons Under Disability, unless they opted out or are deemed to have opted out on or before the expiry of the Opt Out Period, being March 29, 2017, and are binding whether or not such Class Member claims or receives compensation.

3) The Parties to the Settlement Agreement may make non-substantive amendments to the Settlement Agreement, including its Schedules and Appendices, provided that each Party to the Settlement Agreement agrees in writing to any such amendments.

4) The Notice to Class Members of the approval of the settlement of this action shall be substantially in the form and content attached to this Order as Schedule "B" (the "Notice"). The Notice shall be distributed in accordance with the Notice Plan attached to this Order as Schedule "C".

5) The Notice shall be published within 10 business days of the "Implementation Date", as defined in the Settlement Agreement.

6) The Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, shall pay the amounts required under the Settlement Agreement, including the cost of Notice and administration of the Settlement.

7) The Honourable Michel Bastarache, C.C., Q.C., is appointed as Assessor to administer the Settlement.

8) The Assessor cannot be compelled to be a witness in any civil or criminal proceeding, administrative proceeding, grievance or arbitration where the information sought relates, directly or indirectly, to information obtained by the Assessor by reason of the Settlement or the settlement claims process.

9) No documents received by the Assessor, directly or indirectly, by reason of the Settlement or the settlement claims process, are producible in any proceedings.

10) The RCMP and Canada shall release to the Assessor information and documents required by him or as otherwise required by the Settlement Agreement, including in the Schedules and Appendices.

11) Rule 334.21(2) does not apply to the Representative Plaintiffs, Janet Merlo and Linda Gillis Davidson, and neither is excluded from this proceeding despite not having discontinued the parallel proceedings in British Columbia and Ontario (namely, Supreme Court of British Columbia Action No. S-122255, Merlo v Canada (AG) and Ontario Superior Court of Justice Action No. CV-15-52473600CP, Davidson v Canada (AG) collectively the "Parallel Actions") prior to the opt out deadline.

12) The contribution to Class Counsel Fees payable by the Defendant, in the amount of $12 million plus applicable sales taxes is approved, and is ordered to be paid by the Defendant to Class Counsel within 30 days following the Court Approval Date. The sum of $6 million plus applicable sales taxes will be paid, by wire transfer, to each of Klein Lawyers LLP and Kim Orr Barristers P.C.

13) A payment by each Class Member of a Class Counsel Fee of 15%, plus applicable sales taxes, of the individual compensation paid to the Class Member under the Settlement, is approved. The 15% Class Counsel Fee is not payable on amounts paid to Class Members for reimbursement of out of pocket or travel expenses pursuant to Article 11.04 of the Settlement Agreement. The 15% Class Counsel Fee payable by each Class Member will be calculated by the Assessor who will hold back the Class Counsel Fee and applicable sales tax from the compensation otherwise payable to the Class Member. The Assessor will remit 50% of the Class Counsel Fees plus applicable sales tax to Klein Lawyers LLP and 50% plus applicable sales tax to Kim Orr Barristers P.C. by wire transfer on the first business day of each month for all payments made to Class Members in the prior month.

14) Upon the Court Approval Date, the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, and any and all other applicable provincial and territorial Ministers and governments who are liable for the actions of RCMP members acting as provincial constables under provincial legislation and/or other provincial-federal policing agreements, and their respective officers, agents, servants and employees ("Releasees"), are forever and absolutely released separately and severally by the Class Members from any and all actions, including claims made under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims, grievances and complaints, and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted or which could have been asserted, whether known or unknown, including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses and interest which any Class Member ever had, now has, or may hereafter have, directly or indirectly, arising from or in any way relating to, or by way of any subrogated or assigned right, or otherwise in relation to gender and/or sexual orientation based discrimination, bullying and Harassment while working in the RCMP that occurred during the Class Period (the "Released Claims"), and this release includes any such claim made or that could have been made in any proceeding including the Parallel Actions whether asserted directly by the Class Member or by any other person, group or legal entity on behalf of or as representative for the Class Member.

15) The obligations assumed by the Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, under the Settlement Agreement are in full and final satisfaction of any and all claims by Class Members against the Releasees, including claims made under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, relating to or arising from gender and/or sexual orientation based discrimination, bullying and Harassment while working in the RCMP that occurred during the Class Period.

16) Class Members are barred from making any claim or taking or continuing any proceedings arising out of, or relating to, the Released Claims against any Releasee or other person, corporation or entity that might claim damages and/or contribution and indemnity and/or other relief against the defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, including relief of a monetary, declaratory, or injunctive nature, under the provisions of the Negligence Act, RSO, 1990, c N-1, or its counterparts in other jurisdictions, the Police Act, RSBC 1996, c 367 or its counterpart in other jurisdictions, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the common law, Quebec civil law, or any statutory liability.

17) The Representative Plaintiffs, Janet Merlo and Linda Gillis Davidson, are each awarded an honorarium of $15,000, which will be paid out of Class Counsel Fees.

18) This Court shall retain continuing jurisdiction over the Settlement and its implementation, interpretation and enforcement.

INTERIM ORDER AND REASONS

[1] On this Motion, filed August 15, 2022, the Plaintiffs seek an interim Order against non-parties as follows:

(i) an interim and interlocutory Order that no legal professionals, other than class counsel appointed by this Court, the Plaintiff Assembly of First Nations [AFN], or the Court-appointed administrator, Deloitte LLP, publish a communication to class members relating to these class proceedings without the Court's prior approval obtained on motion made on notice to the parties in these class proceedings; and

(ii) an interim and interlocutory Order that the websites of the Consumer Law Group [CLG] and any other such websites containing communications to class members relating to these class proceedings be removed upon service of the Court's Order herein, pending the disposition by the Court of the Plaintiffs' Motion for relief in the week of November 21, 2022, unless such communications are approved by the Court on motion made on notice to the parties in these class proceedings.

a. Affidavit of Janice Ciavaglia affirmed on August 15, 2022;

b. Affidavits of Wenxin Yu affirmed on August 15, 2022;

c. Affidavit of Kenneth Dennis Brady Dixon sworn on August 11, 2022; and

d. Affidavit of Kim Blanchette sworn on August 15, 2022.

[3] CLG was served with the Motion and filed an Affidavit of Andrea Grass sworn on August 16, 2022. CLG also filed a letter dated August 16, 2022, agreeing to the interim Order.

I. Background

[4] By way of brief background, the underlying class proceedings relate to harms caused by the discriminatory provision of child and family services and essential services to First Nations' children. The class members are children and young adults who have experienced homelessness, substance misuse, disabilities, and encounters with the criminal justice system. The First Nations class members are described by AFN as "some of the most vulnerable individuals in Canadian society".

[5] The parties reached a Final Settlement Agreement (FSA) on June 30, 2022, which, if approved by the Court, will provide $20 billion in compensation to the class members. The Court approval hearing for the FSA is scheduled for September 19, 2022.

[6] In advance of the FSA approval hearing, the Court approved the Notice Plan developed by class counsel to provide class members with detailed information relating to the FSA. This Notice is expected to be published by August 19, 2022.

[7] In the meantime, and prior to the FSA receiving Court approval, CLG, who are not class counsel and who have had no involvement in these proceedings, put information on two websites about the "settlement" and invited class members to "Join this Class Action". Their websites offer contingency fee retainers and request that class members provide personal information - including information about "damages or symptoms experienced".

[8] The Plaintiffs assert the CLG website communications contain misleading information about the class action, the potential settlement agreement, and the prospective claims process. On the CLG websites, there is no reference to or identification of class counsel. Further, the Plaintiffs allege the solicitation of retainer agreements and the request for information about damages or symptoms from class members is exploitative, re-traumatizing, and contrary to the various safeguards built into the FSA and the Notice Plan.

[9] At the hearing of this Motion, legal counsel for CLG confirmed the information relating to these class proceedings has been removed from their websites. A hearing to determine the extent to which non-class counsel may communicate and engage with class members regarding the claims process is set for November 21, 2022. In advance of that hearing, CLG advised the Court that it does not object to the interim Order sought by the Plaintiffs.

II. Issue

[10] The only issue is whether the Court should exercise its discretion and grant the interim Order.

III. Analysis

[11] The relief sought by the Plaintiffs falls within the Court's plenary jurisdiction to manage its own proceedings (Dugré v Canada (Attorney General), 2021 FCA 8 at para 20).

[12] Furthermore, as noted in Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, Rule 385(1)(a):

Unless the Court directs otherwise, a case management judge or a prothonotary assigned under paragraph 383(c) shall deal with all matters that arise prior to the trial or hearing of a specially managed proceeding and may	Sauf directives contraires de la Cour, le juge responsable de la gestion de l'instance ou le protonotaire visé à l'alinéa 383c) tranche toutes les questions qui sont soulevées avant l'instruction de l'instance à gestion spéciale et peut :
(a) give any directions or make any orders that are necessary for the just, most expeditious and least expensive outcome of the proceeding;	a) donner toute directive ou rendre toute ordonnance nécessaires pour permettre d'apporter une solution au litige qui soit juste et la plus expéditive et économique possible;

[13] The Affidavit of Janice Ciavaglia, the Chief Executive Officer of the AFN, speaks to how First Nations individuals have been exploited and re-traumatized in other class action settlements, such as the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (IRSSA). She states as follows at paragraphs 15 and 17 of her Affidavit:

> 15. The AFN and its class counsel have gone to great lengths to ensure that the claims process for this proposed settlement will minimize the risk of re-traumatization to complainants, be as accessible as possible and will not require lawyers to successfully submit a claim. There is no individualized assessment that requires a narrative-form explanation of the claimant's circumstances or the harm suffered in order to establish an entitlement to compensation. Any additional compensation amounts are based upon objective factors. The settlement is designed in accordance with the lessons learned from the IRSSA compensation process, which were documented in a report from the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation…
> 17. Thus, the Parties to the proposed settlement agreement negotiated a crucial component through the appointment of "navigators" which are to be funded by Canada. Navigators will offer community-based, culturally competent support in order to > assist claims members fill out the required documentation and submit a complete claim. This service will not cost anything to the Claimants and no portion of their compensation award will be affected. The involvement of lawyers foreign to the settlement and First Nations communities, acting as "form fillers" is unacceptable to the AFN and raises a serious risk of re-traumatization and revictimization. It may also dissuade some class members from engaging with the claims process at all, as a result of First Nations individuals' past experiences and the legacy of the IRSSA implementation process.

[14] The issues that arose in other First Nations class action settlements are discussed in more detail in Fontaine Estate v Canada, [2014] MJ No 159 and Fontaine v Canada (Attorney General), 2016 ONSC 5359.

[15] With respect to accuracy and reliability of the information on the CLG website, the Affidavit of Kenneth Dennis Brady Dixon is telling. Mr. Dixon is First Nations and states he was aware of the class proceedings and had contacted class counsel to discuss the case. However, when he saw the CLG advertisement, he believed this was how the compensation was being provided and that he needed to sign the CLG retainer in order to claim compensation. When his brother told him the retainer stated CLG would charge 25% of the compensation, he contacted class counsel again, only then learning that CLG was not associated with the class action.

> …The plan is designed to notify the class members of certification and the settlement approval hearing in a trauma-informed and culturally sensitive manner, and to provide them with the opportunity to see, read, or hear the notice of certification and settlement approval hearing, understand their rights, and respond if they so choose…

> The notice plan seeks a proportionate, multi-faceted, culturally appropriate, relevant and trauma-informed approach to notice dissemination… [Footnotes omitted.]

[17] In keeping with the objectives of the Notice Plan, it is vital that the details of the proposed FSA are sensitively and accurately communicated to the members of the class. This will allow class members to make informed decisions about their rights and the claims process. Importantly, class members will be advised that they will not need to retain legal counsel in order to advance a claim.

[18] Therefore, until the Notice Plan has been communicated to class members, allowing non-class legal counsel to provide information on the proposed FSA in a manner that is outside the Court's purview poses a serious risk to the class proceedings.

[19] Based upon the foregoing and considering the applicable legal test from RJR-MacDonald Inc v Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 SCR 311 (as cited in Google Inc v Equustek Solutions Inc, 2017 SCC 34 at para 25 [Equustek]), I am satisfied that:

a. there is a serious issue to be tried considering the history of predatory activity on First Nations class action settlements;
b. the class members will suffer irreparable harm if the Notice Plan is not communicated in a culturally sensitive and trauma-informed manner; and
c. the balance of convenience favours granting the relief.

[20] Accordingly, in my view, it is just and equitable in the circumstances to exercise the Court's jurisdiction and grant the injunctive relief sought against non-parties (Equustek at para 28).

IV. Conclusion

[21] The Plaintiffs' Motion is granted.

INTERIM ORDER IN T-402-19, T-141-20, AND T-1120-21

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. no legal professionals, other than class counsel appointed by this Court, the Plaintiff, Assembly of First Nations, or the Court-appointed administrator, Deloitte LLP, shall publish a communication to class members relating to these class proceedings without the Court's prior approval obtained on motion made on notice to the parties in these class proceedings; and

2. the websites of the Consumer Law Group and any other such websites containing communications to class members relating to these class proceedings shall be removed upon service of this Order, pending the disposition by the Court of the Plaintiffs' Motion for relief in the week of November 21, 2022, unless such communications are approved by the Court on motion made on notice to the parties in these class proceedings.

Civil procedure -- Class proceedings -- Counsel fee -- Premium fee -- Lump sum counsel fee -- Whether fee fair and reasonable -- Criteria for determining whether court should approve counsel fee in class proceedings -- Class counsel applying for court approval of counsel fees after settlement of two class proceedings on behalf of individuals infected with Hepatitis C from Canadian blood supply -- Lump sum counsel fees of $15 million and $5 million respectively approved -- Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6., ss. 32, 33.

Two class proceedings, the "transfused action" and the "hemophiliac action", under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 ("CPA") were brought on behalf on all individuals in Canada, except for those in Quebec and British Columbia, who were infected with Hepatitis C from the Canadian blood supply during the period January 1, 1986 to July 1, 1990. There were concurrent class proceedings in Quebec and British Columbia. All the actions were settled by a pan-Canadian settlement agreement that was approved by the courts in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia and that involved the federal government, which was a defendant, and the provinces and territories, which intervened for the purposes of joining the settlement. The settlement provided for benefits to class members in a global amount of around $1.5 billion and for total class counsel fees of $52.5 million. Over 60 lawyers and legal staff were involved in bringing the proceedings to a conclusion. The class counsel groups in the transfused action applied for approval of a $15 million fee, and the class counsel groups in the hemophiliac action applied for approval of a $5 million fee respectively.

Held, the motion for approval should be granted.

The fixing of fees in a class proceeding is governed by ss. 32 and 33 of the CPA, under which the court may, amongst other things, approve a fee agreement or determine the fees. The CPA permits agreements for the payment of fees and disbursements only in the event of success in a class proceeding. Premium fees in a variety of forms, including a multiplier of a base fee or a lump sum fee, may be awarded to achieve the CPA objective of providing enhanced access to justice. The fairness and reasonableness of any fee awarded is to be determined by the degree of success achieved in light of the risk undertaken by the counsel in conducting the litigation.

In the instant litigation, class counsel produced the best possible result short of a trial. The features of the settlement that provided for individual claim administration and that provided for payments more advantageous to class members than the payment approach commonly applied to personal injury tort litigation enhanced the result and demonstrated the thoroughness of class counsel in fashioning a satisfactory settlement.

As for the risk factor, in the context of the CPA, the fees for undertaking risk in litigation means that there should be a reward for taking on meritorious but difficult matters, and the instant case fell within this category. Although there were political overtones to the litigation because of the involvement of the governments, the risks attendant to litigation generally were present. More to the point, the evidence established that the settlement was driven by the threat of litigation and not by political considerations. The settlement negotiations were litigious as evidenced by the length of time and effort taken to reach a binding agreement. The negotiations were logistically difficult, intense, time-consuming, adversarial, and hard fought. The logistical complexity was overwhelming. The insistence of the government that there be one pan-Canadian settlement of all of the actions meant that any settlement attained required approval of 14 governments, each with differing political agendas and policies, and the class counsel groups in the various actions had their own internal disputes and were by no means speaking in a unified voice at all times. At various times "deal breaking" issues surfaced and the success of the negotiations hung in the balance. And there was no merit in the argument that the risks diminished with time as the negotiations progressed. The expert report filed to support the argument of diminished risks was fundamentally flawed. The probability of success in any litigation cannot be fixed with mathematical precision at any stage of a proceeding. Class proceedings by their nature introduce several features that bear on counsel's risk and that distinguish class proceedings from ordinary litigation. There is the risk that the court will not approve the settlement. There is the risk that the defendant may extend the negotiations and exhaust the resources of class counsel before a settlement can be approved. In the instant case, the evidence was that the risk was increasing as the negotiations continued up until the final judgment was entered. The risk in the instant case was at the high end of the scale of risk.

The fees sought in the two actions were fair and reasonable, and the defendants and intervenors did not put forward any principled or evidentiary basis for reducing the fees. While the fees being sought were substantial, the quantum, in and of itself, does not provide a basis for attacking the fee. The test is whether the fees are fair and reasonable in the circumstances. The policy of the CPA was not to limit the amount of fees but to provide an incentive to counsel to pursue class proceedings where absent such an incentive the rights of victims would not be pursued.

The fairness and reasonableness of the fee can be assessed by a variety of corroborating tests. These involve, variously, testing the fee as a percentage against recovery, as a multiple of base fees, as against the retainer agreements and whether, in the circumstances, the fee will provide sufficient incentive for counsel to take on difficult cases in the future. On the basis of these tests, the fees, although large, were reasonable. Additionally, the fees compared favourably with the fees awarded in other major class proceedings in Canada and the fees would not impair the sufficiency of the trust fund established to provide benefits for class members. Given the risk undertaken and result achieved by class counsel in this litigation, the lump sum contemplated in the retainer agreements were fair and reasonable and accordingly should be approved.

[1] WINKLER J.: -- This is a motion for approval of the counsel fees in two companion class proceedings, Parsons et al. v. The Canadian Red Cross Society et al. (the "transfused action") and Kreppner et al. v. The Canadian Red Cross Society et al. (the "hemophiliac action") commenced under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6 ("CPA"). These actions were brought on behalf of all individuals in Canada, except for those in the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia, who were infected with Hepatitis C from the Canadian blood supply during the period of January 1, 1986 to July 1, 1990. There are concurrent class proceedings before the courts of Quebec and British Columbia for individuals in those provinces. The parties in all of the class proceedings across Canada have entered into a pan-Canadian settlement of the litigation. In reasons released on September 22, 1999, I approved the settlement as it applied to the national classes in the transfused action and the hemophiliac action. The settlement has also been approved by the courts in Quebec and British Columbia as it relates to the actions in those provinces.

[2] The settlement agreement was presented to the courts for approval by all of the parties to the litigation. It contemplated payment of total class counsel fees for all of the actions in the amount of $52.5 million. That figure was used in the actuarial calculations in order to permit the courts to assess the settlement and the sufficiency of the trust fund established for the payment of claims to the class members in the litigation. The Ontario class counsel groups in the transfused action and in the hemophiliac action now bring this motion for the approval of their fees specifically.

Background

[3] The defendants in the Ontario class actions are the Canadian Red Cross Society ("CRCS"), Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario and the Attorney General of Canada. In addition, all other provinces and territories of Canada, with the exception of British Columbia and Quebec, intervened for the purposes of joining the settlement. Only the governments participated in the settlement, the proceedings against the CRCS having been stayed as a result of an order of Mr. Justice Blair in respect of ongoing proceedings concerning the CRCS under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA").

[4] The transfused action and the hemophiliac action were commenced as a result of the contamination of the Canadian blood supply with the Hepatitis C virus ("HCV") during the 1980s. The classes in the actions, however, are described more narrowly as those persons infected by HCV from the blood supply between January 1, 1986 and July 1, 1990.

[5] The classes are confined to the 1986-90 time period because of the basis of the claims asserted in the actions. During the class periods, the CRCS was the sole supplier and distributor of whole blood and blood products in Canada. The federal, provincial and territorial governments ("FPT governments") provided funding to the CRCS and staffed an overseer committee known as the Canadian Blood Committee ("CBC") which was composed of their representatives. The claims in these actions are founded on the decision by the CRCS, and its overseers the CBC, not to conduct testing of blood donations to the Canadian blood supply after "surrogate" testing for HCV became available and had been put into widespread use in the United States. It was alleged by the plaintiffs in both actions that had the defendants taken steps to implement the surrogate testing, the incidents of HCV infection from contaminated blood and blood products would have been reduced by as much as 75 per cent during the class period. Consequently, the plaintiffs brought actions on behalf of the classes described above in which claims were asserted in negligence, breach of fiduciary duty and strict liability as against all of the defendants.

[6] As a result of the pan-Canadian settlement agreement, these claims have been settled, although without any admission of liability on the part of any of the defendants. Pursuant to the terms of the settlement agreement, the class counsel in each of the actions now seek court approval of their fees. This motion is in respect of the fees in the class actions commenced in Ontario on behalf of the national classes. Similar motions have been brought in the actions in British Columbia and Quebec.

[7] The motion was heard over a three-day period during which submissions were made by or on behalf of the class counsel in both actions, by counsel for the federal and Ontario governments and by counsel for certain intervenors and friends of the court. In addition, the parties filed affidavit evidence, transcripts of the cross-examinations on the affidavits and, in the case of the federal and Ontario governments, a document which was purported to be an expert's report in respect of fees. The author of this report was cross-examined and a transcript of the cross-examinations was included in the record.

[8] It was apparent at the conclusion of this extensive hearing that there is agreement among all of the participants with respect to certain facts. These are as follows:

1. The settlement agreement contemplates that total lawyers fees in the Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia actions may amount to $52.5 million. There will be no impact on the sufficiency of the fund to provide the benefits to the claimants set out in the agreement so long as the counsel fees do not exceed this amount.

2. All participants are of the view that class counsel conducted the litigation in a skilful and effective manner and achieved an excellent result for the class members through the negotiated settlement.

3. There is no issue with the total number of hours docketed by class counsel during the proceedings, nor is there any issue with respect to the number of law firms or lawyers engaged in negotiating this settlement on the part of the plaintiffs.

4. The factual account of the conduct of the negotiations as set out in the affidavits of the class counsel group are accepted as being accurate.

5. All participants acknowledge that the class counsel are entitled to a fair and reasonable fee.

[9] Where the defendants and the intervenors part company with class counsel is in respect of the characterization of what, in principle and quantum, constitutes a "fair and reasonable fee".

Law

[10] The fixing of fees in a class proceeding is governed by ss. 32 and 33 of the CPA. These sections provide in pertinent part:

32(1) An agreement respecting fees and disbursements between a solicitor and a representative party shall be in writing and shall,

(a) state the terms under which fees and disbursements shall be paid;

(b) give an estimate of the expected fee, whether contingent on success in the class proceeding or not; and

(c) state the method by which payment is to be made, whether by lump sum, salary or otherwise.

(2) An agreement respecting fees and disbursements between a solicitor and a representative party is not enforceable unless approved by the court, on the motion of the solicitor.

. . . . .

(4) If an agreement is not approved by the court, the court may,

(a) determine the amount owing to the solicitor in respect of the fees and disbursements;

(b) direct a reference under the rules of court to determine the amount owing; or

(c) direct that the amount owing be determined in any other manner.

33(1) Despite the Solicitors Act and An Act Respecting Champerty, being chapter 327 of Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, a solicitor and a representative party may enter into a written agreement providing for payment of fees and disbursements only in the event of success in a class proceeding.

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1), success in a class proceeding includes,

(a) a judgment on common issues in favour of some or all class members; and

(b) a settlement that benefits one or more class members.

[11] The leading Ontario case on the quantification of appropriate fees in class proceedings is Gagne v. Silcorp Ltd. (1998), 41 O.R. (3d) 417, 167 D.L.R. (4th) 325 (C.A.). Goudge J.A., writing for the court, addressed the purpose of awarding premium fees in respect of successful class proceedings. He stated at pp. 422-23:

> [A] fundamental objective [of the CPA] is to provide enhanced access to justice to those with claims that would not otherwise be brought because to do so would be prohibitively uneconomic or inefficient. The provision of contingency fees where a multiplier is applied to the base fee is an important means to achieve this objective. The opportunity to achieve a multiple of the base fee if the class action succeeds gives the lawyer the necessary economic incentive to take the case in the first place and to do it well. However, if the Act is to fulfill its promise, that opportunity must not be a false hope.

[12] Although the issue before the Court of Appeal in Gagne involved a premium fee in the form of a multiplier of a base fee, it has been held that this is not the only acceptable form of premium fee arrangement in class proceedings conducted under the CPA: see Nantais v. Telectronics Proprietary (Canada) Ltd. (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 523, 134 D.L.R. (4th) 470 (Gen. Div.); Crown Bay Hotel Ltd. Partnership v. Zurich Indemnity Co. of Canada (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 83, 160 D.L.R. (4th) 186 (Gen. Div.).

[13] Notwithstanding the different forms that a premium fee arrangement may take, the principle enunciated by Goudge J.A. regarding the purpose of awarding premium fees in a class proceeding has a general application. If the CPA is to achieve the legislative objective of providing enhanced access to justice then in large part it will be dependent upon the willingness of counsel to undertake litigation on the understanding that there is a risk that the expenses incurred in time and disbursements may never be recovered. It is in this context that a court, in approving a fee arrangement or in the exercise of fixing fees, must determine the fairness and reasonableness of the counsel fee. Accordingly, the case law that has developed in Ontario holds that the fairness and reasonableness of the fee awarded in respect of class proceedings is to be determined in light of the risk undertaken by the solicitor in conducting the litigation and the degree of success or result achieved: see Maxwell v. MLG Ventures Ltd. (1996), 30 O.R. (3d) 304, 3 C.P.C. (4th) 360 (Gen. Div.); Windisman v. Toronto College Park Ltd. (1996), 3 C.P.C. (4th) 369 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Serwaczek v. Medical Engineering Corp. (1996), 3 C.P.C. (4th) 386 (Ont. Gen. Div.). This approach was approved by Goudge J.A. in Gagne where he stated at p. 423:

> In my view, [it is correct to focus] on these two considerations. Section 33(7)(b) makes clear the relevance of "the risk incurred in undertaking and continuing the proceeding under an agreement for payment only in the event of success". Section 33(9) invites a consideration of the manner in which the solicitor conducted the proceedings.

Analysis

[14] In my view, there are a variety of methods that may be utilized under the CPA to determine an acceptable premium on fees. It is appropriate to utilize this flexibility in fixing the fees in class proceedings where necessary. Here, class counsel seek to have their fees fixed on a lump sum basis pursuant to the retainer agreements with the representative plaintiffs and the provision in the settlement agreement. While this is acceptable in form, in my view, the court must still adhere to the principles discussed in Gagne in assessing the fairness and reasonableness of the counsel fee, whether that fee is calculated on a lump sum basis or otherwise.

A. Result achieved in the litigation

[15] I will deal first with the success or result achieved in the instant litigation. I note in passing that one of the most striking aspects of the fee hearing was the number of issues upon which all participants expressed agreement. As stated above, it was common ground that an excellent result was obtained for the class members through the negotiated settlement of the litigation.

[16] Nonetheless, the court, in fulfilling its role in the approval of fees, must form its own view of the success achieved. The characterization of the result by the parties and other participants is but one factor to be considered. The court's analysis must be objective. In this regard, I concluded in approving the settlement that class counsel have produced the best possible result short of trial: see Parsons v. Canadian Red Cross Society, [1999] O.J. No. 3572 at para. 91. Moreover, the settlement provides for payments according to the degree of harm suffered by the class members, as well as for progressive increases in those payments to class members should their condition worsen. This avoidance of the "once and for all" lump sum payment approach commonly applied in personal injury tort litigation entails an overriding advantage for class members and consequently must augur favourably for class counsel in any considered analysis of the result.

[17] From the perspective of the class members, however, the total compensation or nature of payment cannot be the only criterion on which to judge the result obtained through settlement. Significant weight must also be given to the relative ease or difficulty of access to the benefits achieved through the settlement by a class member: see also Gagne at p. 425. In this case, a procedure for claims administration has been wrought into the settlement that will see most class members able to obtain compensation without the need for further legal assistance or proceedings. This contrasts favourably with many class proceedings where, despite a global settlement, class members are still required to engage in extensive legal proceedings to obtain the benefits. The relative ease of access to compensation is an important feature. It provides some certainty as to the quantum of compensation that class members will receive at each level, but more so, it demonstrates the thoroughness of class counsel in fashi oning a satisfactory settlement.

B. Risk undertaken by class counsel

[18] I turn now to the risk factor. In the context of the CPA, the premium on fees for undertaking risk in litigation means that there should be a reward for taking on meritorious but difficult matters. Conversely, this does not mean that there should be a reward for bringing forward speculative cases of dubious merit. In my view, the instant matter falls squarely into the first category. Nonetheless, it was strongly contended by the defendants and intervenors that the extra-legal considerations at play in these actions mitigated the risk. The underlying premise for this submission was that this was not litigation in the ordinary sense because the government defendants were inclined to settle for policy and political reasons that had little or nothing to do with the merits of the litigation or the vigorous manner in which it was being pursued. Accordingly, the defendants and intervenors took the position that the risks attendant to litigation generally were not present here. I disagree.

[19] It was common ground among the parties that there were political overtones to the litigation. Nonetheless, to accept the proposition that any extra-legal influence reduced the risk of the litigation would be to engage in a purely speculative, after the fact interpretation of the events that transpired during the course of this litigation. But, more to the point, this proposition is contradicted by the evidence. It is clear that this settlement was driven by the threat of litigation and not by political considerations. This is demonstrated by the chronology of the events, set out in the chart below, leading up to the announcement by the federal, provincial and territorial governments ("FPT governments") on March 27, 1998 that a fund of $1.1 billion would be set aside to satisfy the claims of those persons infected by HCV from the blood supply:

	DATE	EVENT
1.	June 21, 1996	Quebec transfused class action is filed.

2.	September 9 to 11, 1996	The FPT governments announced their decision declining compensation to blood victims.
3.	December 19, 1996	The British Columbia transfused class action is commenced.
4.	October 24, 1996	The FPT Health Ministers announce that they have decided against compensation.
5.	May 22, 1997	The British Columbia transfused class action is certified.
6.	July 7, 1997	There is an agreement on lead counsel for the Ontario HCV class action.
7.	September 16, 1997	Notice of the Ontario transfused class action is given to Ontario and the other provincial governments.
8.	November 26, 1997	The final report of the Krever Inquiry is released.
9.	February 10, 1998	The statement of claim in the Ontario transfused class action is issued on behalf of a national class.
10.	February 23, 1998	The Quebec transfused class action is certified.
11.	March 27, 1998	On behalf of the FPT Ministers of Health the Honourable Allan Rock announces a financial assistance package to persons infected with HCV between 1986 to 1990 of up to $1.1 billion.

[20] It can be seen from this sequence of events that the FPT governments did not make any overtures toward compensating defendants until class proceedings had been certified in British Columbia and Quebec and there was a potential for certification of a national class encompassing all those persons in the rest of Canada in the Ontario proceedings. It must also be noted that even though the announcement of March 27, 1998 could hardly be considered a formal binding offer of settlement, it was only intended to apply to those persons included in the class proceedings. The litigious nature of the settlement negotiations is further evidenced by the length of time and effort taken to reach a binding agreement. Even then, there were still numerous conditions attached because of the desire of the FPT governments to have one pan-Canadian settlement for all of the actions. Furthermore, there has never been any admission of liability by the defendants. Indeed the final settlement agreement contains a specific disclaimer of liability.

[22] In his affidavit, Mr. Elliot chronicles three years of unsuccessful attempts to find counsel in Ontario willing to lead and participate in a class proceeding related to the HCV problems stemming from the contamination of the Canadian blood supply. He deposed that it was difficult to find any law firm, large or small, willing to take on the litigation, especially in the role of lead counsel. It is his evidence that none of the counsel he approached regarded the potential political considerations as altering the fundamentally litigious nature of these proceedings. Their rejections were based strictly on the legal problems which the case presented. He states in para. 41 of his affidavit:

> 41. I believe that there were few lawyers who were knowledgeable about the operation of the blood system in Canada to begin with, and many regarded tainted-blood cases on behalf of plaintiffs as unattractive owing to their > complexity and their prohibitive costs. The trial in Pittman, which was by this time completed, had lasted almost one year. To put the matter simply and directly, the lawyers to whom I spoke well understood that, in relation to this class action and the complex issues of liability, there were simply much easier ways to earn a living. And so they declined to become involved.

His evidence in this respect was not challenged by the defendants or intervenors. In the result, I must conclude that any suggestion that the political implications of the issues made the litigation less risky, apart from being inaccurate, was not apparent to most of the lawyers in Ontario at the outset of the litigation.

[23] In consideration of the chronology of the events in this litigation and the uncontested evidence of Mr. Elliot, I am unable to accept the contention that political considerations operated to either transform this litigation or diminish the risk associated with it in any material way.

[24] This leads in turn to another argument that was advanced by the government defendants. They contended that, even if the proceedings were considered to be litigation in the ordinary sense, the inherent risks diminished with time as the negotiations progressed. In consequence, they submit that any premium on the fee should reflect this diminishing risk. In support of this proposition, these defendants filed the report of Michael Ross, a vice-president of the accounting film KPMG. Mr. Ross, in accordance with his instructions, attempted in his report to apply mathematical parameters, including a factor for changing risk, to the determination of an appropriate counsel fee in a class proceeding. However, this report was less than helpful, in part because of the flaws in the underlying premise that the risk factor in litigation can be ascertained with mathematical precision, and in part because of his fundamental misconception of the nature of a class proceeding and the CPA.

[25] That said, I realize that Mr. Ross was given an impossible task. His assignment was, in reality, to attempt to define a subject with more precision than the subject would bear. As Goudge J.A. stated in Gagne, the fixing of an appropriate fee in a class proceeding is "an art, not a science". As such, the court must be wary of attempts to measure appropriate fees by the application of pseudo-scientific or mathematical methods. Such an approach is inherently unreliable when a subject with as many variables as this litigation is considered.

[26] Mr. Ross based his evidence on the premise that the premium on a fee should be reflective of the "judgmental probability of success" in the litigation. In his opinion, the amount of the premium over the ordinary fees should be a reciprocal of the risk of the litigation. As a theoretical example, this would ensure that counsel taking on litigation with an estimated 50 per cent probability of success would not suffer any economic prejudice if the fee earned in the successful actions was multiplied by a factor of two. For every two actions, one unsuccessful, one successful, that counsel undertake, the fees would balance out and there would be no loss.

[27] This mathematical approach is fundamentally flawed. The probability of success in any litigation cannot be fixed with mathematical precision at any stage of the proceeding. The vagaries of litigation simply do not permit it.

[28] Mr. Ross also propounded the theory that the risk of the litigation changed as it progressed and that, therefore, the premium should reflect the changing risk. While there may be some truth to the assertion that the risk of litigation changes over the course of the proceeding, it must be considered that changes can occur which both diminish and exacerbate risk at different points in the litigation. There is no more prospect of assigning a precise mathematical value to the risk on a segmented, progressive basis than there is at the outset of the litigation.

consideration must also be given to the commitment of resources made by the class counsel and the impact that this will have in the event the litigation is unsuccessful. Winning one of two class actions may be a reasonable hallmark of success. However, for the lawyer who's first action turns out to be a loser, the complete exhaustion of resources may leave him or her unable to conduct another action. Thus the real risk undertaken by class counsel is not merely a simple reciprocal of the "judgmental probability of success" in the action, even if that calculation could be made with any degree of certitude. There is a point in complex class action litigation where, degree of risk notwithstanding, class counsel may truly be, as Mr. Strosberg put it in his submissions, "betting his or her law firm". This must be considered in assessing the "risk" factor in regard of the appropriate fee for counsel.

[30] Equally troubling is the fact that Mr. Ross did not consider the unique features of the CPA in formulating his theory regarding the "judgmental probability of success". This was apparent from the transcript of his cross-examination. For example, it was clear that Mr. Ross did not appreciate the risk induced into class action litigation by the additional element of the requirement to attain certification. In the result, the probability of success or failure on the certification motion was not a factor that Mr. Ross considered. This is a significant omission if his fee theory is to be applied to class proceedings. More importantly, it is illustrative of the inherent unreliability of this evidence and, further, is indicative that Mr. Ross is offering an opinion to the court that is clearly outside his area of expertise.

[31] In the result, I conclude that the report of Mr. Ross is of no value in determining either the risk assumed by class counsel or the reasonableness of the fee in these actions.

[32] The government defendants chose to rely heavily on this report and did not offer any other evidence on the assessment of the risk involved in the litigation. They did not file affidavits from any member of the counsel group that were involved in the negotiations on behalf of the governments, nor did they provide any evidence from any person at a senior administrative level in the governmental departments responsible for the litigation. Instead, the government defendants conceded that the accounts of the negotiations proffered by the affiants deposed on behalf of the class counsel group were accurate. Interestingly in this regard, the government defendants chose to file as part of their evidence the affidavits of class counsel in the British Columbia and Quebec actions.

[33] A picture emerges from the affidavits proferred by class counsel and the government defendants of negotiations that were logistically difficult, intense and time-consuming, adversarial and hard fought. There were obvious points at which potential "deal-breaking" issues surfaced and the success of the negotiations hung in the balance. The various affiants cite examples.

> 107. There was throughout the negotiations and even following the Framework Agreement in December of 1998 the risk that one or more governments would not approve the settlement. It was never clear to me the extent to which the various provinces and territories were represented at the negotiating table. It was clear that to the extent they were represented by one or more lawyers, those lawyers were without authority to conclude a deal.
> 108. Even within the governments, it was not clear who was instructing the lawyers, i.e. Attorneys' General, Department of Justice, Ministries of Health, Cabinet, Treasury Boards, etc. I was concerned that the successful conclusion of any deal depended upon the attitudes and conduct of a phantom group with whom I was not directly speaking. I did not know the extent to which political differences might influence the acceptance or rejection of any settlement. Changes in governments throughout the time only exacerbated this concern.

the transfused action, states in her affidavit:

> 78. During [the] last stages of negotiations additional issues arose, some of which also threatened to undermine the negotiations. Two of the most serious examples come to mind:
>
> (a) The Framework Agreement provides . . . that the [Settlement] Fund would generate interest as if the amount had been notionally invested at the interest rate paid "from time to time on Long Term Government of Canada Bonds from April 1, 1998 for the duration of the Plan." However during negotiations, the federal government took the position that only the T-bill rate should be paid. Class Action Counsel took the position that maintenance of this position by the FPT governments would be a "deal breaker".
> (b) On or about May 9 and 10, 1999, at a negotiation meeting in Vancouver, the FPT Governments raised the prospect of including in the settlement persons who had contracted HCV from immune globulins. The Framework Agreement and all of the ensuing negotiations until that date had not included any reference at all to this group.
> . . . [the Ontario government] took the position that [it] wished to be finished with all HCV blood litigation and thus wanted persons who contracted HCV from immune globulins in the Class Period included in the settlement. Strosberg's response was that there was simply no basis to include these persons in the plaintiffs' class. The end of these discussions came on May 13, 1999 at the Toronto offices of McCarthy Tetrault . . . [when] Strosberg told counsel to the FPT Governments that their insistence upon including recipients of immune globulins in the class was a "deal breaker," that it was their choice, but under no circumstances would he accept this group in the class. Strosberg intended to break off negotiations if the FPT Governments did not yield on the issue. Strosberg and I left that session uncertain as to whether negotiations had broken down. Thankfully, the FPT Governments eventually relented.

litigation was conducted from the middle of 1998 forward as a negotiation toward a settlement, the risks assumed by class counsel were no less real at any point than if that time had been devoted to a disposition through a trial process.

[37] In addition, the legislation enabling class proceedings introduces several features that distinguish these actions from ordinary litigation. One aspect that bears on the risk inherent in class actions is the requirement of court approval of any settlement reached. Protracted negotiations involve a commitment of the time and resources of counsel and the litigants. However, in a class proceeding, a court will not approve a settlement that it does not regard as being in the best interests of the class, regardless of whether class counsel take a different view. Thus, class counsel may find themselves in the position of having committed time and resources to the negotiation of a settlement, that they believe is in the best interests of the class, only to find that the court will not approve the settlement achieved. While this creates a risk simpliciter, it also creates an advantage for a defendant who can successfully extend the negotiations to the point that class counsel's resources are exhauste d before making a "final settlement offer" that may not ultimately receive court approval. In those cases, class counsel may have exhausted their resources attempting to obtain a reasonable settlement only to find themselves, as a consequence, unable to pursue the litigation. Accordingly, the risk in a class proceeding is not merely a function of whether or not litigation is anticipated and whether or not that litigation will be successful. Rather, there are risks inherent in the adoption of, and commitment to, any particular strategy for achieving a resolution.

[38] In view of the foregoing, I am unable to accept the contention that there was less risk in this proceeding merely because the parties chose to proceed down a negotiation route. Moreover, contrary to the submissions made by certain of the intervenors, it is apparent that the time and resources committed to the negotiations by the class counsel meant that the risk was increasing rather than decreasing as the negotiations continued. As the parties moved toward a settlement, the negotiations became more difficult as the issues narrowed with the result that the risk of an insurmountable impasse increased rather than diminished. This made the negotiations more perilous as they progressed. In that respect, one need look no further than to the actual settlement approval process which required a review of the settlement by this court. In order to obtain the approval of this court, modifications were required to the settlement agreement. Although the court took the view that these modifications were "non-material" as that term was set out in the agreement, the federal government took a different view, as related in the affidavit of Ms. Peterson. She deposed as follows:

> 92. After Mr. Justice Winkler's [sic] delivered his reasons on December 22, 1999 counsel for the federal government and counsel for Ontario asserted orally that the modifications he had suggested and the reasons were indeed "material differences".
> 93. After delivery of Mr. Justice Winkler's reasons, counsel for the federal government urged class action counsel to join with him in attempting to persuade Mr. Justice Winkler that his suggested modification relating to the surplus should be abandoned. He told us that if we did not agree he would recommend to the federal government to take issue at Mr. Justice Winkler's suggested modification. He said that, in his opinion, the modification was a "material difference" and that, therefore, there was not court approval of the settlement agreement. He urged class action counsel to make those fundamental choices before the telephone conference he was having with the FPT Deputy Ministers of Health to be held on October 14, 1999. Strosberg believed strongly that the FPT governments would ultimately accept the three modifications proposed by Mr. Justice Winkler. Class action counsel deferred to Strosberg's political judgement and did not agree with counsel for the federal government, and ultimately the FPT govern ments consented to the three modifications. Even after the delivery of Mr. Justice Winkler's reasons, then, fundamental tactical decisions were required and considerable uncertainty remained over whether or not there was actually a settlement.

Clearly the risk continued up until the final judgment was entered.

[39] There was an additional submission by one of the intervenors that despite the fact that there may have been risk associated with the negotiations, there was a general cooperative tenor to the negotiations that lessened the risk. I cannot accede to this submission for several reasons. First, it is contrary to the evidence. J.J. Camp, lead counsel for the class in the British Columbia action, whose affidavit was filed on this motion by the federal government, deposed:

> 95. On July 9, 1998 I had an extensive telephone conference with [government counsel] during which they proposed a new counter offer. The tenor of the discussion at times became quite acrimonious with both sides alleging how disappointed they were with the position of the other . . .

This is echoed in the affidavit of Bonnie Tough, lead counsel for the class in the hemophiliac action. She states:

> 79. Finally, in November of 1998, there was a meeting in Ottawa with Transfused Class Counsel, Hemophilia Class Counsel and counsel for the governments. The meeting was acrimonious and ended with all parties walking from the table in frustration.

[40] But, in any event, risk is not synonymous with acrimony in a negotiation process. Even if the tenor of the negotiations changed somewhat for the better after certain points of contention were resolved, there is nothing in the record which would indicate that these negotiations were anything less than hard fought to the end. As such, they were capable of being derailed at any point, regardless of the level of acrimony between the participants. Indeed, the federal government chose to characterize the negotiations in exactly this manner in its submissions to the court on the settlement approval motion. As stated in the factum filed on that motion by counsel for the

> 106. It is common ground between the parties that the agreement was reached only after an excess of a year of hard fought negotiations between the Parties.
>
> . . . . .
> 108. The March 1998 announcement expressly contemplated that:
>
> "details of assistance will be determined through a negotiation process submitted to the courts for approval. This should ensure fairness. Victims and their legal representatives will be part of this process."
>
> Apart from this direction, however, Ministers [sic] merely outlined certain "principles" and "suggestions" for what the final negotiated arrangement would look like . . .
>
> . . . . .
> 111. Further negotiations and an extensive drafting exercise took place subsequent to the Agreement in Principle which resulted in the Agreement before the court today. There can be no dispute but that the Agreement is the product of intense negotiations between counsel for the plaintiffs and FPT governments.

(Emphasis added)

> [41] Further evidence of the tone of the negotiations, or at least the position taken by the parties, can be found in the affidavit of Ms. Peterson. She stated:
> 79. During the negotiations, counsel for the federal government occasionally observed that the option always remained for the FPT governments, or one or some of them, to legislate a program in place of a court-approved negotiation settlement within the framework of the class actions. This option was always a real and substantial risk for class action counsel and our counsel group.

81. Settlement was always dependant upon formal cabinet approval by all 14 FPT governments. During the negotiations, tensions were palpable among the FPT governments. Counsel for the various FPT governments at times asserted differing, disconsolate positions; so also did class action counsel. Through it all, it became clear to me that, from the FPT government side of the negotiating table, political considerations were as important as legal issues. The concerns about political ramifications was a constant risk, because there were numerous provincial elections and changes in provincial governments (including the creation of a new territory) in the course of the negotiations from April 1998 to October 1999.

[42] While I do not equate acrimony with risk, complexity, on the other hand, breeds risk in any proceeding. In this case, the logistical complexity was overwhelming. The insistence of governments that there be one pan-Canadian settlement of all of the actions meant that any settlement attained required approval of 14 FPT governments, each with differing political agendas and policies. Although obtaining approval from this group alone was daunting enough, the class counsel groups in the various actions on the other side of the bargaining table were by no means speaking in a unified voice at all times. In the transfused and hemophiliac actions in Ontario, the combined class counsel groups were comprised of over 60 lawyers and supporting legal personnel. In addition, the negotiations were played out against the backdrop of changes in the provincial and territorial governments, changes in the Ministers of Health for all of the governments, and political activism directed at attaining a universal settlement for all persons infected with HCV by blood in Canada, regardless of the date of infection. The expenditures of class counsel in terms of time and money were at risk of loss if any politician in authority decided as a matter of expediency or policy not to settle the class proceedings or decided to unilaterally institute a no-fault compensation program and thereby bypass class counsel and the litigation. There was always the inherent danger that the pan-

Canadian settlement would be impossible to achieve, either because of a reluctance on the part of a particular government or a class in a particular action to approve an agreement.

[43] The evidence is compelling. This litigation, notwithstanding the fact that it was conducted as a protracted negotiation, was redolent with risk. Moreover, in so far as it is appropriate to assess the risk assumed by class counsel on a sliding scale or range depending on the nature of the action in comparison to other actions, I am satisfied that the risk enuring to class counsel in these actions should be considered to be at the high end of any such scale.

C. Fair and reasonable fee

[44] A fair and reasonable fee must be reflective of the risk undertaken by class counsel and the result attained for the class in the action. My analysis of those factors is set out in the foregoing. The next step is to determine, through their application, whether the fees being sought by the class counsel groups, $15 million in the transfused action and $5 million in the hemophiliac action, constitute fair and reasonable fees in the circumstances.

[45] In considering this, I cannot accede to the submissions of the various intervenors with respect to the fees. Taking their submissions as a group, the intervenors submitted that fees ranging between approximately $6 million and $11 million should be awarded in the transfused action. In the hemophiliac action, the range of the intervenors' submissions was from approximately $2 million and $3 million. Although the intervenors did not seriously question the allocation of lawyers and legal staff, they did attack the hourly rates of certain counsel. This attack lacked any evidentiary basis, however, and thus must be rejected. The second, and main, submission of the intervenors was that there was a diminution of risk either because of the political considerations or the fact that these proceedings were conducted as a negotiation rather than as a completely adversarial trial process. Since I have rejected these underlying propositions as being unsupported by the evidence, it follows that the submission founded on them must be rejected as well.

[46] I have considerable difficulty with the submission of the government defendants on different grounds. While I have rejected the intervenors' submissions as founded on erroneous assumptions, there was, to their credit, an implicit acknowledgement, and application, within those submissions of the dual factors of result and risk to be considered in determining a fair and reasonable fee. In contrast, the government defendants submitted figures in respect of the fees that represented less than the monetary value of the docketed time of the class counsel groups. This submission was made despite the acknowledgement by the government defendants of the "high degree of competence of the class counsel" and the recognition of the satisfactory result attained for the classes. Further they took no issue with the hours expended by the class counsel groups, the number of counsel within those groups, or the class counsel evidence with respect to the difficulty of the negotiations. The fee proposed by the governments wa s arrived at by combining an arbitrary reduction of the hourly rates of the class counsel group and an addition of a premium of approximately 10 per cent of the reduced amount. If accepted, the net effect of the governments' submission would be to deprive class counsel of any premium, multiplier or reward of any nature reflecting risk or result.

[47] The position taken by the government defendants is untenable. Considered in the context of these proceedings, the fees they propose are not reflective of either the result obtained or the risk undertaken even if just one of those factors were to be considered in isolation. More so however, the fees proposed by the government defendants are at variance with the apparent underlying policy of the CPA and the interpretation of that policy by the Court of Appeal in Gagne.

[48] It was suggested by Mr. O'Sullivan, who appeared on behalf of the class counsel group in the hemophiliac action, that it was obvious that the government defendants' position was driven by political expediency rather than by a sincere effort to assist the court in determining an appropriate fee. In support of this analysis, he provided several press clippings, including some culled from newspaper editions published during the three days of this hearing, that were critical of the fees being sought by the class counsel group. He suggested that the government position, when compared to the positions taken by class counsel and the intervenors, was so far outside the range of reasonableness that it could only be inferred that political, rather than legal considerations must be at play.

[49] Notwithstanding these submissions, it is not within the purview of the court's role on this motion to impute ulterior motives to any party and I make no finding in respect of the submissions of Mr. O'Sullivan. As I stated in my reasons regarding the settlement approval, "extra-legal concerns, even though they may be valid in a social or political context, remain extra-legal and outside the ambit of the court's review . . .".

[50] Nonetheless, the concern expressed over extra-legal considerations may well be symptomatic of a general lack of understanding of the legal framework in which these proceedings evolved. The court was invited to address this issue in these reasons by Mr. Dermody, counsel for the intervenors. He expressed a concern that there was a general misunderstanding regarding the nature of these proceedings that had the potential to create animosity between the class members, their counsel and the FPT governments which might, in turn, erode the salutary benefits of the settlement and reflect negatively on the fair compensation of counsel. This point is well taken.

[51] In addressing the issue, the starting point must be an understanding that the proceedings were litigious in nature and that the settlement offered by the FPT governments was driven by the prospect of an unfavourable determination, however probable or improbable, if the litigation proceeded to a conclusion. There is no evidence to support any assertion to the contrary. In the result, there was nothing untoward in the way that the government defendants or the class counsel groups conducted themselves in resolving the litigation. Hard bargaining is a fact of life in any high stakes negotiation. Outright capitulation from either side of the table is not a realistic expectation. There were arguable defences and a legitimate question as to the ultimate liability of the governments. While recognizing that the victims had suffered a tragedy, the governments, as litigants, always had to bear in mind that they were the representatives of all of the people and the keeper of the public purse. The tension created b y these two concerns obviously complicated matters for the FPT governments and for the class counsel groups. Despite these complexities, the parties persevered through arduous negotiations and reached an agreement to settle the outstanding litigation within a legal framework.

[52] In recognition of the legal framework within which the settlement was negotiated, the agreement crafted speaks directly to the question of class counsel fees in that it stipulates a limit on those fees. All counsel agreed that the fees sought would not exceed $52.5 million in total. The details of the background negotiations that led to this provision are contained in the affidavits of the British Columbia and Quebec class counsel. The government elicited an agreement from the class counsel groups that they would not seek fees on the basis of a percentage of the total settlement and further, that the counsel group would agree to a cap on the total mount of fees. In addition to the other concessions extracted by the governments, counsel were required to surrender any fee agreements that they may have executed with individual class members. Mr. Camp deposes to this at para. 148:

> 148. Under my fee agreement, [the class counsel group] were entitled to charge up to one-third of the settlement amount attributed to the British Columbia class action. Quebec class counsel also had a percentage contingency fee agreement with their representative plaintiff. Class Counsel in both the Framework Agreement and the Settlement Agreement have waived their rights to seek recovery of class counsel fees based on a percentage of the settlement amount. Without doubt, in my opinion, the compromise by class counsel of their right to claim class counsel fees on the basis of percentage of any settlement or judgment, which in my case amounted to up to one-third, was a significant concession which assisted the parties in coming to an agreement.

Mr. Lavigne similarly stated in his affidavit:

> 145. It should be noted that 166 of the 450 victims who are on the M.M.M.F. lists have agreed, by giving a written mandate, a copy of which is attached hereto, to pay a sum amounting to 20% of any amount that was obtained by a judicial process or negotiation process or by government compensation;
> 146. The client's expectations in this respect have been clearly established since 1995 and have always comprised a clear, plain and precise working basis for all of the people who came into contact with our firm;
> 147. This percentage agreement, which is entirely proper and legal in Quebec, has been set aside as regards a claim of 20% in the total amount of the settlement;
>
> 148. In the final quibbling during the negotiations that led to the Agreement of June 15, 1999, the applicant solicitors agreed to this additional concession, which was demanded by the governments, and particularly by the federal government, so that the Agreement could be concluded;
> 149. However, consideration for this was provided: that an agreement would be negotiated and concluded after the Agreement was signed to avoid any question of conflict of interest. Those negotiations have never taken place, and so it is impossible for us to take a position jointly with the respondents regarding the amount of the fees;

[53] A final agreement regarding fees was never negotiated. Nevertheless, in consideration of the negotiated surrender of the individual contingency fee agreements, the undertaking by class counsel not to seek a fee on a percentage basis and the express cap of $52.5 million on total fees, there is no other reasonable conclusion than that there was a tacit understanding between class counsel and the governments that this amount represented a fair and reasonable fee for counsel in the circumstances.

[54] To put this in its proper context, it must be remembered that over 400 of the then identified class members in British Columbia and Quebec had negotiated individual contingency fee arrangements whereby they would have paid between 20 per cent and 33 per cent of any compensation received. This arrangement would produce a counsel fee of over $220 million, at a minimum, if extrapolated against the total settlement and the estimated class size as a whole. In comparison, the cap on fees negotiated by the governments is very favourable indeed.

[56] The fees being sought are substantial. However, the quantum of a counsel fee, in and of itself, does not provide a valid basis for attacking the fee. The test in law, as set out in Gagne, is whether the fees are fair and reasonable in the circumstances. The legislature has not seen fit to limit the amount of fees awarded in a class proceeding incorporating a restrictive provision in the CPA. On the contrary, the policy of the CPA, as stated in Gagne, is to provide an incentive to counsel to pursue class proceedings where absent such an incentive the rights of victims would not be pursued. It has long been recognized that substantial counsel fees may accompany a class proceeding. To this effect, the authors of the Ontario Law Reform Commission's Report on Class Actions (1982) stated at pp. 135-38:

> Critics of class actions often compare the total amount of administrative costs and lawyer's fees with the amount of each class member's claim, and then suggest that these costs and fees have the effect of depriving class members of any significant recovery. However, a comparison of total costs and fees with an individual class member's claim gives a rather myopic view of the issue. A better sense of whether the costs and fees of a class action are reasonable can be achieved by determining the percentage of the class recovery consumed by such costs and fees.

> Empirical data also has been collected concerning the percentage of class recoveries consumed by lawyers' fees alone. [In the United States] the data collected . . . indicates that, in slightly more than fifty percent of the cases for which such information was available, lawyers' fees represented twenty-five percent or less of the recovery, while in only 10.7 percent of the cases did such costs exceed fifty percent of the recovery.
>
> These percentages of class action awards consumed by lawyers' fees and administrative costs do not appear particularly unreasonable, given the complexity of class suits. Moreover, the figures revealed by the empirical studies do not appear to be out of line with the proportion of individual recoveries consumed by lawyers fees and disbursements in individual litigation in Ontario, if the Law Society of Upper Canada was correct in suggesting that Ontario clients tend to receive a "net recovery" reduced by fifteen to twenty-five percent.
> In evaluating the fairness of lawyers' fees documented by the empirical studies, it is important to remember that, at least in the case of individually non-recoverable claims, any attempt to assert the claim through an individual suit would, by definition, consume 100 percent of the claim. Measured by this standard, the proportion of an individual class member's recovery consumed by class lawyers' fees in the United States does not appear inherently unreasonable. Moreover, in some cases, the costs of individual litigation may consume a substantial proportion of even those claims that are individually recoverable and, in such situations, the class action will also result in cost savings, even if the share consumed by lawyers fees remains substantial.

[57] The OLRC Report has been widely acknowledged to be the most sophisticated and extensive analysis of class actions undertaken in the world: see the Report of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform (Ontario, February 1990) at p. 20. The pragmatic approach it displays towards counsel fees in class actions was based on careful study and analysis. It is significant that the authors of the report did not consider counsel fees representing 25 per cent of the total recovery "inherently unreasonable".

[58] However, the appropriateness of a premium fee, whether as a lump sum, as a percentage of the recovery or as a multiplier of a base fee must be assessed against the facts of each case. The adoption of any standard multiplier or percentage fee would undoubtedly result in fee awards that have little relation to the risk undertaken or the result achieved. This was recognized by Goudge J.A. in Gagne. To use these proceedings as an example, notwithstanding the OLRC Report and the typical awards in class proceedings, a fee based on 20 per cent or more of the recovery would be clearly excessive and represent a windfall for the counsel groups.

Disposition

[59] Class counsel in the transfused action and the hemophiliac action seek court approval of "lump sum fees" in the amounts of $15 million and $5 million respectively, and ask that the fees be fixed in those amounts, pursuant to written retainer agreements with the representative plaintiffs. This lump sum method of payment is expressly contemplated by s. 32(1)(c) of the CPA and by the settlement agreement, which provides at para. 13.03:

> The fees, disbursements, costs GST and other applicable taxes of Class Action Counsel will be paid out of the Trust. Fees will be fixed by the Court in each Class Action on the basis of a lump sum, hourly rate, hourly rate increased by a multiplier or otherwise, but not on the basis of a percentage of the settlement amount.

[60] Moreover, it has been held that the contingency fee provisions of the CPA are not limited to a base fee and multiplier arrangement, but instead permit of fee arrangements of various types, including lump sums and as percentages of recovery. In Nantais v. Telectronics Proprietary (Canada) Ltd., supra, Brockenshire J., in approving a lump sum fee, stated at p. 528:

> . . . the special provisions relating to "multipliers" for hourly rates [do not prevent], in any way, other arrangements as specifically authorized under s. 32(1)(c). I view s. 33(1) and (2) as permitting, despite other statutes, all kinds of fee arrangements contingent upon success, and not just hourly rate multipliers.

[61] In Crown Bay Hotel v. Zurich Indemnity Co. of Canada, supra, this court stated at p. 88:

> A contingency fee arrangement limited to the notion of a multiple of the time spent may, depending upon the circumstances, have the effect of encouraging counsel to prolong the proceeding unnecessarily and of hindering settlement, especially in those cases where the chance of some recovery at trial seems fairly certain. On the other hand, where a percentage fee, or some other arrangement such as that in Nantais, is in place, such a fee arrangement encourages rather than discourages settlement. . . . Fee arrangements which reward efficiency and results should not be discouraged.

[62] However, regardless of the manner in which a premium fee is awarded in a class proceeding, whether by lump sum or otherwise, to adopt the words of Goudge J.A. in Gagne, the premium must be one that "results in fair and reasonable compensation to the solicitors" having regard for the risk undertaken and the result achieved.

[63] In Gagne, Goudge J.A. set out a series of useful corroborating tests for analyzing the fairness and reasonableness of the fee. These involve, variously, testing the fee as a percentage against recovery, as a multiple of base fees, as against the retainer agreement and whether, in the circumstances, the fee will provide sufficient incentive for counsel to take on difficult cases in the future. As he stated at p. 425:

> In the end, [these considerations must result] in fair and reasonable compensation to the solicitors. One yardstick by which this can be tested is the percentage of gross recovery that would be represented by the multiplied base fee. If the base fee as multiplied constitutes an excessive proportion of the total recovery, the multiplier might will be too high. A second way of testing whether the ultimate compensation is fair and reasonable is to see whether the multiplier is appropriately placed in a range that might run from slightly greater than one to three or four in the most deserving case. Thirdly, regard can be had to the retainer agreement in determining what is fair and reasonable. Finally, fair and reasonable compensation must be sufficient to provide a real economic incentive to solicitors in the future to take on this sort of case and to do it well.

[64] The first of the corroborating factors is a test of the fee as a percentage of the class recovery. I note that the settlement agreement expressly prohibits class counsel from asking that their fees be fixed as a percentage of the settlement amount. Nevertheless, it remains a valid basis for comparison purposes. The fees sought in the transfused action represent 2.36 per cent of the portion of the settlement apportionable to the Ontario national class victims. The work in the hemophiliac action was for the benefit of all hemophiliacs. The fees sought in the hemophiliac action equate to 3.33 per cent of the total amount of the settlement apportionable to the hemophiliac class members. On this basis, the fees, although large, are more than reasonable.

[65] Second, the fee should be tested as a multiple of the base fees docketed by class counsel. On this basis, the fees sought are consistent with the suggested range set out in Gagne for "the most deserving case". I note that the calculation is made more complex by the fact that class counsel continued to do work necessary to ensure the implementation of the settlement after the date of the expiry of the period for appeal of the approval. The settlement agreement contemplates that additional fees will be paid to counsel for certain administrative work, over and above the class counsel fee, at an hourly rate. However, as stated above, an important consideration in measuring the result achieved is whether or not the job is complete. Accordingly, it is my view that the work that has been performed to date was properly required of class counsel to ensure that the settlement was implemented. Counsel have valued the additional work at approximately $675,000 for counsel in the transfused action and $148,000 for counsel in the hemophiliac action from the end of the appeal period on January 22, 2000 to May 14, 2000. They have made a written submission to the court that their work as class counsel was completed on May 14, 2000. I cannot accede to this submission. While the administration is functional and claims are now being received, processed and paid, some details must still be completed. Thus, there will be no further compensation to counsel for any additional time spent in attending to these matters. The premium fee being sought in these actions is being sought on the basis of a "job well done". The court will not approve an additional fee for this work, or any additional work remaining to be done in order to complete the implementation of the settlement and its administration.

[66] Without considering the value of the "additional work", the lump sum fees constitute a multiplier of 3.57 in the transfused action and 4.29 in the hemophiliac action. When the fees for this additional work are included however, the multipliers are 3.07 and 3.80 respectively. For the hemophiliac action, the base fee and multiplier approach yields a figure at the high end of the range set out in Gagne, but the result obtained for the Hemophiliac class members justifies such an award. The qualifying threshold negotiated by class counsel eliminates a potentially insurmountable burden of proof that those class members would otherwise have faced.

[67] Third, the fees may also be measured by the expectation of the representative plaintiff as evidenced by the retainer agreement. Here, unlike the usual case, the specific amount of the fees were agreed to by reasonably informed representative plaintiffs. Moreover, the retainer agreements executed by the representative plaintiffs are a marked improvement over the individual fee agreements signed by the class members in Quebec and British Columbia.

[68] The fee must also provide a sufficient economic incentive to attract counsel to cases of a similar nature in the future. The words of Goudge J.A. bear repeating. As he stated in Gagne at pp. 422-23:

> The opportunity to achieve a multiple of the base fee if the class action succeeds gives the lawyer the necessary economic incentive to take the case in the first place and to do it well. However, if the Act is to fulfill its promise, that opportunity must not be a false hope.

In the present circumstances, given the difficulty in securing counsel for the classes, let alone the experienced counsel that were ultimately retained, the incentive of a reasonable premium was necessary to ensure that these victims had counsel of the highest calibre without the benefit of whom this settlement could not have been achieved. The lump sum fees set out in the retainer agreements meet this test.

[69] Additionally, the fees compare favourably with the fees awarded in other major class proceedings in Canada as shown by the following chart:

Action	Total Class Recovery	Class Counsel Fees	Percentage of Recovery	Further Legal Fees Anticipated to be Incurred by Class Members
Harrington v. Dow Corning Corp. [1999] B.C.J. No. 320 (S.C.)	$40,000,000	$6,000,000	15%	Yes

Doyer v. Dow Corning Corp. (Sept. 1, 1999), 500-06-000013-384 Sup. Ct. of Que. Tingley J.S.C.	$52,000,000	$10,4000,000	20%	Yes
Nantais v. Teletroncis Proprietary (Canada) Ltd. (1996) 28 O.R. (3d) 523 (Gen. Div.)	$23,140,000	$6,000,000	26%	Yes
Pelletier v. Baxter Health Care Corp.,* [1999] Q.J. No. 3038 (S.C.) (Quicklaw)	$21,525,000	$3,648,000	16.9%	Yes
*combined with Jones v. Baxter Health Care Corp. in Ontario

[70] Finally, the fees, as set out in the retainer agreements, if approved, will not impair the sufficiency of the trust fund established to provide the benefits to the class members. The actuarial report prepared by Eckler and Partners specifically addresses this issue.

[71] These class proceedings have been described throughout as the largest personal injury case in Canadian legal history. The global settlement amounts to over $1.5 billion dollars when all benefits are included. The settlement is pan-Canadian in scope. The defendants include all of the federal, provincial and territorial governments in Canada. The prime defendant, CRCS, is under court protection pursuant to the CCAA. The benefits are to be paid out of a trust fund established for the class members rather than out of the general revenue accounts of the governments. The nature of the benefits provided through the settlement is imaginative and incorporates some of the innovative measures regarding compensation in personal injury lawsuits that courts have been advocating for over 20 years.

[72] The logistics of the litigation must also be considered. It took almost three years to find lawyers willing to undertake the case because of the size and complexity. The investment required of class counsel, and the inherent risk of non-recovery, were daunting. Over 60 lawyers and legal staff were involved in bringing this litigation to a successful conclusion. Neither the governments nor the intervenors challenged the number of people or the hours required of those people to finalize the settlement.

[73] The evidence of class counsel regarding the negotiations was accepted. Indeed, the government defendants echoed the evidence of class counsel in their own submissions on the earlier motion for settlement approval. It common ground that class counsel did an excellent job. There was unanimity as to the quality of the settlement. Further, in so far as there were arbitrary points of contention raised on this motion, the evidence of class counsel on those points stands unchallenged and uncontradicted. Simply put, neither the intervenors nor the government defendants have put forward any principled or evidentiary basis for reducing the proposed counsel fees. Accordingly, I cannot accept their submissions that the fees specified in the retainer agreements should be reduced.

evaluate the relevant factors in light of subsequent events when fixing fees is unfair. A court must, as best as it is able, consider the elements of the litigation as they would have appeared to the parties at the material times. To do otherwise would be inconsistent with the underlying policy of the CPA. Here, the fees sought as agreed to by the representative plaintiffs are large but so were the lawsuits and the settlement. The settlement agreement evidences that the size of the fee was anticipated by the governments who now object. As Goudge J.A. stated, the opportunity for class counsel to receive a premium for taking on difficult litigation and doing it well must not be "a false hope". It is an essential ingredient of the CPA that counsel be provided with a significant incentive to take on meritorious class proceedings. This means that premium fee awards must reflect the reality of the risk and the success of the efforts of class counsel in a meaningful way. Without this, injured parties will be denied the services of the most experienced counsel.

[75] This litigation was of the most difficult kind on a number of fronts. It epitomized risk as that term is used in the context of fee awards under the CPA. It is questionable whether any single member of the class would have had the financial resources to prosecute a lawsuit to a successful conclusion in consideration of the scope, the factual complexity of such a case, the myriad of legal issues that would have arisen and the countless years that such litigation would consume. In contrast, this settlement provides class members with access to immediate benefits without any further legal impediments to their claims. Given the risk undertaken and result achieved by class counsel in this litigation, the lump sum fees contemplated in the retainer agreements are "fair and reasonable".

[76] Accordingly, the retainer agreements in the transfused and the hemophiliac actions are approved. The lump sum fees set out therein are also approved and fixed. Counsel may attend before me to address the matter of disbursements. The final order will address the outstanding work to be done by class counsel.

[77] In light of the magnitude of these actions, and the issues involved, the court permitted and, indeed, encouraged submissions from persons with a stake, in one form or another, in the litigation. The fees submitted by counsel for these stakeholders, identified variously as intervenors and friends of the court, are also approved.

Order accordingly.

Her Majesty the Queen (Defendant)

INDEXED AS: RIDDLE V. CANADA

Federal Court, Shore J.—Ottawa, May 10, 11 and June 21, 2018.

Crown — Torts — Motion for order inter alia certifying action as class proceeding for settlement purposes, approving Settlement Agreement reached in November 2017 between parties (Settlement Agreement) — Loss of culture, language, identity led to loss of personal, collective essence for vulnerable children who were "scooped" from 1951 to 1991 — Foundation proposed in Settlement Agreement to ensure claim of cultural identity bringing about living entity for all Indigenous peoples in Canada, including Métis — Twenty-three class proceedings across Canada existing at different stages in respect of Sixties Scoop —Federal Court, provincial court jurisdictions seized of subject matter — Actions seeking damages for harm caused by alleged breaches of fiduciary, common law duty on part of Federal Crown — Federal Government initiating mediation regarding Sixties Scoop litigation across country — Class counsel, representative plaintiffs recommending that Settlement, Foundation be approved as fair, reasonable, in best interests of class members — Whether Settlement Agreement should be approved in accordance with Federal Courts Rules, r. 334.29 — Legal test to be applied for approval of Settlement is whether settlement fair, reasonable, in best interests of class as whole — Settlement Agreement providing non-monetary benefits that would allow survivors to heal, obtain education, reconcile, commemorate — Foundation would be implemented ensuring that all survivors of Sixties Scoop would benefit from it, including Métis, non-status Indians — Regarding fiduciary duty, common-law duties of care of Canada, Supreme Court of Canada previously holding that more difficult to prove breach of fiduciary duty against government than against private actor — As to legal fees sought, those fees fair, reasonable — Regarding compensation range, proposed sums were meaningful amounts of money as per the evidence — As to capped Settlement Fund, compensation was symbolic payment, not one that could, with any sum, recompense suffering for loss of persona, family, nation, thus identity — While Settlement Agreement only applying to status Indians according to Indian Act and to Inuit, Settlement Agreement fair — Action certified as class proceeding, Settlement approved with modifications as ordered — Motion granted, action against defendant dismissed.

Practice — Class Proceedings — In motion for order certifying action as class proceeding for settlement purposes, for order approving settlement agreement reached in November 2017 between parties, Court having to determine whether Settlement Agreement should be approved in accordance with Federal Courts Rules, r. 334.29; whether legal fees sought fair, reasonable, in accordance with Federal Courts Rules, r. 334.4 — Terms of Settlement Agreement, compensation fund, simple paper-based claims process, non-monetary benefits all compelling factors proving that legal fees fair, reasonable in case at bar — Regarding individual compensation range of $25 000 to $50 000, considering that claimants would not be required to prove harm or loss to receive compensation, proposed sums meaningful amounts of money as per evidence — As to capped Settlement Fund, compensation here symbolic payment, not one that could, with any sum, recompense suffering for the loss of cultural identity — While Settlement Agreement only applying to status Indians according to Indian Act, to Inuit, Settlement Agreement fair — Action certified as class proceeding, Settlement approved with modifications as ordered.

This was a motion for an order inter alia certifying the action as a class proceeding for settlement purposes and approving the Settlement Agreement reached on November 30, 2017 between the parties (Settlement Agreement or Settlement). Subsequent to the conclusion of settlement discussions and the proposed Foundation, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, while at the United Nations headquarters in September 2017 apologized for Canada's most shameful abuse perpetrated towards the Indigenous population. Loss of culture, language and identity led to a loss of personal and collective essence for vulnerable children who were "scooped" from 1951 to 1991. A Foundation was proposed in the Settlement Agreement reached by the class representatives and the Federal Government. The Foundation, by which reconciliation was proposed, was to ensure the claim of cultural identity brings about a living entity for all Indigenous peoples in Canada, including the Métis, by which to claim a return in particular to Indigenous languages, cultures and spiritual traditions.

At the time, twenty-three class proceedings across Canada were at different stages in respect of the Sixties Scoop. The Federal Court and provincial court jurisdictions were seized of the subject matter. These actions sought damages for the harm that was caused not by the court orders but by the alleged breaches of fiduciary and common law duty on the part of the Federal Crown. On February 1, 2017, the Federal Government announced its intention to initiate mediation in regard to the Sixties Scoop litigation across the country. During the mediation, a wide, all-encompassing range of comprehensive topics were discussed and negotiated.

Class counsel and the representative plaintiffs recommended that the Settlement and the Foundation be approved as fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the class members.

The main issue was whether the Settlement should be approved in accordance with rule 334.29 of the Federal Courts Rules.

Held, the motion should be granted and the action against the defendant dismissed.

The legal test to be applied for the approval of the Settlement was whether the settlement was fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole. In order to approve the Settlement, the Court was guided by several factors in the evaluation of the proposed Settlement, including the likelihood of success or recovery with continued litigation; the amount and nature of discovery evidence or investigation; and the settlement terms and conditions. The evidence showed undeniably that bringing closure was critical for the survivors of the Sixties Scoop. It was acknowledged that without a settlement agreement, there lied the uncertainty of further litigation and appeals. The Settlement Agreement at issue provides non-monetary benefits that will allow survivors to heal, to obtain education, to reconcile and to commemorate. In order to do so, a Foundation would be implemented and will ensure that all survivors of the Sixties Scoop will benefit from it, including Métis and non-status Indians. With regard to the fiduciary duty and common-law duties of care of Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada has held that it is more difficult to prove breach of fiduciary duty against a government than it is against a private actor (Alberta v. Elder Advocates of Alberta Society). Finally, the parties addressed the risks that are involved with future delays. Given the survivors' advanced ages, it became highly substantial to carefully consider this factor under the circumstances.

The Court also had to determine whether the legal fees sought were fair and reasonable in accordance with rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules. The Court considered the fact that the fees were discussed during a judicial mediation and that "[t]here is a prima facie presumption of fairness when a proposed settlement is negotiated at arms-length". The fees sought represented approximately 8 percent (equivalent to $75 million) of the total value of the global Settlement Agreement, whereas evidence showed that the applicable retainer agreements mentioned percentage rates of 20 to 33 percent of the total payment. The Court also considered the fact that the litigation was fraught with risk and that the claims in this class action referred to a loss of cultural identity. It accepted that this class proceeding had given rise to specific risks regarding the timing and the uncertainty of potential individual hearings as well as uncertain results at trial. Class counsel and the Federal Government's commitment in the inauguration of the Settlement, and its incessant efforts in negotiating it, was one of the reasons why the result achieved was successful. Class counsel and the Federal Government were able to avoid delays and expensive costs associated with individual hearings by which to compensate class members. Moreover, proof was provided to demonstrate that the results achieved were in fact exemplary. These factors included a significant compensation fund with a simple one-page claims process, as well as non-monetary benefits to the class, including reconciliation, healing and commemorative activities and services in the amount of $50 million by which to begin such work. The parties protected the privacy of the claimants throughout the settlement process. The terms of the Settlement Agreement, the compensation fund, the simple paper-based claims process, as well as the non-monetary benefits were all compelling factors proving that the legal fees were fair and reasonable in the case at bar.

Regarding the individual compensation range of $25 000 to $50 000, it was determined that given that the claimants would not be required to prove harm or loss in order to receive compensation, the proposed sums were meaningful amounts of money as per the evidence. As to the capped Settlement fund at $750 million, it was recognized that no amount of money whatsoever could compensate for a loss of cultural identity. This was a symbolic payment and, not one that could, with any sum, recompense suffering for the loss of persona, family, nation and thus identity.

While the Settlement Agreement only applied to status Indians according to the Indian Act and the Inuit, the Court agreed that the Settlement Agreement was fair. Other elements such as the claimants' ability to retrieve personal records, maintaining a historical archive of stories and experiences, and consultation were discussed.

For these reasons, the Court certified the action as a class proceeding and approved the Settlement with the modifications as ordered. The action against Canada was also dismissed.

I. Overview

[1] This litigation is “historically unique” and was “inherently fraught with risk”. This Court must take into account the fact that the claims in this class action refer to a loss of cultural identity, as it is the first time that this issue has been brought forward in Brown v. Canada (Attorney General) in Ontario in 2009 and acknowledged as such by Justice Edward Belobaba.

> [T]his is the first case in the Western world to hold government responsible for consultation (compensation) when what is at stake is a people’s children’s cultural identity. [T]his is the largest award ever to answer the grievance of a people’s children’s loss of cultural identity.

(Affidavit of M. Brown, at paragraphs 43–44, Exhibit “113” to the Settlement approval affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 252, motion record (Settlement approval), Tab 6(113), page 2107.)

The precedents in Brown v. Canada of Justice Belobaba are historically exemplary in their understanding of cultural identity as essential to the human personality. (The certificate decision is Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 ONSC 5637 (CanLII), 5 C.C.L.T. (4th) 243. The summary judgment decision establishing Canada’s legal liability in tort is Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2017 ONSC 251 (CanLII), 136 O.R. (3d) 497.)

II. Introduction

[2] Subsequent to the conclusion of Settlement discussions and the proposed Foundation, in principle respectively, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau addressed the 72th Session of the United Nations General Assembly at the United Nations headquarters on September 21, 2017. In a historic first, the Prime Minister apologized for Canada's most shameful abuse perpetrated. The Prime Minister specified the devastating legacy of the treatment of the Indigenous population.

[3] On October 6, 2017, Crown-Indigenous Relations and Northern Affairs Minister, Carolyn Bennett, made the announcement as to the Agreement-in-Principle reached on the Settlement and proposed Foundation.

[4] The travesty of Indigenous children "scooped" from their homes, communities and families was already identified and specified in Patrick Johnson's 1983, Canadian Council on Social Development Report and also, in Justice Edwin Kimelman's 1985 report, No Quiet Place [final report to the Honourable Muriel Smith, Minister of Community Services, Winnipeg: Manitoba Community Services, 1985].

[5] The loss of cultural identity of children taken from their traditional homes led to a loss of belonging. Loss of culture, language and identity led to a loss of personal and collective essence for vulnerable children who were "scooped" from 1951 to 1991. The loss of belonging took away the reason and purpose for life of individuals who lost the direction for a life journey before it could even begin. It also led to a sense of not being able to identify, thus, a loss of persona. The attempt to commit "cultural genocide" of entire Indigenous nations, as stated by former Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin, is that which she defined as "the worst stain in Canada's human rights record".

[6] "The most glaring blemish on the Canadian historic record related to our treatment of the First Nations that lived here at the time of colonization". These words were spoken by the former Chief Justice of Canada at the fourth annual Pluralism Lecture of the Global Centre for Pluralism in 2006 ["Reconciling Unity and Diversity in the Modern Era: Tolerance and Intolerance", May 28, 2015, at page 7] (all of which took place under the auspices of the Aga Khan, spiritual leader of Ismaili Muslims, who founded the Centre together with the Federal Government). The Chief Justice continued by categorically stating that Canada had developed an "ethos of exclusion and cultural annihilation".

[7] Let us not forget that which was said by the First Prime Minister of Canada, John A. Macdonald, that it was important to solve the "Indian" problem by having "to take the Indian out of the child".

[8] The aim was to remove aboriginal, religious and social traditions; forbid children to speak their native languages, not allow them to dress traditionally and subject them, thus, to a loss of a sense of belonging.

[9] Most significant when one loses one's roots, one loses the potential for wings, to soar and fulfill dreams, hopes and aspirations.

[10] A Foundation is proposed in the Settlement Agreement [Sixties Scoop Settlement Agreement] reached by the class representatives and the Federal Government. On the Development Board of the Foundation, the undersigned judge is simply there to implement the terms of the Agreement for the Foundation to be transferred entirely into Indigenous hands. As the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, Beverly McLachlin [as she then was], specified a judge is not only to render a judgment but to ensure that it is implemented. A judge is seized to ensure that a judgment is put into effect. The Foundation is to ensure the claim of cultural identity brings about a living entity for all Indigenous peoples in Canada, including the Métis, by which to claim a return to Indigenous languages, cultures, spiritual traditions, in addition to changing the paradigm in Canada in respect of all Indigenous peoples. To ensure that the suffering of the past will not be forgotten; that, every story, that can be told, will be told, to be remembered. That, all be done, for tears recalled of individuals not to be lost to the annals of history, but to be recorded to be remembered. This, for such an aberration never to take place again in that which we call, civilized Canada! Every history text book from primary, secondary, college and university must include this sordid chapter of Canadian history. It is important to recall that justice cannot exist without truth; and, truth cannot exist without compassion.

[11] Reconciliation is proposed by the creation and establishment of the proposed Foundation. Thereby, to build bridges between the generations in Indigenous families and communities; thereby, to ensure that divided generations understand what had happened. The bridges, to be constructed, between the generations in Indigenous families and communities, will then produce a climate by which to understand hidden pain and suffering that caused hurt in subsequent generations. Also, a dialogue is proposed to take place between the children of victims and the children of perpetrators to ensure truth and reconciliation are brought about for a healing of our nation. (This will include the work of health professionals.)

[12] The general population, when aware of abuse, lost its humanity. A loss of conscience was thus perpetrated in the general population aware of the perpetration. Individuals of the Indigenous nations lost their cultural identity which must be made available for a homecoming for those who lost their internal and external homes.

III. Factual Background

A. The Class Actions

[14] Twenty-three class proceedings across Canada are at different stages in respect of the Sixties Scoop. The Federal Court and provincial court jurisdictions are seized of the subject matter. As stated clearly and categorically by Justice Belobaba, these actions “seek damages for the harm that was caused not by the court orders but by the alleged breaches of fiduciary and common law duty on the part of the Federal Crown” (Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 ONSC 5637 [cited above], at paragraph 10). The proceedings, summarized below, reflect the basis of both jurisdictions, federal and provincial, thereon:

(1) The Ontario Proceedings

[15] A proposed class action was initiated on February 9, 2009, in Brown v. Canada (Attorney General). Damages were sought against the Federal Crown and the plaintiffs' motion for certification was conditionally approved by Justice Belobaba of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, on May 26, 2010 [2010 ONSC 3095 (CanLII), 102 O.R. (3d) 493]. Leave to appeal the certification was granted and the Ontario Divisional Court allowed the appeal in December 2011 [2011 ONSC 7712 (CanLII), 114 O.R. (3d) 352].On July 15 and 16, 2013, the parties appeared before Justice Belobaba for the purpose of rehearing the motion to certify the action as a class proceeding and the Court certified that action. On February 14, 2017, the Ontario Superior Court granted a summary judgment to the plaintiff and the class. As part of the 1965 Agreement [Memorandum of Agreement Respecting Welfare Programs for Indians, effective December 1, 1965, between the Province of Ontario and INAC], Canada had a common law duty of care to act reasonably in order to prevent "Indian" children in Ontario from losing their aboriginal identity.

(2) The Manitoba Proceedings

[16] A proposed class action was initiated on April 20, 2009, in Thompson et al. v. Manitoba et al., 2016 MBQB 169 (CanLII), 92 C.P.C. (7th) 83, by the Merchant Law Group. A second proposed class action was initiated on March 13, 2015, also by the Merchant Law Group. A proposed class action was initiated on April 20, 2016, in Meeches et al. v. Canada with Koskie Minsky LLP and Troniak Law. According to the Court, "[t]he selection of the Meeches action and the consortium to act as lead counsel will, in my opinion, best serve the interests of the putative class and the policy objectives of the CPA" (affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraphs 44–45, motion record, Tab 6, pages 190–191). On July 21, 2017, the Manitoba Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal of the carriage order [2017 MBCA 71 (CanLII), 5 C.P.C. (8th) 134]. On October 10, 2017, a National Settlement Agreement-in-Principle had been reached under the auspices of the Federal Court of Canada and the representative class parties; thus, the certification motion return dates were no longer required.

(3) The Saskatchewan Proceedings

[17] A proposed class action was then initiated on August 22, 2011, in Thompson v. Canada by the Merchant Law Group. Another proposed class action was initiated on December 17, 2014, in Blue Waters v. Saskatchewan et al. in Regina also by the Merchant Law Group. A proposed class action on October 7, 2016, in Ash v. Attorney General of Canada by Koskie Minsky LLP and Sunchild Law, was also initiated. In respect of a May 18, 2017 Blue Waters Action, notice of motion was filed to quash the Ash Action appeal. On September 14, 2017, Koskie Minsky LLP informed Justice Keene that the motion for carriage should be adjourned on a sine die basis because an Agreement-in-Principle had by then been reached with Canada on August 30, 2017.

(4) The Alberta Proceedings

[18] On August 18, 2011, an action was initiated in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta in Van Name v. Alberta et al. by the Merchant Law Group. On October 6, 2016, the Koskie Minsky LLP and Ahlstrom Wright Oliver & Cooper initiated in Glenn v. Canada. On September 5, 2017, due to the National Agreement-in-Principle, Koskie Minsky LLP specified to the Court that the decision under reserve was no longer needed.

(5) The British Columbia Proceedings

[19] On May 30, 2011, a proposed class action was initiated in Russell v. Her Majesty the Queen by the Klein Law Firm. Furthermore, on December 16, 2016, another class action proceeding, Tanchak v. HMQ, was initiated by the Merchant Law Group; and on March 24, 2017, a proposed class proceeding, Jones v. HMQ, was also brought forward by the Stephen Bronstein Professional Corporation; and, on May 19, 2017, the Klein Law Firm initiated an application in the British Columbia Supreme Court to have the Tanchak and Jones Actions stayed.

B. The Mediation

[20] On February 1, 2017, the Federal Government announced its intention to initiate mediation in regard to the Sixties Scoop litigation across the country (affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraphs 124–126, 128, motion record, Tab 6, page 203). The Federal Court Dispute Resolution mediation took place by order of Justice Michael Manson of the Federal Court, as dated on May 3, 2017; and then, further, by consent of all plaintiff parties, and the defendant party, the Canadian Federal Government, Justice Michel M.J. Shore, by order of Justice Manson dated May 3, 2018, presided over the motion for settlement approval in the White Action, the Riddle Action and the Charlie Action pursuant to rule 391 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, wherein all parties to the action consented to such with Court approval. During the mediation, a wide, all-encompassing range of comprehensive topics were discussed and negotiated:

a) confidentiality of the process;

b) carriage issues;

c) class definition;

d) class size;

e) existing programs available to status Indians;

f) the comprehensive Foundation and healing, truth-reconciliation issues;

g) the mandate of the Foundation;

h) eligibility;

i) compensation;

j) the claims process;

k) the claims of the deceased;

l) the verification process and the extent of same;

m) administration;

n) notice; and

o) settlement implementation issues.

(Affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 139, motion record, Tab 6, pages 205–206.)

[21] By an order dated January 4, 2018, Justice Michel M.J. Shore consolidated the White, Riddle and Charlie Actions.

C. The Settlement Agreement

[22] Class Counsel and the Representative plaintiffs have recommended that the Settlement and the Foundation be approved by this Court as fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the Class Members. The entire Settlement is found in Appendix A and the Foundation in Appendix B at the end of the reasons for judgment. The essential terms of the Settlement are as follows:

(1) The Foundation

[23] The purpose of the Foundation is to enable change and reconciliation as well as access to healing/wellness, commemoration and education activities for communities and individuals so as to ensure that the events giving rise to the Sixties Scoop are not repeated anywhere in Canada. The Foundation will provide funding for activities and services such as:

- (Reconciliation) assisting Sixties Scoop survivors to reunite with their families and communities;
- (Healing and Wellness) providing them opportunities to gather to participate in sharing and healing activities;
- (Commemoration) organizing conferences and expositions in order to raise awareness about the Sixties Scoop;
- (Education) and establishing scholarships to enable research, publication, learning and teaching in relation to the history of the Sixties Scoop.

(2) Eligible Class Members

[24] To be eligible to make a claim for compensation through the Settlement, one must:

- be a registered Indian (as defined in the Indian Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-5) or Inuit person or person eligible to be registered as an Indian or Inuit who was removed from their home in Canada between January 1, 1951 and December 31, 1991 and placed in the care of non-Indigenous foster or adoptive parents; and

- who was adopted or made a permanent ward and was alive on February 20, 2009.

(3) The Compensation Scheme

[25] At the outset, Canada shall transfer 500 million dollars for payment of claims to the Administrator. Depending on the number of Eligible Class Members, the Administrator will make Individual Payments to each approved claimant in the amount of either a Base Payment or an Adjusted Payment; however, Canada will not be required to pay more than 750 million dollars). Depending on the number of Approved Claimants, each Eligible Class Member who submits a claim shall receive a compensation of maximum $50 000.

(4) The Claims Process

[26] The Claims Process is intended to be simple, paper-based, cost effective, user-friendly and to minimize the burden on the applicant by a one page form. Each Eligible Class Member will receive an Individual Payment by simply submitting an Individual Payment Application to the Administrator.

(5) Releases

[27] The class members agree to release Canada from any and all claims that have been pleaded or could have been pleaded with respect to their placement in foster care, Crown wardship or permanent wardship, and/or adoption.

(6) Opt-outs

[28] Should 2 000 class members opt out, Canada, in its sole discretion, may decide not to proceed with the Settlement Agreement and shall have no further obligations in this regard.

(7) Legal Fees

[29] Canada had agreed to compensate the counsel representative parties to this Agreement in respect of their legal fees and disbursements to significantly lower fees than originally put forward by counsel, through a payment equal to 15 percent of the designated amount plus applicable taxes. Class counsel further agrees to perform any additional work required on behalf of class members at no additional charge. The payment of Class counsel is from a separate Fund, created by the Federal Government, not from the class members.

(8) Settlement Approval

[30] The Parties agree that the Settlement per approval in Brown v. Canada (Attorney General) in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice and in the action constituted in the Federal Court be consistent with the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

IV. Analysis

A. Law on Settlement Approval and Analysis

[31] In this present application, the Court must determine whether the Settlement should be approved in accordance with rule 334.29 of the Federal Courts Rules. The legal test to be applied for the approval of the Settlement "is whether the settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole" (Merlo v. Canada, 2017 FC 533, [2017] F.C.J. No. 773 (QL) (Merlo), at paragraph 16). In order to approve the Settlement, this Court acknowledges that it is guided by the following factors in the evaluation of the proposed Settlement (Châteauneuf v. Canada, 2006 FC 286, 54 C.C.P.B. 47, [2006] F.C.J. No. 363 (QL) (Châteauneuf), at paragraph 5):

(a) the likelihood of success or recovery with continued litigation;

(b) the amount and nature of discovery evidence or investigation;

(c) settlement terms and conditions;

(d) recommendations and experience of counsel involved;

(e) future expense and likely duration of contested litigation;

(f) the number and nature of any objections;

(g) the presence of good faith and the absence of collusion;

(h) the dynamics of, and positions taken during, the negotiations;

(i) the risks of not unconditionally approving the settlement.

[32] The parties argue that the Settlement is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of those affected by it. The parties submit that "[t]he Court with a class action settlement before it does not expect perfection, but rather that the settlement be reasonable, a good compromise between the two parties" (Châteauneuf, above, at paragraph 7). "[A] less than perfect settlement may be in the best interests of those affected by it when compared to the alternative of the risks and costs of litigation" (Dabbs v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 429, [1998] O.J. No. 2811 (QL) (Gen. Div.), at paragraph 30). The parties remind the approving Court that it is not its role to differ from the terms of the Agreement “or to impose its own terms upon them” (Manuge v. Canada, 2013 FC 341, [2014] 4 F.C.R. 67 (Manuge), at paragraph 19). The Court must also refrain from considering the interests of certain class members over the comprehensive interests of the whole class (Manuge, above, at paragraph 5).

[33] It is recognized that the Settlement is presumed to be fair as it is recommended by reputable counsel with expertise (Serhan v. Johnson & Johnson, 2011 ONSC 128 (CanLII), 79 C.C.L.T. (3d) 272, at paragraph 55). In cases such as this, “a Court must ask itself whether it is worth risking the unravelling of the agreement and leaving nearly 80 000 Aboriginal people and their families to pursue the remedies available to them prior to the agreement being signed” (Semple et al. v. The Attorney General of Canada et al., 2006 MBQB 285 (CanLII), 40 C.P.C. (6th) 314, at paragraph 3). According to the evidence, it is undeniable that “bringing closure is critical” for the survivors of the Sixties Scoop (affidavit of Maggie Blue Waters, at paragraphs 67, 92, motion record, Tab 4, pages 101, 109). Other risks may also be involved in cases such as this, where this type of settlement agreement would not be at the heart of this process:

> (a) a national certification order may not be granted;
> (b) a fiduciary duty may be found not to be owed, as in Ontario;
>
> (c) liability might not be established;
>
> (d) statutory limitation periods could bar many or all of the class’ claims;
>
> (e) an aggregate award of damages could be denied by the court forcing class members through lengthy and protracted individual assessment;
>
> (f) proven damages could be similar to or far less than the settlement amounts;
>
> (g) ordering reconciliation, commemorative or healing initiatives, of the nature the Foundation is tasked with, would have been outside the jurisdiction or purview of any court to order.

[34] Consequently, the Court acknowledges that without a settlement agreement, there lies the uncertainty of “further litigation and appeals” (affidavit of J. Wilson (filed under separate cover)). “There is no assurance that at the end of this process [class members] will receive any more than they will get under these Settlement Agreements” (McKillop and Bechard v. HMQ, 2014 ONSC 1282 (CanLII) (McKillop), at paragraph 28).

[35] The parties also submit that the features of the Settlement are reasonable and “multi-dimensional” as they reflect the historical and sensitive nature of these proceedings, as well as the unique circumstances of class members:

> (a) there are both monetary and non-monetary benefits to the class;
> (b) the claims process is simple and paper-based which avoids class members having to re-live their experiences in the same way a trial or examination would require;

(c) the claims process does not require proof of “harm” or “loss”;

(d) certain historical and unprecedented initiatives, to be overseen and implemented by the Foundation, will form part of the settlement, initiatives for the benefit of generations of indigenous persons across Canada;

(e) assurances to be sought from provincial governments that there shall be no social assistance governmental claw-backs on settlement funds received; and

(f) no class member will be required to pay counsel to assist with the claims process, meaning any compensation determination shall not be subject to a legal fee deduction.

[36] As mentioned above, the Settlement presents a paper-based claims process. The most important feature of the Settlement allows class members to complete their forms confidentially without fear of having to testify or appear in a court in lengthy procedures. The evidence reveals that class members are often disinclined to share their tragic experiences publicly to avoid any embarrassment and humiliation (affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraphs 170–172, motion record, Tab 6, page 212).

[37] Another particular aspect of the Settlement concerns the eligibility of class members for compensation. The Settlement Agreement established an Exceptions Committee to ensure payment in compensation to Eligible Class Members, particularly, for long-term placement with non-Indigenous families resulting in cultural loss identity (affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraphs 185–186, motion record, Tab 6, pages 214–215). Evidence on this motion further explains why the provision in the Settlement solves an important issue in respect of the harm experienced by class members:

[T]he settlement is sensitive to the nuance of child welfare law that some indigenous children, who were neither adopted nor made crown or permanent wards, still experience long-term placement in non-indigenous homes, thereby suffering the same harm. There is an ‘exceptional circumstances’ provision within the settlement that answers these persons’ needs.

[38] The parties submit that although “no court has yet recognized the loss of language and culture as a recoverable tort” (Quatell v. Attorney General of Canada, 2006 BCSC 1840 (Quatell), at paragraph 9), compensation should also involve damages for loss of language and culture due to identity loss. It is noteworthy that class members may not, however, obtain a similar benefit through contested litigation. On the basis of a limitations period, the Settlement also intends to avoid injustice by including class members, who were alive as of February 20, 2009; and, their estates can submit claims for compensation in the event that individuals have since passed away. In fact, the parties submit that there is a possibility that the “ultimate limitation” period in each province would legally forbid claims from being heard. For instance, the ultimate statutory limitation period in Alberta is 10 years pursuant to its Limitations Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. L-12, paragraph 3(1)(b). The parties, therefore, reiterate the unprecedented element of this negotiated class definition that claims include events, experiences which occurred between 1951 and 1991. Lastly, the parties submit that class members will receive compensation for their pain and suffering in respect of the culture identity loss; and, it is important to mention that the payment will be considered as non-taxable income.

[39] As previously stated, the Settlement Agreement provides non-monetary benefits that will allow survivors to heal, to obtain education, to reconcile and to commemorate. In order to do so, a Foundation will be implemented in accordance with the Canada Not-for-profit Corporations Act, S.C. 2009, c. 23 (Final Settlement Agreement, Preamble, section 3.01(2)). The Foundation shall ensure that all survivors of the Sixties Scoop will benefit from it, including Métis and non-status Indians. The purpose of the Foundation is to continue to assist survivors, as well as all Indigenous communities and individuals, on their journey of change, healing and reconciliation (Final Settlement Agreement, Preamble, section 3.01(3) [Sixties Scoop Settlement Agreement, November 2017]). “If the matter proceeds to trial, the non-monetary issues would be outside the jurisdiction of the Court” to grant (Rideout v. Health Labrador Corp., 2007 NLTD 150 (CanLII), 279 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 90, at paragraph 70). The Foundation provides “an invaluable opportunity for Canada-at-large, and especially indigenous people, … by ensuring that those harms are not ever repeated” (affidavit of Dr. R. Sinclair, at paragraphs 7–9, Exhibit “115” to the affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, motion record, Tab 6(115), page 2177).

[40] With regard to the fiduciary duty and common-law duties of care of Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada has held that it is more difficult to prove breach of fiduciary duty against a government than it is against a private actor (Alberta v. Elder Advocates of Alberta Society, 2011 SCC 24, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 261, at paragraph 62). In fact, in a trial context, the plaintiffs would have had to demonstrate that either (i) the fiduciary duty arose as a result of Canada’s assumption of discretionary control over a specific Aboriginal interest, or (ii) that there had been an undertaking by Canada to act in the best interests of the class members (Wewaykum Indian Band v. Canada, 2002 SCC 79, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 245, at paragraphs 80 and 85). Bearing this in mind, in Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2017 ONSC 251 [cited above] [at paragraph 1], at paragraph 68, Justice Belobaba concluded in the same vein on the notion of fiduciary duty:

> In my view, a fiduciary duty under the first category cannot be established in this case. The aboriginal interest in question is not an interest in land and the action herein is not being advanced as a communal claim but as a class action seeking individualized redress.

[41] Finally, the parties address the risks that are involved with future delays. Given the survivors’ advanced ages, it becomes highly substantial to carefully consider this factor under the circumstances (McKillop, above, at paragraph 28). “[I]t is apparent that the time and resources committed to the negotiations by the class counsel meant that the risk was increasing rather than decreasing as the negotiations continued” (Parsons v. Canadian Red Cross Society (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 281, [2000] O.J. No. 2374 (QL)

(Sup. Ct.), at paragraphs 37–38). The parties submit that their recommendations ought to be approved, because “the closer that class counsel is to trial, the more credible are their assertions about risk and reward. The closer the trial, the more likely that the class action settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class” (Clegg v. HMQ Ontario, 2016 ONSC 2662 (CanLII), at paragraphs 34–35).

B. Legal Framework on the Fees and Analysis

[42] In order for this Court to determine whether the legal fees sought are fair and reasonable, in accordance with rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules (Manuge, above, at paragraph 28), the following factors are to be taken into account by the Court (Smith Estate v. National Money Mart Co., 2011 ONCA 233, 106 O.R. (3d) 37, at paragraph 80):

(a) the legal and factual complexities of the action;

(b) the risks undertaken, including that the action might not be certified;

(c) the degree of responsibility assumed by Class Counsel;

(d) the monetary value of the matters at issue;

(e) skill and competence demonstrated by Class Counsel;

(f) the results achieved;

(g) ability of the class to pay and the class expectations of fees;

(h) the opportunity cost to Class Counsel in the expenditure of time in pursuit of the litigation.

[43] The Court has considered the fact that the fees were discussed during a judicial mediation and that “[t]here is a prima facie presumption of fairness when a proposed settlement is negotiated at arms-length” (CC&L Dedicated Enterprise Fund (Trustee of) v. Fisherman, 2002 CanLII 49647, [2002] O.J. No. 1855 (QL) (Sup. Ct.), at paragraph 18).

[44] Firstly, the parties submit the total legal fee amount represents less than 10 percent of the overall global payment of the defendant (affidavit of J. Wilson, at paragraph 79, page 15 (filed under separate cover)). The fees sought represent approximately 8 percent (equivalent to $75 million) of the total value of the global Settlement Agreement, whereas evidence shows that the applicable Retainer Agreements mention percentage rates of 20 percent to 33 percent of the total payment (affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 107, motion record (Fee Approval), Tab 6, page 114). The “use of a percentage [for Class Counsel Fees] appears to be preferred because it tends to reward success and to promote early settlement” (Manuge, above, at paragraph 47). This Court did consider previously approved percentages by different Courts in other cases, namely in Dolmage, McKillop and Bechard v. HMQ, 2014 ONSC 1283 (CanLII), with an approval of 20.68 percent and in Stanway v. Wyeth Canada Inc., 2015 BCSC 983, with 33.33 percent.

[45] Secondly, the Court acknowledges the parties' insistence on the importance of providing free legal assistance to any claimant in need of assistance throughout the claims process. The parties have agreed to respect the provision (section 11.02) contained in the Settlement Agreement in this regard. Without the prior approval of the Federal Court, this provision is intended to ensure "that individual class members will get to keep the full amount of the compensation awarded to them under the settlement" (affidavit of C. Charlie, at paragraph 12, motion record (Fee Approval), Tab 2, page 11). By providing claimants with an assistance of counsel at no charge, Counsel will need to be at their disposal for the next 12 to 18 months until the enactment of the Settlement in order to assist class members with claim forms and to communicate with them in case they have questions (Fee Approval Affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 59, motion record (Fee Approval), Tab 6, pages 103–104).

[46] Thirdly, this litigation is "historically unique" and was "inherently fraught with risk". This Court must take into account the fact that the claims in this class action refer to a loss of cultural identity, as it is the first time that this issue has been brought forward in Brown v. Canada (Attorney General) in Ontario in 2009 and acknowledged as such by Justice Belobaba.

> [T]his is the first case in the Western world to hold government responsible for consultation when what is at stake is a people's children's cultural identity. [T]his is the largest award ever to answer the grievance of a people's children's loss of cultural identity.

[48] The Court also accepts the "risk of continued and perpetual delay in obtaining relief". Class members can benefit from the proposed settlement on which Class Counsel had worked. "Given the advanced age of class members and the historical nature of this litigation, the benefits of an immediate and certain settlement cannot be overstated" (McKillop, above, at paragraph 28). This class action implicates a historical event that began in 1951 and "inherent delays would result in additional prejudice to the aging class members, and accordingly, a denial of access to justice" (Anderson v. Canada (Attorney General), 2016 NLTD(G) 179, at paragraph 53). The Court accepts that this class proceeding has given rise to specific risks with regard to the timing and the uncertainty of potential individual hearings, as well as uncertain results at trial. Class counsel and the Federal Government's commitment in the inauguration of this Settlement, as well as its incessant efforts in negotiating the Settlement, is one of the reasons why the result achieved was successful. Class Counsel and the Federal Government were able to avoid delays and expensive costs associated with individual hearings by which to compensate class members.

[49] Class Counsel provided proof to this Court in order to demonstrate that the results achieved are in fact exemplary. These factors include a significant compensation fund with a simple one-page claims process, as well as non-monetary benefits to the class, including reconciliation, healing and commemorative activities and services in the amount of $50 million by which to begin such work. The parties protected the privacy of the claimants throughout the settlement process (Merlo, above, at paragraph 27). The terms of the Settlement Agreement, the compensation fund, the simple paper-based claims process, as well as the non-monetary benefits are all compelling factors which prove that the legal fees are fair and reasonable in the case at bar:

> [N]o legal victory in a courtroom could ever hope to do this. This Court is not equipped to address the holistic healing perspectives of the individual, his or her family and the community.

[50] Lastly, the legal fees are intended to "encourage counsel to take on difficult and risky class action litigation" (Abdulrahim v. Air France, 2011 ONSC 512 (CanLII), 16 C.P.C. (7th) 289, at paragraph 9). It was also concluded in Griffin v. Dell Canada Inc., 2011 ONSC 3292 (CanLII), 38 C.P.C. (7th) 86, [2011] O.J. No. 2487 (QL) (Sup. Ct.), at paragraph 53 that "class actions simply will not be undertaken by first rate lawyers … unless they are assured of receiving fair — and … 'generous' — compensation in appropriate cases".

C. Opposition to the Settlement

(1) The right to opt-out

[51] Class members, as individuals, may opt out assuming that they are not in agreement with the proposed Settlement. "If they do so, they must then accept all of the risks and disadvantages associated with pursuit of this litigation in the courts" (Fontaine, above, at paragraph 59). Bearing in mind that settlements are compromises that intend to resolve contested claims, it is not uncommon that the parties involved will not be satisfied with every element inherent in the settlement (Quatell, above, at paragraphs 5–7). Class members may therefore become objectors if they oppose to the Settlement. The parties reminded this Court that it must determine whether the Settlement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the class as a whole. It is therefore important that this Court carefully analyzes the benefits that the proposed Settlement will bring to the class as a whole.

(2) Individual compensation range of $25 000 to $50 000

[52] Some object to the individual damages ranging between $25 000 and $50 000. The parties submit that the quantum of compensation is fair and reasonable. As per the evidence on this motion, even with the approval of the Settlement by Justice Belobaba in the Brown action in Ontario, “Justice Belobaba was indicating amounts in the $10,000 to $25,000 range … and that the average paid on the common experience payment regarding Indian Residential Schools was $22,000” (affidavit of M. Blue Waters, at paragraph 112, Motion Record (Settlement Approval), Tab 4, page 112). Considering that the claimants would not be required to prove harm or loss in order to receive compensation, the proposed sums are “meaningful amounts of money”, as per the evidence.

(3) Capped Settlement Fund at $750 Million

[53] Certain objectors disagree with the capped Settlement Fund. The parties submit that it is appropriate to cap the Settlement fund at such a high amount of $750 million as it will allow every eligible class member to receive no less than $25 000. In fact, caps on settlement funds offer benefits (i.e. interests accruing from the capped settlement fund) to class members in such a way that they receive a sum of money in excess of $25 000, and up to $50 000. The parties also submit that it is reasonable to cap the Settlement fund in this case as the feature has allowed them to establish a simple, non-complex, claims process which would otherwise not have been available in uncapped settlements. It is recognized by this Court that no amount of money whatsoever can compensate for a loss of cultural identity. This is a symbolic payment and, not one that could, with any sum, recompense suffering for the loss of persona, family, nation and thus identity.

(4) Exclusion of Métis and Non-Status Individuals

[54] Certain individuals have raised the objection that the Métis and non-status Indians are not included in the Settlement. The Settlement Agreement only applies to status Indians, according to the Indian Act, and the Inuit. The parties submit that the Settlement Agreement is fair for the following reasons with which the Court agrees due to that reflected below:

i. The Settlement contains a Foundation that has been implemented in Canada to serve for the benefit of every survivor of the Sixties Scoop, including Métis and non-status Indians. As per the evidence states, the purpose of the Foundation is to allow healing and reconciliation for all survivors of the Sixties Scoop;

ii. Some federal-provincial child welfare agreements do not apply to Métis and non-status Indians since the provinces do not provide child welfare services to Indians without reserve status. In Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), Justice Belobaba also concluded that Ontario agreed to fund the development of the provincial welfare services only to “Indians with reserve status” (Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 ONSC 5637 [cited above], at paragraphs 63–71);

iii. Currently, there is no way of determining whether Métis and non-status Indians would be allowed to receive compensation;

iv. The Settlement Agreement does not affect the claims of Métis and non-status Indians against Canada. The evidence clearly states that “[n]othing in this Settlement bars a claim by Métis against the federal government, or a claim against the provincial authorities by those physically or sexually abused when adopted in state wardship" (affidavit of M. Brown, at paragraph 42, Exhibit "113" to the affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 257, motion record, Tab 6(113), pages 2106–2107).

(5) Release of Claims for Physical and Sexual Abuse While in Care

[55] Some objectors have criticized Canada for the release of the physical and sexual abuse claims. The Court agrees that "the compensation offered by Canada in exchange for the release of all claims is fair and reasonable" (responding memorandum of fact and law of the plaintiffs, at paragraph 35). It is explained that Canada is not to be held liable for the physical and sexual assault experienced by the Sixties Scoop survivors as it would not be in accordance with the federal-provincial agreements. The arrangements that were set forth between the federal Crown and the provinces require only that the provinces inaugurate welfare programs available to all Indians (Brown v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 ONSC 3095 [cited above], at paragraph 31). Canada, on the other hand, is responsible to provide the provinces with the necessary funding and is not to be held accountable for breach of common law duty of care.

[56] The first Sixties Scoop class action in Ontario, Brown v. Canada, also did not implicate allegations of physical and sexual abuse while class members were in care. Evidence shows that "[Class Counsel] chose not to expand it to include a law suit for damages for abuse. … Our claim in Ontario was limited to a loss of cultural identity and did not include the element of abuse as part of the assertion of federal liability" (affidavit of M. Brown, at paragraphs 31 and 42, Exhibit "113" to the affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 6(113), pages 2103 and 2107). Consequently, class members can still present such claims against the provinces, not Canada, in order to receive compensation for the physical and sexual abuse suffered.

(6) Claimants' Choice of Counsel through Claims Process

[57] Certain individuals have raised the objection that they are entitled to choose their own lawyers for these class proceedings, and that these lawyers should be paid from the compensation granted to claimants. According to section 11.03 of the Settlement Agreement, "[n]o fee may be charged to Class Members in relation to claims under this Agreement by counsel not listed on Schedule 'K' without prior approval of the Federal Court". As a result, pursuant to rule 369 of the Federal Court Rules, leave from the Court is required if legal fees are to be paid from claimants' individual compensation. The parties submit that the purpose of section 11.03 is to protect the claimants from lawyers' misconduct and to prevent the overcharging of legal fees which had arisen from the Indian Residential Schools Settlement claims process. The evidence on this motion clearly indicates that "[t]he structure of the proposed settlement is such that an amount for legal fees will be paid up front by Canada, with no counsel being permitted to charge further legal fees against individual payments, without prior authorization from the court" (affidavit of M. Reiher, at paragraph 33, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 5, page 156).

[58] According to the evidence on this motion, “the court will be called on to approve fees that are proposed to be charged so that amounts are reasonable and claimants are not surprised by dramatically reduced pay outs” (affidavit of M. Reiher, at paragraph 35, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 5, page 156). Class counsel from all across Canada made a commitment to assist, free of charge, every class member in the understanding of the Settlement Agreement, as well as in the completion of the claim forms. Class members will also have access to free legal services provided by 12 Indigenous Liaison Officers in each province and territory (Plan of Administration, Exhibit “A” to the Affidavit of L. Seto, Supplemental Motion Record (Settlement Approval), Tab 6(A), page 53).

(7) Legal Fees to Class Counsel

[59] Some object to the quantum of legal fees. The Court agrees that the fees sought are fair and reasonable, mainly because class counsel will remain available to the claimants following the approval of the Settlement and because the requested fees are less than 10 percent of the overall global payment. All of which the Court accepted, recognizing that no legal fees whatsoever would be permitted against individual payments without prior authorization of this Court.

(8) Class Definition and Cut-Off Date for the Deceased

[60] Some individuals object to the cut-off date of February 20, 2009, because they claim that persons (or their estates) who were deceased prior to this date should also be considered as eligible claimants. It is accepted by the Court that one of the reasons why the parties chose the cut-off date to be February 20, 2009 is due to the Brown action which was commenced on that same date in Ontario. Moreover, in Baxter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2006 CanLII 41673, 83 O.R. (3d) 481 (Sup. Ct.), at paragraphs 82–84, Justice Winkler addressed a similar objection such as the one at bar:

> …. The proposed settlement would exclude the estates of such persons from making claims under the CEP program or the IAP…. While it is not uncommon, or necessarily objectionable, to draw distinctions between class members for the purposes of distributing compensation from a global fund, in those cases where a distinction is drawn, compensation is usually paid to claimants on both sides of the divide albeit in reduced amounts on one side.

[61] Therefore, the definition of “Eligible Class Member”, as found in the Settlement, allows estates to make claims, whereas, without the inclusion of such date, they would not have been eligible to receive any funds.

(9) Claimants’ Ability to Retrieve Personal Records

[62] Certain objectors are concerned about the difficulty and the complexity in retrieving personal records in order to make their claim for compensation. These records are held with Canada, the provinces and the provincial Children’s Aid Society. The parties did acknowledge this hardship and took the necessary actions in order to accommodate the class members. “[W]ith the Settlement’s provision [the] burden to obtain records is not upon the Class member, rather, it is upon the governments” (affidavit of K. Richard, at paragraph 7, Exhibit “A” to the affidavit of J. Riddle, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 7(A), page 2198). Said otherwise, the evidence clearly states that survivors of the Sixties Scoop will not be encumbered by the task of requesting their official records in order to establish the fact of permanent wardship or adoption (affidavit of Dr. Raven Sinclair, at paragraph 12(e), Exhibit “115” to the affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 254, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 6(115), page 2178). Further steps, it is agreed by the Court, have also been taken in such a way that the process for verification of class members will be streamlined. By shifting the burden of proof onto the governments, it is recognized that “if [class members] have no record, [it] creates a process that assures me no indigenous person who lost their spirit and being will be denied recognition because of no record” (affidavit of M. Brown, at paragraph 40(i), Exhibit “113” to the affidavit of D. Rosenfeld, at paragraph 257, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 6(113), pages 2106–2107).

(10) Maintaining a Historical Archive of Stories and Experiences

[63] Certain individuals are concerned with the loss of personal stories and experiences present in the historical record. One of the main and key, primary objectives of the Foundation is to encourage survivors of the Sixties Scoop to share their stories for the purposes of commemoration and healing. Past jurisprudence demonstrates that none of the Foundation’s initiatives would have been available to class members through contested litigation (Rideout v. Health Labrador Corp., 2007 NLTD 150 [cited above], at paragraph 70). The importance and value of the Foundation were also described by a class member, stating that “the work of the Foundation, the Agreement which is only the beginning of reconciliation, is part of taking us home — to be ourselves — to reclaim our languages, to reclaim our culture — the wrongs (sic) to continue to grow our essence” (affidavit of M. Blue Waters, at paragraph 96, motion record (Settlement Approval), Tab 4, page 110).

(11) Mediator as Settlement Approval Judge

[64] Certain individuals were dissatisfied that the undersigned, Justice Michel M.J. Shore, was not only the mediator for the proposed Settlement, but was also the presiding judge at the Settlement approval hearing. With respect to rule 391 of the Federal Court Rules, all parties (Class Counsel and the respondents) to the action had given their consent prior to the hearing for Settlement approval. An order, confirming the parties’ consent, had been signed and approved by Justice Manson. The evidence also demonstrates that Justice Shore, through an order of the Court, on May 3, 2017, was designated to conduct the Dispute Resolution Conference by Justice Manson prior to sitting on the approval of the Settlement by order of May 3, 2018, exactly one year later.

(12) Consultation

[65] Certain objectors stated their discontent for not being formally consulted about the Settlement Agreement. According to jurisprudence in class actions, such legal duty is non-existent for such proceedings (Sondhi v. Deloitte Management Services LP, 2018 ONSC 271 (CanLII), 45 C.C.E.L. (4th) 217, at paragraph 78); however, class members were given the opportunity to be heard by the Court, as solely to objections to the Settlement. Moreover, survivors of the Sixties Scoop will continue to be consulted for the inauguration of the Foundation as some of them are also members of the Development Board. The Foundation intends to “provid[e] survivors of the Sixties Scoop and their families with ‘Telling Our Stories’ platforms that promote their own healing and that serve as a gift to future generations”. This is to ensure that each and every story that can be told, will be told; and, kept in the annals of Canadian history. By the recounting of the stories, suffering will, at least, have meaning, by a duty to keep the stories alive for those whose stories can be told, as voices of witnesses to history that will thereby remain alive, through narratives to be kept; and, suffering never to be forgotten.

[66] For all the reasons specified above, this Court certifies this action as a class proceeding, approves the Settlement with modification as per the order of the undersigned of May 11, 2018, in respect of dissemination of information of the Settlement to every part of Canada where Indigenous individuals reside, or can be found, in addition to meticulous oversight in respect of funds to be distributed, to ensure that each and every eligible person as per the Settlement receives the payment allotted for such. The Court also dismisses the action against Canada on a without costs basis.

ORDER in T-2212-16 rendered on May 11, 2018

WHEREAS by order of Justice Michael D. Manson of this Court, dated May 3, 2018 and by consent of the parties before the Court, the mediator, Justice Michel M.J. Shore, shall preside over the motion for settlement approval in this action in accordance with rule 391 of the Federal Courts Rules;

AND WHEREAS the plaintiffs and the defendant have entered into the Settlement Agreement in respect of the plaintiffs' claims against the defendant;

AND WHEREAS this Court approved the form of notice and plan for distribution of the notice of this motion by order dated January 11, 2018 (the Notice Order);

UPON HEARING the motion made by the plaintiffs, on consent, for an order: (a) certifying this action as a class proceeding for settlement purposes; (b) approving the settlement agreement dated November 30, 2017 between the parties (the Settlement Agreement or Settlement); and (c) approving the notice of this settlement, the opt out and claims period and other ancillary orders to facilitate the Settlement;

AND UPON READING the joint motion records of the parties and the facta of the parties;

AND UPON BEING ADVISED of the defendant's consent to the form of this order;

AND WITHOUT ADMISSION OF LIABILITY on the part of the defendant;

AND UPON HEARING the oral submissions of counsel for the plaintiffs, counsel for the defendant, all interested parties, including objections, written and oral.

IT IS ADJUDGED THAT:

(1) For the purposes of this order, the following definitions shall apply:

(i) "Approval Date" means the date that this Court approved the Settlement Agreement;

(ii) "Approval Orders" means this order and the order approving the Settlement Agreement in Brown v. Canada (Court File No. CV09-00372025-00CP);

(iii) "Brown Class Members" means members of the class proceeding in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, Brown v. Canada (Court File No. CV-09-00372025- 00CP) who did not opt out of that proceeding;

(iv) "Canada" means the defendant, the Government of Canada, as represented in this proceeding by Her Majesty the Queen;

(v) "Class Actions" mean:

(a) Wendy Lee White v. The Attorney General of Canada (Court File No. T-294-17);

(b) Jessica Riddle v. Her Majesty the Queen (Court File No. T-2212-16);

(2) All applicable parties have adhered to and acted in accordance with the notice order and the procedures provided in the notice order have constituted good and sufficient notice of the hearing of this motion.

CERTIFICATION

(3) This action is hereby certified as a class proceeding for the purposes of settlement pursuant to subsection 334.16(1) of the Federal Courts Rules.

(4) The Class is defined as:

> All Indian (as defined in the Indian Act) and Inuit persons who were removed from their homes in Canada between January 1, 1951 and December 31, 1991 and placed in the care of non-Indigenous foster or adoptive parents excluding any members of the class action in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice styled as Brown v. The Attorney General of Canada (Court File Number CV-09-00372025CP).

(5) The representative plaintiffs hereby appointed are Wendy White, Jessica Riddle, and Catriona Charlie who constitute adequate representative plaintiffs of the Class.

(6) Klein Lawyers LLP, Koskie Minsky LLP and Merchant Law Group LLP are appointed as Class Counsel.

(7) The claims asserted on behalf of the Class against the defendant are: (a) negligence; and (b) breach of fiduciary duty.

(8) For the purposes of settlement, this proceeding is certified on the basis of the following common issue:

Did the defendant have a fiduciary or common law duty of care to take reasonable steps to protect the Indigenous identity of the Class Members?

(9) The certification of this action is conditional on the approval of the Settlement Agreement in Ontario in accordance with section 12.01 of the Settlement Agreement. Should the Settlement Agreement be set aside, all materials filed, submissions made or positions taken by any party are without prejudice to any future positions taken by any party on a certification motion.

SETTLEMENT APPROVAL

(10) The Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the plaintiffs and the Class Members.

(11) The Settlement Agreement, which is expressly incorporated by reference into this order, shall be and hereby is approved and shall be implemented in accordance with this order and further orders of this Court.

(12) The claims of the Class Members and the Class as a whole, shall be discontinued against the defendant and are released against the Releasees in accordance with section 10.01 of the Settlement Agreement, in particular as follows:

(i) Each Class Member and his/her Estate Executor and heirs (hereinafter “Releasors”) has fully, finally and forever released Canada, her servants, agents, officers and employees, from any and all actions, causes of action, common law, Quebec civil law and statutory liabilities, contracts, claims and demands of every nature or kind available, asserted or which could have been asserted whether known or unknown including for damages, contribution, indemnity, costs, expenses and interest which any such Releasor ever had, now has, or may hereafter have, directly or indirectly arising from or in any way relating to or by way of any subrogated or assigned right or otherwise in relation to the Sixties Scoop and this release includes any such claim made or that could have been made in any proceeding including the Class Actions whether asserted directly by the Releasor or by any other person, group or legal entity on behalf of or as representative for the Releasor.

(ii) This Agreement does not preclude claims against any third party that are restricted to whatever such third party may be directly liable for, and that do not include whatever such third party can be jointly liable for together with Canada, such that the third party has no basis to seek contribution, indemnity or relief over by way of equitable subrogation, declaratory relief or otherwise against Canada.

(iii) For greater certainty, the Releasors are deemed to agree that if they make any claim or demand or take any actions or proceedings against another person or persons in which any claim could arise against Canada for damages or contribution or indemnity and/or other relief over under the provisions of the Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. N.1, or its counterpart in other jurisdictions, the common law, Quebec civil law or any other statute of Ontario or any other jurisdiction in relation to the Sixties Scoop, including any claim against provinces or territories or other entities for abuse while in care; then, the Releasors will expressly limit their claims to exclude any portion of Canada's responsibility.

(iv) Canada's obligations and liabilities under this Agreement constitute the consideration for the releases and other matters referred to in this Agreement and such consideration is in full and final settlement and satisfaction of any and all claims referred to therein and the Releasors are limited to the benefits provided and compensation payable pursuant to this Agreement, in whole or in part, as their only recourse on account of any and all such actions, causes of actions, liabilities, claims and demands.

(13) This Settlement Agreement does not compromise any claims that Class Members have against any Province, Territory or any other entity, other than as expressly stated herein.

(14) This Agreement does not affect the rights of:

(i) Class Members who opt out of any class action that is certified pursuant to this Settlement Agreement; or

(ii) Individuals who are not Class Members.

(15) This order, including the releases referred to in paragraph 12 above, and the Settlement Agreement are binding upon all Class Members, including those persons who are under a disability.

(16) The claims of the Class Members are dismissed against the defendant, without costs and with prejudice and such dismissal shall be a defence to any subsequent action in respect of the subject matter hereof.

(17) This Court, without in any way affecting the finality of this order, reserves exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over this action, the plaintiffs, all of the Class Members, and the defendant for the limited purposes of implementing the Settlement Agreement and enforcing and administering the Settlement Agreement and this order.

(18) Save as set out above, leave is granted to discontinue this action against the defendant without costs and with prejudice, and that such discontinuance shall be an absolute bar to any subsequent actions against the defendant in respect of the subject matter hereof.

(19) Collectiva Class Action Services Inc. shall be and hereby is appointed as Claims Administrator pursuant to the Settlement Agreement. A complete, significant, and detailed review must take place in regard to the Administrator for all eventual work pertaining to the Administrator's responsibilities, to ensure accurate and effective, wide dissemination of meaningful and pertinent information to the attention of all those who have gone through the "Sixties Scoop" and heirs to those who have been subjected to the "Sixties Scoop" as specified in the Settlement; and, in addition, to supervise and monitor all future work that must be carried out by the Administrator as it pertains to individual payments to Class Members, heirs and others as respectfully specified in the Settlement who will be part of the Exceptions category. The fees, disbursements and applicable taxes of the Claims Administrator shall be paid by the defendant in accordance with section 6.06 of the Settlement Agreement.

(20) No person may bring any action or take any proceeding against the Administrator, the Foundation Table, the Exceptions Committee or the members of such bodies, the adjudicators, or any employees, agents, partners, associates, representatives, successors or assigns, for any matter in any way relating to the Settlement Agreement, the administration of the Settlement Agreement or the implementation of this judgment, except with leave of this Court on notice to all affected parties.

(21) In the event that the number of persons who appear to be eligible for compensation under the Settlement Agreement who opt out of this class proceeding and the Ontario Action exceeds 2 000, the Settlement Agreement will be void and this judgment will be set aside in its entirety, subject only to the right of Canada, at its sole discretion, to waive compliance with section 5.09 of the Settlement Agreement.

(22) Subsection 334.21(2) [of the Federal Courts Rules] does not apply to the plaintiffs in the Class Actions, and those plaintiffs are not excluded from this proceeding despite not having discontinued their parallel Class Actions prior to the Opt Out Deadline.

(23) The fees payable to Class Counsel are hereby set at $37 500 000 ($37.5 million) in respect of legal fees plus applicable taxes, inclusive of disbursements, payable as follows:

(i) $12 500 000 to Klein Lawyers LLP;

(ii) $12 500 000 to Koskie Minsky LLP; and

(iii) $12 500 000 to Merchant Law Group LLP.

(24) The amounts set out in paragraph 23 shall be paid by the defendant to Class Counsel on the Implementation Date in accordance with the Settlement Agreement. The amounts set out in paragraph 23 shall be in addition to the funding in section 4.01 of the Settlement Agreement.

(25) No counsel or law firm listed in Schedule “K” to the Settlement Agreement or who accepts a payment for legal fees from Canada will charge any Class Member any fees or disbursements in respect of an Individual Payment. Each counsel listed in Schedule “K” to the Settlement Agreement undertakes to make no further charge for legal work for any Class Member with respect to claims under this Agreement.

(26) Notice in the manner attached hereto as Schedule “B” shall be given of this judgment, the approval of the Settlement Agreement, the opt out period and the claims period by the commencement of the Notice Plan attached here to Schedule “C”, at the expense of Canada.

(27) This Court may issue such further and ancillary orders, from time to time, as are necessary to implement and enforce the provisions of the Settlement Agreement and this order.

(28) Class Counsel shall report back to the Court on the administration of the Settlement Agreement at reasonable intervals not less than semi-annually, as requested by the Court and upon the completion of the administration of the Settlement Agreement.

(29) The representative plaintiffs Wendy White, Jessica Riddle, and Catriona Charlie shall each receive the sum of $10 000 as an honorarium to be paid by the defendant out of the settlement fund.

(30) The proposed representative plaintiffs in the Provincial Class Actions shall each receive the sum of $10 000 as an honorarium to be paid by the defendant out of the settlement fund.

(31) This order will be rendered null and void in the event that the Settlement Agreement is not approved in substantially the same terms by way of order of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice.

(32) The statutory provisions of the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-7 and the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 shall apply in their entirety to the supervision, operation, and implementation of the Settlement Agreement and this order.

2011 ONCA 233

Court of Appeal for Ontario,
Moldaver, R.P. Armstrong and Juriansz JJ.A.
March 28, 2011

Civil procedure -- Class proceedings -- Compensation for representative plaintiff -- Motion judge erring in ordering representative plaintiff's compensation to be paid out of class counsel fees rather than out of settlement fund.

Civil procedure -- Class proceedings -- Fees -- Counsel fee -- Fee agreement in class proceeding not approved by court and not satisfying requirements of s. 33(4) of Class Proceedings Act -- Determination of counsel fees governed by s. 32(4) of Class Proceedings Act -- Motion judge not erring in failing to apply base fee/multiplier approach in [page38]s. 33(7) -- Settlement of class proceeding consisting of payment of $27.5 million to class, forgiveness of indebtedness, provision of transaction credits to reduce cost of using defendants' services in future, and payment of $3 million to Class Proceedings Fund -- Motion judge entitled to reject class counsel's submission that settlement had value of $120 million and to find that class counsel's claim for fees in amount of $27.5 million was not reasonable -- Class counsel's appeal from all-inclusive award of $14.5 million dismissed -- Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, ss. 32(4), 33(4), (7).

Civil procedure -- Class proceedings -- Fees -- Disbursements -- Motion judge not erring in failing to give effect to contingency fee agreements entered into by class counsel and non-counsel and in treating those fees as disbursements -- Class Proceedings Act not contemplating contingency fee arrangements with persons other than class counsel and not giving court jurisdiction to allow premium on service providers' fees -- Motion judge not erring in treating fees of other lawyers retained by class counsel to assist them as disbursements where there was no evidence that representative plaintiff made or participated in decision to retain those lawyers.

The plaintiffs brought a class proceeding alleging that they were charged a criminal rate of interest by the defendants for payday loans. The class action was strenuously resisted. Following a mid-trial mediation, the parties agreed to a settlement on the following terms: the defendants would pay $27.5 million to the settlement class; the defendants would forgive the class members' indebtedness to them in the amount of $56,388,071; the defendants would make available fully transferable transaction credits in the amount of $30 million to reduce the cost of using the defendants' services in the future; the defendants would pay $3 million to the Class Proceedings Fund; and the defendants would pay the costs of administering the settlement, in the amount of $2 million. Class counsel sought approval of a counsel fee of $27.5 million. The motion judge fixed class counsel fees in the amount of $14.5 million, inclusive of GST and disbursements, and allowed the representative plaintiff compensation of $3,000, to be paid out of class counsel fees. Class counsel appealed.

Held, the appeal should be allowed in part.

An uncontested motion for approval of class counsel fees places judges in a difficult position. It would be advisable for motion judges to consider the appointment of amicus curiae to assist them in approving class counsel fees.

The motion judge did not err by failing to apply the base fee/multiplier approach provided for in s. 33(7) of the Class Proceedings Act ("CPA"). In the circumstances of this case, the determination of counsel fees was governed by s. 32(4) of the CPA, not s. 33(7). The court's jurisdiction to determine class counsel fees under s. 33(7) is premised and conditioned on the existence of a fee agreement providing for payment of fees and disbursements only in the event of success and which permits class counsel to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier. In this case, the agreement regarding class counsel fees did not provide that counsel may bring a motion to have the court increase the base fee by a multiplier. Rather, the agreement stipulated how counsel fees were to be calculated and also stipulated that it would become enforceable only if it were approved by the court under s. 32(2). If it were not approved, then, under s. 32(4) of the CPA, the court could determine the amount owing to counsel. The motion judge in this case did not approve the fee agreement. [page39]

In determining the reasonableness of the claimed counsel fee, the motion judge was entitled to reject class counsel's submission that the settlement had a value of $120 million. The appellants had not established any basis for interfering with his determination that $14.5 million was a fair and reasonable fee for class counsel in this case.

The motion judge did not err in failing to give effect to contingency fee agreements entered into by class counsel and consultants and by treating the consultants' fees as disbursements of class counsel. The CPA does not contemplate contingency fee arrangements with persons other than class counsel and does not give the court the jurisdiction to allow a service provider a premium on its fees.

The motion judge did not err in treating the fees of other lawyers retained by class counsel on a contingency basis to assist them as disbursements. There was no evidence that the representative plaintiff made or participated in any decision to retain those lawyers as class counsel. While counsel may require assistance and may incur disbursements on the clients' behalf, clients decide who are their counsel. Moreover, if there was a change in the composition of class counsel, the court was not immediately and directly notified of the changes. Finally, the record did not indicate that those lawyers were intended to have a solicitor-client relationship with the representative plaintiff.

The motion judge erred in ordering that the representative plaintiff's compensation be paid out of class counsel fees rather than out of the settlement fund.

APPEAL by class counsel from the order of Perell J., [2010] O.J. No. 873, 94 C.P.C. (6th) 126 (S.C.J.) fixing counsel fees in class proceedings.

Terrence J. O'Sullivan and James Renihan, for appellants.

Chris Hubbard, for Money Mart (not participating in appeal).

Mahmud Jamal and Jason MacLean, for Dollar Financial Group, Inc. (not participating in appeal).

The judgment of the court was delivered by [1] JURIANSZ J.: -- This is an appeal from the order of Perell J. fixing the appellants' counsel fees in this class proceeding. The appellants are four law firms that acted as class counsel in this class proceeding.

[2] By order dated March 3, 2010, Perell J. varied the certification order by expanding the class definition, approved the settlement of the class action, allowed the representative plaintiff compensation of $3,000 to be paid out of class counsel fees and fixed class counsel fees in the amount of $14.5 million, being $12,806,074.94 for fees, $640,303.75 for GST and $1,053,621.31 for disbursements, including GST. The disbursements included the fees of certain consultants and other counsel retained by class counsel that the appellants had requested be treated as contingency fees.

[3] The class definition was expanded to add a group of payday loan borrowers who entered into transactions between the publication of the original certification order and December 15, 2009. [page41]The date December 15, 2009 is significant. As of that date, because of legislative changes, it could no longer be alleged that the transactions contravened the Criminal Code's [R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46] provisions prohibiting criminal rates of interest.

[4] Before Perell J., class counsel sought approval of a counsel fee of $27.5 million. On appeal, they seek a fee of $20 million. They also seek, as they did before Perell J., to have fees, disbursements and taxes of other counsel -- who had provided their services on a contingency basis -- treated as a component of the class counsel base fee rather than as disbursements, to have the fees of consultants -- who had also provided their services on a contingency basis -- increased by the multiplier the court awarded to class counsel and to have the compensation paid to the representative plaintiff paid out of the class fund rather than out of class counsel fees.

[5] For the reasons that follow, I would allow the appeal in part. I would vary the motion judge's order so that the fees of the representative plaintiff are paid out of the class fund. I would dismiss the remainder of the appeal.

[6] I add the observation that in a case such as this, the motion judge should give serious consideration to the appointment of amicus curiae or a guardian of the settlement fund on the hearing of counsel's application for approval of their fees.

Background

[7] In this class proceeding, the plaintiffs alleged that they were charged a criminal rate of interest by the defendants for small loans with a due date for repayment connected to their payday. The issue in the action was whether the various charges, i.e., a finance charge, a cash chequing fee and an item fee, should be characterized as interest under the Criminal Code's provisions prohibiting criminal rates of interest.

[8] The class action was strenuously resisted. There were many interlocutory proceedings. According to the motion judge's count, there were 39 orders, 12 endorsements and four judgments. There was one leave application to the Divisional Court, four appeals to the Court of Appeal and three leave applications to the Supreme Court of Canada. The issues litigated included whether the order for service of the claim, ex juris, on the defendant Dollar Financial Group, Inc. was valid, whether the loan agreements required the plaintiffs to mediate or arbitrate their disputes, whether the defendants' franchisees should be added as defendants and whether the plaintiffs were entitled to partial summary judgment.

[9] The trial began on April 27, 2009 and proceeded for 17 days. It was established that during the class period, class [page42]members had paid cheque cashing fees and interest totalling $224,791,507. Money Mart counterclaimed for the class members' indebtedness from payday loans that were in default. The amount of that indebtedness was ultimately calculated to be $56,388,071 at the time of the motion.

[10] Following a mid-trial mediation, the parties agreed to a settlement on the following terms:

(i) the defendants would pay $27.5 million to the settlement class;

(ii) the defendants would forgive the class members' indebtedness to them, in the amount of $56,388,071;

(iii) the defendants would make available fully transferable transaction credits in the amount of $30 million to reduce the cost of using the defendants' services in the future, to be allocated among those class members who were not indebted to Money Mart;

(iv) the defendants would pay to the Class Proceedings Fund the sum of $3 million, in annual instalments of 10 per cent of the transaction credits as they are used, and 10 per cent of the unused transaction credits after the expiration date; and

(v) the defendants would pay the costs of administering the settlement, in the amount of $2 million.

[11] At the motion, class counsel asserted the value of the settlement was in the range of $120 million. The time value of the hours docketed by class counsel was $9,750,024.

Issues

[12] The appellants resist the characterization of the appeal as primarily involving a claim for higher fees. Rather, they say that the appeal raises important issues about access to justice, since it concerns the legal principles that govern the determination of fair fees for class counsel. The fees awarded must not only provide adequate compensation to class counsel but must also provide a suitable incentive to skilled lawyers to take on complex and expensive class proceedings, all without unreasonably diminishing the fund available for distribution to the class. The appellants say that contingency fees should be available to firms who provide essential but non-legal services to the class and that it is important that class counsel be able to retain, on a contingency basis, the expert services necessary to effectively assert the class' claim. Finally, they say that as a matter of principle, a [page43]representative plaintiff's compensation should be paid out of the fund and not out of class counsel fees.

[13] I summarize the appellants' arguments as follows:

(i) the motion judge erred by failing to apply the base fee/ multiplier approach provided for in s. 33(7);

(ii) the motion judge erred by failing to allow class counsel fees in an amount that was fair and reasonable;

(iii) the motion judge erred by refusing to treat the fees payable to the consultants, Price Waterhouse Cooper ("PWC") and Mr. Anand, in accordance with the contingency basis on which class counsel had retained them;

(iv) the motion judge erred by refusing to consider the fees of Fraser, Milner, Casgrain LLP ("FMC") and Prof. Krishna as class counsel fees because the court had not appointed them as part of the class counsel group; and

(v) the motion judge erred by ordering that the representative plaintiff's compensation be paid from class counsel fees.

[14] There is another matter worth discussing though, strictly speaking, it is not a legal issue raised by the appeal. During oral argument, the court raised with counsel the difficulties that stem from the fact that class counsel fees are determined in a non-adversarial forum. Counsel for the appellants frankly acknowledged the difficulties and suggested that it would be useful to the profession for this court to discuss the issue. I begin with that discussion.

The non-adversarial forum

[15] Our system of justice is based on the basic tenet that the court will be able to reach the most informed, considered, impartial and wise decision after presiding over the confrontation between opposing parties, in which each side can identify issues, lead evidence, cite law, discuss policy considerations and seek to undermine the position of the other. Motions for the approval of settlements and class counsel fees in class proceeding depart from this basic tenet as a matter of routine. They usually proceed unopposed in large part because individual class members often have too small a stake to be compelled to participate.

[16] The motion judge was troubled by what he described at one point as the "ex parte" nature of the hearing before him and included a lengthy comment about it in his reasons, a comment that is worth reading. The comment emphatically observes that [page44]it is "well known" that the court is placed in a difficult position in determining whether a settlement and class counsel fees should be approved without "the dynamics of the adversary system where opposing views are heard".

[17] Winkler J. in McCarthy v. Canadian Red Cross Society, [2001] O.J. No. 2474, 8 C.P.C. (5th) 349 (S.C.J.) also compared unopposed motions in class action to ex parte proceedings. After referring to authorities that highlighted that [at para. 20] "there is no situation more fraught with potential injustice and abuse of the Court's powers than application[s] for an ex parte injunction", he stated that counsel in unopposed motions in class proceedings are under a special duty to make full and frank disclosure, just as in ex parte proceedings. He stated:

> By comparison, a class proceeding by its very nature involves the issuance of orders or judgments that affect persons who are not before the Court. These absent class members are dependent on the Court to protect their interests. In order to do so, the Court must have all of the available information that has some bearing on the issues, whether favourable or unfavourable to the moving party. It is the obligation of counsel to provide that information in a manner that is consonant with the duty to make full and frank disclosure. Moreover, that information must be provided in a manner that is not misleading or even potentially misleading. In most class proceedings, voluminous records develop as a consequence of the complexity of the litigation. The Court is not equipped, nor should it be required, to engage in a forensic investigation into the material or to mine the record to inform itself. Counsel must direct the Court to all relevant information that would impact on the Court's determination. This is especially important where the motion is for the approval of settlement agreements, class counsel fees or consent certifications for the purpose of settlement.

[18] In one respect, counsel's duty to make full and frank disclosure is more significant in unopposed class action motions than in ex parte motions. An order obtained ex parte is very often brought back before the court by an interested party not present at the ex parte hearing. This does not happen with orders approving counsel fees in class proceedings. This court recently found that a class member lacks standing to appeal an order approving class counsel fees: Lawrence v. Atlas Cold Storage Holdings Inc., [2009] O.J. No. 4067, 311 D.L.R. (4th) 323 (C.A.).

[19] On appeal, counsel for the appellants summed up the court's concern well. The process, he said, places the court in the position of adversary and adjudicator at the same time; the court must test the case being put to it, while impartially adjudicating it. He suggested this was "perhaps a flaw in the legislation".

[20] Nothing in the legislation, however, discourages the court from exercising its inherent jurisdiction to ensure the proceedings before it are fair or resorting to its authority under rule 13.02 [of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194] to appoint [page45]an amicus. In fact, counsel for the appellants advised that now some judges of the Superior Court appoint amicus to present an opposing view in such motions. As well, "monitors" have been appointed in several Ontario cases. In the United States, it is not uncommon for the courts to appoint a guardian ad litem for the settlement fund.

[21] An uncontested motion for fees also places counsel in an awkward position. Lawyers are expected to be zealous but personally disinterested advocates of their clients' positions. On an uncontested motion for fees, the lawyer represents the class whose interest is in maintaining the maximum settlement amount possible for distribution among class members. The lawyer, on the other hand, seeks fees that will diminish the amount of the settlement available for distribution. The lawyer's interests appear to be pitted against those of the client. In appropriate cases, class counsel may, on their own initiative, seek to reduce the awkwardness of this position by arranging for independent counsel to advise the representative plaintiff in relation to class counsel's application for fees. Class counsel have taken this action in at least one reported Canadian case.

Amicus

[23] The court has jurisdiction to appoint an amicus to preserve the fairness of the proceedings before it. In Ontario, though, there is no judicial discussion of the appointment of amicus in the context of class action proceedings. Commentators, however, have pointed out the benefits of allowing amicus to assist the court in the approval of settlements and class counsel fees, which are often dealt with together. The motion judge cited Prof. Garry Watson, who, in his paper "Settlement Approval -- The Most Difficult and Problematic Area of Class Action Practice" (Paper prepared for the NJI Conference on Class Actions, April 2008), argued that "judges should give serious thought to precipitating an adversarial hearing by appointing counsel to advise the court and oppose the settlement if appropriate".

[24] Another significant paper is "Caught In a Trap -- Ethical Considerations for the Plaintiff's Lawyer in Class Proceedings", authored by Winkler C.J.O. and Sharon D. Matthews (Paper delivered at the 5th Annual Symposium on Class Actions, April 11, 2008) and available online at http://www.ontariocourts.on.ca/ coa/en/ps/speeches/caught.htm. The authors note the effect of the absence of an adversary in these situations and suggest the use of amicus: [page46]

Depending on the terms of the settlement, the defendant may not have standing on the fee approval and in such cases there will be no effective adversary to assist the court on either > settlement or fee approvals. Class counsel may find themselves in a conflict in supporting settlement approvals. . . . It may be appropriate to appoint amicus curiae to assist courts in understanding the merits of the settlement generally and as it relates to fees in particular.

[25] The only Canadian case that actually discusses the appointment of an amicus in the context of approving a class settlement or class counsel fees seems to be Killough v. Canadian Red Cross Society, [2001] B.C.J. No. 191, 85 B.C.L.R. (3d) 233 (S.C.). K.J. Smith J. of the B.C. Supreme Court cautioned against too quickly resorting to the appointment of an amicus in motions to approve class counsel fees [at para. 14]:

> In my opinion, there is merit in [the] submission that amicus curiae should not be appointed as a matter of course in these matters. It may be that, in a particular case, the class-action judge will consider that amicus would be helpful, but to make such an order in the absence of some special circumstances warranting it would be to add an unnecessary layer of complexity and expense to the fee-approval process.

[26] He found the appointment of an amicus was premature because it appeared the court would have the benefit of an independent perspective. Class counsel had retained separate independent counsel to advise the representative plaintiff as to the fairness and reasonableness of the proposed fees and class counsel had undertaken to file independent counsel's opinion with the court. Moreover, the Public Guardian and Trustee had sought standing to take a position and that application had not yet been dealt with. When the matter eventually came on for hearing (see Killough v. Canadian Red Cross Society, [2001] B.C.J. No. 1481, 91 B.C.L.R. (3d) 309 (S.C.), at para. 40), K.J. Smith J. declined to give the Public Guardian formal standing, but did allow the Public Guardian to participate in the hearing:

> Counsel have an inherent conflict of interest on applications for approval of their own fees and disbursements. While those of us who are trained in the workings of the legal system understand that counsel put aside their own self-interest in such matters, as they are ethically bound to do, decisions that take into account the objective, perhaps adversarial, submissions of other interested parties will generally better withstand scrutiny. Accordingly, if the Public Guardian and Trustee wishes to address the Court on behalf of legally incapable persons in the class, it is my view that the Court should hear those submissions.

Monitors

[27] Monitors have been appointed in a number of Ontario class actions. The published reasons do not always make clear the role assigned to the monitor. For example, in Baxter v. Canada (Attorney General) (2006), 83 O.R. (3d) 481, [2006] O.J. No. 4968 (S.C.J.) [page47]and Frohlinger v. Nortel Networks Corp., [2007] O.J. No. 148, 40 C.P.C. (6th) 62 (S.C.J.), court-appointed monitors are included in the list of those appearing before the court, but no mention of them is made in the reasons. Both of these cases involved a motion for the approval of class counsel fees as well as other issues.

[28] Monitors can assist the court by analyzing the volumes of information that may be filed on approval motions. For example, on a fee approval motion, a monitor could be assigned to review in detail the dockets of counsel with a view to understanding the fees charged in respect of each step in the litigation, identifying duplicated effort and instances in which a greater number of hours than reasonably necessary has been expended.

Guardian ad litem

[29] American jurisprudence, as one would expect, is more mature given the much longer experience with class proceedings in the United States. American courts do appoint amicus: see, e.g., Zucker v. Franklin, 374 F.3d 221 (3d Cir. 2004); Weinberger v. Great Northern Nekoosa Corp., 925 F.2d 518 (1st Cir. 1991). However, the predominant American approach appears to be the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the settlement fund.

[30] The landmark case seems to be the 1976 decision Miller v. Mackey International, Inc., 70 F.R.D. 533, 23 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 337 (S.D. Fla. 1976). The court considered a class counsel fee application to be analogous to litigation between a guardian and a ward. The substantive interests of the members of the class are at stake because the benefits they receive are reduced by the compensation sought by counsel representing the class. Therefore, over the strenuous objections of class counsel, the court appointed a guardian ad litem for the members of the class, saying [at p. 535 F.R.D.], "The appointment of a guardian ad litem is appropriate where there is litigation between a Guardian and Ward -- herein, the attorneys for the class and the class". Since the guardian is charged with the protection of the fund for the class, his fee was to be charged against the fund. The court observed [at p. 535 F.R.D.]:

> [T]his procedure both achieves protection for the members of the class and enables the trial judge to remain in an impartial position. Counsel for the class strenuously objected to the appointment of a guardian ad litem and asserted that the court should conduct cross examination of the witnesses testifying for plaintiff's counsel. However, that contravenes the court's traditional role, tending to cast the court into an advocate's role.

[31] The legislation in the United States is more mature as well. The Class Action Fairness Act of 2005, 28 U.S.C. (2005), [page48]which brings most large class actions within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, specifically authorizes judges to have the value of "coupon settlements" assessed by an independent expert before approval: see 1712(d).

Independent counsel

[32] Class counsel may consider going beyond their strict duty to make full and frank disclosure on an unopposed motion for fees and retain separate counsel to provide independent advice to the representative plaintiff regarding the fairness and reasonableness of the fees class counsel is seeking. Class counsel took this step in Killough.

[33] It seems to me that counsel who bring and proceed with a motion without ensuring that an independent perspective is put forward have little cause for complaint if the court departs from the passive role it traditionally plays by raising new issues, dealing with arguments not advanced and actively challenging the uncontradicted evidence. A court, though, should not appear confrontational. The line between a sceptical and confrontational approach may be difficult to navigate for a court that bears the full responsibility for testing the merits of the position put forward by counsel in order to fulfill its responsibility to protect members of the class. Courts should not be reticent in resorting to one of the strategies discussed above when they consider that confrontation of counsel's unopposed position would be helpful and reasonably warranted in the circumstances. Such resort is, of course, discretionary. Appointment of amicus or a guardian is neither necessary nor desirable in every case.

Application to this case

[34] A glance at the major features of the case placed before the motion judge might suggest it was appropriate for the court to consider exercising its discretion to appoint a guardian for the fund or an amicus or monitor. Non-monetary items figured prominently in the settlement. Class counsel was seeking fees of $27.5 million. The fees class counsel sought would exhaust all the cash in the settlement fund, leaving only the non-monetary benefits for distribution to the class members. While the record was huge, an accounting firm reviewed much of the voluminous documentation produced by the defendants. The hourly rates charged by counsel were substantial; they were described by the motion judge as "not bargain-basement". The total time value of class counsel's docketed hours was $9,750,024. Class counsel was comprised of four law firms, raising the possibility of duplication of effort in becoming familiar with this very large file [page49]and dealing with it. Class counsel had not placed before the court any independent evidence of the value of the various components of the settlement.

[36] In our adversarial system, in which the case is prepared by the parties, the court should not be expected to scrutinize in detail a massive set of counsel's dockets for duplicative or excessive hours. Winkler J.'s comments in McCarthy [at para. 21] are worth repeating: "The Court is not equipped, nor should it be required, to engage in a forensic investigation into the material or to mine the record to inform itself." A court must also guard against appearing confrontational by embarking on a cross-examination of counsel about the dockets or on matters such as whether they perform work at other than the "usual" rates indicated in the fee agreement, and if so, at what rate and for what type of client.

[37] The motion judge, after underscoring that [at para. 33] "the tasks are difficult and made more difficult by the adversarial void", considered that he was "up to the task" and proceeded. However, the adversarial void did affect his reasoning and the way he dealt with the case. The motion judge did not resolve the fundamental question whether a court under the CPA [Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6 ("CPA")] could allow a premium for service providers engaged by class counsel on a contingency basis. He declined [at para. 87] to deal with that question on "what is essentially an ex parte motion where the voices against any change are not being heard". He added [at para. 87] that the matter "should be attended to by the Legislature and not as an exercise of law reform on an uncontested fee approval motion".

[38] The motion judge should not have felt inhibited from seeking the assistance he considered necessary to address the question. He could have appointed amicus and invited intervention from interested groups, such as the Law Society, in regard to the interpretation of its Rules of Professional Conduct.

adversarial void also affects the case on appeal. The appellant decides what issues will be raised on appeal and what material will be included in the appeal book. There is no respondent to raise additional issues or to focus the court's attention on different material in the exhibit books. In crafting the appeal, the appellant is able to attack some findings of the court below and leave others undisturbed. For example, here the applications for approval of the settlement and determination of counsel fees were brought before the court in one motion; the motion judge dealt with both matters at one hearing, and he rendered one set [page50]of intertwined reasons. In those intertwined reasons, he expressly stated, at paras. 95, 104 and 113, [See Note 1 below] that his approval of counsel fees in the amount of $14.5 million was one of the factors on which his approval of the settlement was based. Yet, this appeal seeks to modify the motion judge's order only in respect of fees divorced from his approval of the settlement.

[40] This court, no less than the motion court, had the discretion to appoint an amicus or guardian to articulate opposition to the appeal. In hindsight, the appointment of amicus or guardian may have been of great assistance in this appeal. The analysis upon which this appeal turns was not raised in the appellants' material and did not come up at the appeal hearing. After the hearing, the court found it necessary to seek the appellants' written submissions on further issues.

Quantum of fees

[42] The appellants advance two arguments regarding the quantum of fees assessed by the motion judge.

[43] First, at the appeal they argued that the motion judge was bound to use the analytical framework of s. 33(7) of the CPA in assessing what would be an appropriate counsel fee and that he erred in law by failing to do so. In their supplementary factum filed after hearing, they argue that a motion judge determining fees under s. 32(4) must apply the analytical framework of s. 33(7) in a case in which counsel seek a premium by the application of a multiplier.

[44] Second, in their supplementary factum they argue that any mode of analysis should result in the approval of fees that are fair and reasonable. Here, they submit, the counsel fee that the motion judge approved was not fair or reasonable.

Sections 32 and 33 of the CPA

[45] In advancing their initial argument, the appellants presumed that the motion judge was bound to apply the two-step analysis of s. 33(7). Under s. 33(7), the court must first determine the number of hours worked and the hourly rate to be allowed in order to calculate a "base fee". Second, the court must determine the appropriate multiplier to be applied to the base [page51]fee in order to arrive at fair and reasonable compensation to class counsel for the risk they have assumed in representing the class on a contingency basis.

[46] The appellants contend that the two steps of s. 33(7) are distinct and must be separately applied. In determining the base fee, the court may consider a number of factors, including the time expended by class counsel, the legal complexity of the action, the importance of the matter to the client, class counsel's skill, the results achieved and the ability of the client to pay. By contrast, they say, the court may consider only two factors -- the degree of risk undertaken and the degree of success achieved -- in determining the multiplier to be applied to the base fee.

[47] The appellants argue that the motion judge conflated the first and second steps. Because he failed to distinguish between the two steps, they say, he considered factors relevant to the base fee in determining the multiplier to be applied to the base fee. They submit that he improperly weighed all the factors in one stage and, as a result, the class counsel fee he approved was lower than was warranted.

[48] In setting out the analysis the motion judge should have carried out, the appellants begin by submitting that the motion judge found that their base fee was reasonable. Although he made no express finding on that point, they say it is clear he approved their hourly rates and all the hours they recorded in their dockets. Using a base of $10,327,525.20 for fees and GST, they calculate that the "premium" the motion judge allowed amounts to a multiplier of only 1.29. Fees in the amount of $20 million, which they request on appeal, would amount to a multiplier of 1.78. They say that 1.78 is a modest multiplier in the circumstances.

[49] I note in passing that the appellants' calculations are not in accordance with the CPA. Section 33(3) defines the base fee as "the result of multiplying the total number of hours worked by an hourly rate". Under the statutory definition, the GST does not get multiplied. If the GST included the appellants' calculations is excluded, the premium granted by the motion judge would amount to 1.48, and fees of $20 million would represent a multiplier of 2.05.

[50] As noted, the appellants presumed that s. 33(7) of the CPA governs the determination of counsel fees in this case. I set out s. 33(7) in the context of the section as a whole:

> 33(1) Despite the Solicitors Act and An Act Respecting Champerty, being chapter 327 of Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, a solicitor and a representative party may enter into a written agreement providing for payment of fees and disbursements only in the event of success in a class proceeding. [page52]
> Interpretation: success in a proceeding
>
> (2) For the purpose of subsection (1), success in a class proceeding includes,
>
> (a) a judgment on common issues in favour of some or all class members; and
>
> (b) a settlement that benefits one or more class members.
> Definitions

(3) For the purposes of subsections (4) to (7),

"base fee" means the result of multiplying the total number of hours worked by an hourly rate;

"multiplier" means a multiple to be applied to a base fee.

Agreements to increase fees by a multiplier

(4) An agreement under subsection (1) may permit the solicitor to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier.

Motion to increase fee by a multiplier

(5) A motion under subsection (4) shall be heard by a judge who has,

(a) given judgment on common issues in favour of some or all class members; or

(b) approved a settlement that benefits any class member.

Idem

(6) Where the judge referred to in subsection (5) is unavailable for any reason, the regional senior judge shall assign another judge of the court for the purpose.

Idem

(7) On the motion of a solicitor who has entered into an agreement under subsection (4), the court,

(a) shall determine the amount of the solicitor's base fee;

(b) may apply a multiplier to the base fee that results in fair and reasonable compensation to the solicitor for the risk incurred in undertaking and continuing the proceeding under an agreement for payment only in the event of success; and

(c) shall determine the amount of disbursements to which the solicitor is entitled, including interest calculated on the disbursements incurred, as totalled at the end of each six-month period following the date of the agreement.

Idem

(8) In making a determination under clause (7)(a), the court shall allow only a reasonable fee.

Idem

[51] It is readily apparent that the motion judge did not proceed in the manner contemplated by s. 33(7). He made no express finding of counsel's "base fee" under s. 33(7)(a). He made no determination of the "multiplier" to be applied to the base fee under s. 33(7)(b). Instead, the motion judge considered a number of factors, including counsel's rates and the hours they docketed. Instead of applying a multiplier, he indicated he was allowing counsel a "premium" and concluded that a counsel fee in the amount of $14.5 million was fair and reasonable.

[52] While I agree that the motion judge did not apply the analysis contemplated by s. 33, I do not agree that he erred. The determination of counsel fees, on the facts of this case, is not governed by s. 33(7) of the CPA, but by s. 32(4). Section 32 provides:

Fees and disbursements

32(1) An agreement respecting fees and disbursements between a solicitor and a representative party shall be in writing and shall,

(a) state the terms under which fees and disbursements shall be paid;

(b) give an estimate of the expected fee, whether contingent on success in the class proceeding or not; and

(c) state the method by which payment is to be made, whether by lump sum, salary or otherwise.

Court to approve agreements

(2) An agreement respecting fees and disbursements between a solicitor and a representative party is not enforceable unless approved by the court, on the motion of the solicitor.

Priority of amounts owed under approved agreement

(3) Amounts owing under an enforceable agreement are a first charge on any settlement funds or monetary award.

Determination of fees where agreement not approved

(4) If an agreement is not approved by the court, the court may,

(a) determine the amount owing to the solicitor in respect of fees and disbursements;

(b) direct a reference under the rules of court to determine the amount owing; or

(c) direct that the amount owing be determined in any other manner.

[53] Section 32 is mandatory and generally applies to all fee agreements. Its own terms leave no doubt that it applies to contingency fee agreements as well. Section 32(1) requires that all fee agreements meet certain formal requirements. All fee agreements must be in writing and must state the terms under [page54]which fees and disbursements are to be paid, must provide an estimate of the expected fee and must state the method of payment. Section 32(2) provides that fee agreements in class proceedings are prima facie unenforceable. They are only enforceable after being approved by the court. Section 32(3) provides that amounts owing under an enforceable agreement, i.e., one that is approved by the court, are a first charge on any settlement moneys or monetary award. Finally, "if an agreement is not approved by the court", s. 32(4) gives the court the authority to determine class counsel fees or to direct the manner in which class counsel fees are to be determined or calculated.

[54] The court's authority to determine class counsel fees under s. 32(4) is distinct from its authority to determine class counsel fees under s. 33(7). The court's authority to determine fees under s. 32(4) arises "if an agreement is not approved by the court". The court's authority to determine fees under s. 33(7) arises "on the motion of the solicitor who has entered into an agreement under [s. 33(4)]".

[55] In their supplementary factum, the appellants contend that it should make no difference which one of these sections apply, as both should lead to the same result -- the approval of fees that are fair and reasonable. What is clear is that the mode of analysis open to the court under the two sections is different. The court's authority under s. 32(4) is far more expansive than its authority under s. 33(7). Section 33(7) provides only for the base fee/multiplier approach, whereas s. 32(4) provides the court with broad discretion to set the fee, direct a reference or direct the fee be determined "in any other manner".

[56] The relationship between ss. 32 and 33 has been the subject of previous judicial comment. Winkler J., in Crown Bay Hotel Ltd. Partnership v. Zrich Indemnity Co. of Canada (1998), 40 O.R. (3d) 83, [1998] O.J. No. 1891 (Gen. Div.), observed [at para. 11] that "[t]he scheme of the CPA seems to envisage that sections 32 and 33 operate independently of one another. Hence the duplicate provisions for court approval." In Crown Bay Hotel, Winkler J. concluded that the court had authority under s. 32(4) to approve a contingent counsel fee based on a percentage of the recovery, rather than on a base fee/multiplier as contemplated by s. 33(7).

[57] In an earlier case, Nantais v. Telectronics Proprietory (Canada) Ltd. (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 523, [1996] O.J. No. 5386 (Gen. Div.), Brockenshire J. commented [at para. 11] that the arrangement of ss. 32 and 33 was "somewhat confusing". He suggested that "it would have been clearer if s. 33(1) and (2) had come first, followed by s. 32 and then followed by s. 33(4)

[page55]through (9)". That is because s. 33(1) and (2) apply generally to make it clear that a contingency fee agreement is permitted by the CPA, despite the provisions of the Solicitors Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.15 and An Act Respecting Champerty, R.S.O. 1897, c. 327. Section 32(3) also applies generally. Sections 33(3) through (9), in Brockenshire J.'s view, apply in cases in which there is "an arrangement under which hourly rates are quoted, with a provision for applying to the court after the fact, for an increase in such hourly rate, based on the risk incurred in undertaking the case under an agreement to be paid only if successful".

[59] Cullity J. in Garland v. Enbridge Gas Distribution Inc., [2006] O.J. No. 4907, 56 C.P.C. (6th) 357 (S.C.J.), at para. 16 said:

> Section 32 is concerned with fee agreements -- contingent or otherwise -- in general. Section 33 is confined to a particular type of contingent fee agreement: one that contemplates, and permits, the solicitor to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier. The jurisdiction under this section appears to be premised and conditioned on the existence of such an agreement.

[60] I agree with these earlier decisions. The court's jurisdiction to determine class counsel fees under s. 33(7) is premised and conditioned on the existence of a fee agreement providing for payment of fees and disbursements only in the event of success and which permits class counsel to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier. To spell this out, I observe that the court's jurisdiction under s. 33(7) is brought into play by a motion of a solicitor [at para. 15] "who has entered into an agreement under subsection (4)". An agreement under s. 33(4) is one that permits counsel to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier.

applies is the fee agreement that was before this court in Gagne v. Silcorp Ltd. (1998), 41 O.R. (3d) 417, [1998] O.J. No. 4182 (C.A.). Gagne is the main authority on which the appellants relied in this appeal. In Gagne, Goudge J.A. provided the following description of the fee agreement [at para. 8]:

> As required by the Act, the appellant solicitors executed a written agreement with the representative plaintiff respecting their fees and disbursements. It provided that the payment of any legal fees was contingent on the class action being concluded successfully as defined by the Act. It also provided that the base fee would be the product of the hours worked by the solicitors and their usual hourly rates. In addition, it set out that the solicitors could seek court approval for a multiplier to be applied to [page56]that base fee. Finally, the agreement described two examples of how this might work[.]

[62] In the case on appeal, the agreement is quite different. Paragraph 9 of the agreement provides:

> In the event of Success in the Action, and in addition to any costs paid by the Defendants to the Solicitor, the Solicitor shall be paid and shall receive the aggregate of the following in accordance with paragraph 8:
> (a) an amount equal to any disbursements not paid by the Defendant(s) as costs, plus applicable taxes plus interest thereon in accordance with s. 33(7) (c) of the Act;
> plus
>
> (b) the greater of:
>
> (i) one-third of the Recovery; or
>
> (ii) the Base Fee increased by a multiplier of four;
>
> less
> (iii) the fee portion of any costs paid to the Solicitor in accordance with paragraph 8;

plus

(iv) applicable taxes.

[63] This paragraph, which is the agreement regarding class counsel fees, does not provide that counsel may bring a motion to have the court increase the base fee by a multiplier. Rather, if para. 9 were given effect, counsel fees may not even be premised on the base fee/multiplier approach, but on one-third of the recovery.

[64] Nowhere else in the agreement is it stipulated that class counsel is permitted to bring a motion to have their fees increased by a multiplier. Recital D of the agreement merely states that "[t]he Act provides, among other things, that a Fee Agreement: . . . (d) may permit a solicitor to be paid by having a Base Fee increased by a multiplier or as a percentage of the Recovery". While this is accurate as a general statement, it does not bring the fee agreement under s. 33(4) of the CPA. It does not, as a matter of contract, "permit the solicitor to make a motion to the court to have his or her fees increased by a multiplier".

[65] The distinction is not merely technical. Class members may understand the phrase "[t]he Act . . . may permit a solicitor to be paid . . . a base fee increased by a multiplier" to mean that such fees are payable if specified in the fee agreement. On the other hand, an agreement that precisely complies with s. 33(4) of the CPA can leave no doubt in the mind of class members that the size of the multiplier and the fees themselves rest completely [page57]within the discretion of the court. It is a matter of emphasis. A fee agreement that simply states that "the Act provides that a Fee Agreement may permit a solicitor to be paid by having a Base Fee increased by a multiplier" does not emphasize that the court must, in every case, approve both the base fee and the multiplier before the fee agreement is enforceable.

[66] The agreement in this case does make clear the court must approve it. Paragraph 4 of the fee agreement states, "This agreement requires Court approval. If this agreement is approved by the Court, it shall bind the Solicitor, the Client, and all members of the Class who do not opt out of the Action." Paragraph 4 speaks to the fee agreement as a whole. No provision of the agreement, however, expressly indicates that the court must determine what fees will be allowed to counsel.

[67] It is interesting to note the difference between para. 8, which deals with costs paid by the defendants, and para. 9, which deals with counsel fees. Paragraph 8 expressly provides that counsel's entitlement to costs payable to the client is specifically subject to the approval of the court. Paragraph 9 sets out precisely how counsel fees are to be calculated, but unlike para. 8, does not state that counsel fees are subject to the approval of the court.

[68] I conclude that the fee agreement in this case does not satisfy the requirements of s. 33(4). It does not permit counsel to apply to the court for a multiplier, but instead stipulates how counsel fees are to be calculated. The agreement for the fees stipulated would become enforceable only if it were approved by the court under s. 32(2). If the agreement was not approved, then, under s. 32(4), the court could determine the amount owing to counsel.

[69] In this case, the motion judge did not expressly state that he was disapproving the fee agreement. Section 32(4), however, does not require that a fee agreement be expressly disapproved before it applies. Section 32(4) applies whenever there is no approval of the fee agreement. This is made clear by the opening words of s. 32(4), which clearly state that the court's authority to determine the amount owing to class counsel in respect of fees and disbursements under that subsection arises "if an agreement is not approved by the court". Cullity J. put it well in Martin v. Barrett, [2008] O.J. No. 3813 (S.C.J.), at para. 35: "If the court withholds approval, it then has a discretion to determine the fee pursuant to section 32(4)(a)."

[70] There can be no doubt the motion judge withheld approval of the fee agreement in this case. Had he approved it, it would be enforceable and the fees owing under para. 9 would be a first charge on the settlement fund by virtue of s. 32(3) of the [page58]CPA. By assessing fees in a different amount, the motion judge made evident he was not approving the fee agreement. Section 32(3) makes apparent that a substantive as well as a formal review of the fee agreement is necessary for court approval. The current practice of some trial courts to approve the fee agreement simply upon being satisfied that it contains the formal requirements of s. 32(1) ignores the effect of s. 32(3). The motion judge in this case followed the correct approach by withholding approval of the fee agreement.

[71] Because the fee agreement in this case was not approved and because it does not meet the requirements of s. 33(4), I conclude that class counsel were not entitled to invoke the application of s. 33(7). Rather, counsel's fees in this case fell to be determined under s. 32(4).

[72] I do not accept the contention advanced in the appellants' supplementary factum that, even if s. 32(4) applies, the court must apply the analytical framework of s. 33(7) when counsel who have taken the case on a contingency basis apply for a multiplier. The wording of s. 32(4) is clear. The court has broad authority to itself determine the "the amount owing to the solicitor in respect of fees", or even to direct that the amount owing be determined "in any other manner". Gagne, the only Court of Appeal authority on which the appellants rely for this argument, was a s. 33(7) case. The proper view is that the court acting under s. 32(4)(a) has the authority to determine the fees owing to the solicitor after considering and weighing all relevant factors. It is within the court's discretion to test the reasonableness of the quantum of a lump sum fee by looking at the result as a multiplier, as Cumming J. suggested in Vitapharm Canada Ltd. v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd., [2005] O.J. No. 1117, [2005] O.T.C. 208 (S.C.J.). It is, however, a matter of discretion.

[73] I conclude that the motion judge was not bound to apply the base fee/multiplier analysis provided for in s. 33(7) of the CPA. He committed no error in exercising his authority under s. 32(4) of the CPA to determine class counsel fees without determining the amount of the appellants' base fee and applying a multiplier to it.

[74] Before leaving this issue, I add that it is not apparent to me that, before the motion judge, class counsel pressed the application of the base fee/multiplier analysis, which they now allege he erred in failing to apply. The notices to the class members and the notice of motion filed with the motion court are more consonant with the application of s. 32(4) than with s. 33(7) of the CPA.

[75] The notice of certification, drafted and advertised by class counsel, advised the class members that the agreement "which must be approved by the court to be effective, provides for a [page59]contingency fee of at least one-third of the amount recovered in the class action". The notice of the approval hearing stated that "[c]lass counsel will ask the court to approve their fee agreement with the plaintiffs and award $27.5 million in cash in full payment of the plaintiffs' obligations to class counsel". Neither indicates that counsel would apply to the court for the application of a multiplier to their base fee.

[76] Paragraph 1(d) of the notice of motion sought an order "approving the agreements as to fees, disbursements and taxes between [the representative plaintiffs] and Harvey T. Strosberg ('Agreements')". Paragraph 1(e) sought an order "fixing the amount of class counsel's fees at $27.5 million". The notice of motion refers generally to both ss. 32 and 33, but does not seek to have counsel's base fees increased by a multiplier, as contemplated by s. 33(7). Nowhere in the notice of motion is there a reference to either the base fee or a multiplier. The supporting affidavits filed on the motion do not refer to a multiplier.

[77] Finally, the motion judge made no reference to any argument by the appellants that he was bound to apply the base fee/multiplier analysis, as would be expected had the argument been advanced. He only referred to the position in the appellants' notice of motion and notices to the plaintiff class that they were seeking a specific dollar amount -- namely, $27.5 million.

[78] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal. Before moving on, I caution that these reasons should not be taken to indicate acceptance of the appellants' submissions on how s. 33(7) should be interpreted and applied.

Reasonableness of class counsel fees

[79] I turn then to the second leg of the appellants' argument, that, irrespective of the mode of analysis used, the quantum of fees allowed by the motion judge was too low. The appellants submit that the amount of $14.5 million is inadequate to achieve the policy objective of providing incentives for lawyers to undertake complex and protracted class actions, and that the amount is not fair and reasonable compensation given the work they performed, the risk they undertook and the success they achieved.

[80] At para. 25 of his reasons, the motion judge set out the general principles that apply to the assessment of class counsel fees:

> Factors relevant in assessing the reasonableness of the fees of class counsel include: (a) the factual and legal complexities of the matters dealt with; (b) the risk undertaken, including the risk that the matter might not be certified; (c) the degree of responsibility assumed by class counsel; (d) the monetary value of the matters in issue; (e) the importance of the matter to the [page60]class; (f) the degree of skill and competence demonstrated by class counsel; (g) the results achieved; (h) the ability of the class to pay; (i) the expectations of the class as to the amount of the fees; (j) the opportunity cost to class counsel in the expenditure of time in pursuit of the litigation and settlement.

[81] There can be no quarrel that these factors are relevant in assessing the reasonableness of class counsel fees. These factors have been applied in a number of cases, including those cited by the motion judge.

[82] The motion judge found that the class proceeding dealt with matters of high factual and legal complexity, had a substantial monetary value, was important to the class and that class counsel performed with competence and admirable skill. The motion judge also considered that class counsel had assumed a high risk in taking on the class proceeding and he recognized that that risk should be rewarded. He also attached weight [at para. 127] to the fact that "Class Counsel's compensation must be sufficient to provide a real economic incentive to lawyers to take on a class proceeding and to do it well".

[83] The motion judge, however, refused to accept class counsel's contention that they deserved fees in the amount of $27.5 million for achieving a settlement worth $120 million because, in his view, the settlement was not worth $120 million. The motion judge seemed taken aback by class counsel's insistence that the settlement had a value of $120 million as he "would have thought it obvious that the settlement in the case at bar, which involves cash, coupons, and releases, is not worth $120 million". He repeated [at para. 118] that the settlement was not worth $120 million "for the purposes of the contingency fee agreement". He described [at para. 17] the result as "adequate or satisfactory" and said it was "to spin a silk purse from a sow's ear to suggest that the result was excellent". He added [at para. 93] that an objecting class member "was right in expressing disappointment about the settlement".

[84] The motion judge had a solid foundation for finding that the settlement did not have a value of $120 million. To begin with, the motion judge did not regard the transaction credits as having a benefit to the class members equal to their face value. He was sceptical that there would be much take-up and stated his view that the most likely beneficiaries would not be class members but future Money Mart customers. The implication that class counsel do not earn a premium in fees by obtaining benefits for persons outside the class is sound.

[85] The motion judge also observed [at para. 97] that the transaction credits could be viewed "as a business promotion [page61]scheme under which Money Mart discounts its price and makes less profit from a profitable transaction" but "obtains business it would otherwise not have obtained". He also drew attention to the fact that the settlement provided that a maximum of $5 in transaction credits could be used per transaction. This meant that class members would have to enter into a number of further transactions with Money Mart repeatedly in order to exhaust their transaction credits.

[86] The motion judge was not impressed with class counsel's argument that the transaction credits should be considered to have marketable value because Money Mart's competitors would likely honour the transaction credits. That competitors would find acceptance of the transaction credits attractive confirmed that credits were a business promotion scheme for more payday loans, in the motion judge's mind.

[87] The motion judge, in making the point that the transaction credits were not equivalent to cash, surmised that class counsel would likely not accept an assignment of $27.5 million worth of transaction credits as payment of their fees. In my view, this was a fair inference based on class counsel's position that the entire cash remnant of $27.5 million should be devoted to paying their fees rather than them taking a share of the "marketable" transaction credits. The motion judge concluded [at para. 97] that it was "hard to paint [the transaction credits] as a success for the mission of this class proceeding".

[88] The motion judge also substantially discounted the value of the debt forgiveness component of the settlement. He considered that payday loans were uneconomical to recover given their small value and the expense of collecting them. The evidence indicated that much of the debt forgiveness component of the settlement released debts that were already written off or reserved in Money Mart's financial records.

[89] The motion judge did recognize [at para. 104] that the $30.5 million in cash that the settlement provided was solid value, though he observed it "should be present-valued because it is being paid in instalments over approximately two and a half years and there is no interest until the payments are due".

[90] These matters provided an abundant basis for the motion judge's finding that the settlement was not worth $120 million. The appellants' arguments at the appeal hearing and in their written submissions were all premised on the settlement being worth $120 million. However, they did not establish that the motion judge made any error in arriving at the clear finding of fact that it was not. The appellants complain that the motion judge made no finding as to what the settlement was worth. [page62]The record before the motion judge, compiled by the appellants, provided a poor basis for doing so. There was no independent expert opinion on the value of the transaction credits or the debt reduction.

[91] Besides finding that the settlement was worth less than the appellants contended, another important factor in the motion judge's approval of the settlement was the $13 million in cash that would become available for distribution to the class upon class counsel fees being fixed in the amount of $14.5 million instead of the $27.5 million that the appellants sought.

[92] Placing importance on providing fair and reasonable compensation to counsel and providing incentives to lawyers to undertake class actions, as the motion judge noted [at para. 127], does not mean that the court should "ignore the other factors that are relevant to the determination of a reasonable fee". In this light, it was an important aspect of the motion judge's analysis that the settlement he approved provide some cash for distribution among the class members. The motion judge stressed [at para. 96] that the settlement he was approving was one in which "Class Counsel's fee does not take up all the cash portion of the settlement".

[93] The motion judge found [at para. 130] that "[h]aving regard to all the factors, an all-inclusive award of $14.5 million is a reasonable fee in the circumstances of this case". He concluded [at para. 130] that $14.5 million was "ample compensation and a reasonable fee" and there was "no necessity to award more having regard to the success achieved and the risk taken".

[94] The appellants submit that the motion judge made errors in his analysis of specific issues. I agree he may have overstated one or two things, but this does not undermine his central reasoning and the conclusion that he reached.

[95] For example, the appellants submit that the motion judge's comment that the settlement failed to achieve behaviour modification is unreasonable because the section of the Criminal Code prohibiting criminal rates of interest was amended in May 2007 to exempt from its application small short-term loans in provinces that enact legislation to regulate the payday loan industry. At the time of the hearing before the motion judge, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Ontario had introduced such legislation. The provisions of Ontario's Payday Loans Act, 2008, S.O. 2008, c. 9, which regulate the cost of payday loans borrowing, came into force on December 15, 2009. The appellants make the point that it was impossible for the settlement to achieve "behaviour modification" because the new legislation [page63]legalized the defendants' business practices. The motion judge erred, they say, by minimizing the success they achieved on the basis that the settlement did not accomplish "behaviour modification".

[96] The motion judge could have explained more clearly why he commented [at para. 99] that "there was not a peep about behaviour modification" during the settlement approval motion. As I understand his reasons, the point he was making is that the settlement, by providing coupons for the defendants' services, provided support for the payday loan industry and hence diminished the degree of success achieved. The settlement did not sever the business relationship between the defendants and the class members who receive transaction credits under the settlement, but rather continued that business relationship. I gather this because, after observing there was no behaviour modification, the motion judge said [at para. 100]:

> [B]ut for the members of the Transaction Credit group, if they are to obtain a benefit under this settlement it is by abandoning the original purposes of this class action, which was to enjoin, not encourage, payday loans pricing policies. Once again, it is hard to paint this as a success for the mission of this class proceeding.

[97] I have no doubt that the motion judge did not expect that a settlement or judgment could have resulted in the modification of the defendants' business practices. The motion judge was aware of the new legislation. He set out the evolution of the legislative changes and noted the irony that the defendant's charge for the representative plaintiff's loan was now apparently legal in Ontario and that, indeed, Money Mart could even charge him an additional $2. The motion judge could have meant nothing more than that there was no "behaviour modification" as far as these members of the class were concerned because the scheme of the settlement destined them to continue to borrow payday loans from the defendants on essentially the same, albeit now unquestionably legal, terms.

[98] In any event, I do not see the motion judge's comment about the lack of behaviour modification as the foundation for his conclusion that the value of the settlement was much less than the claimed $120 million.

[99] The appellants also take strenuous and justified umbrage to the motion judge's description of the settlement as the self-serving design of class counsel. The motion judge said [at para. 122]:

> With respect to the factor of the class' ability to pay, the settlement has been structured in a way that the class is able to pay Class Counsel's fee, but that is the self-serving design of Class Counsel, and as I have already [page64]explained, the class would not have been able to pay the contingency fee if Class Counsel had been able to enforce the contingency fee agreement based on its own self-serving evaluation of the value of the settlement.

[100] I agree with the appellants that a court ought not to attribute self-interest to counsel in the absence of a proper evidentiary basis. There was, in this case, no evidentiary basis for the modifier "self-serving". Regrettably, the risk of such an overstatement is increased in a non-adversarial motion brought by class counsel that requires the court to depart from its traditional neutrality and take on an active role to protect the interests of the class. In fulfilling that active role, the motion judge could allude to the fact that the settlement was structured to provide for a cash payment of $27.5 million and that class counsel was seeking approval of fees in the amount of $27.5 million, and highlight that this would leave the class members only with transaction credits and debt forgiveness. His use of the modifier "self-serving" in making that observation was unfortunate.

[101] None of the isolated comments that the appellants objected to provide any reason to interfere with the motion judge's exercise of discretion in setting class counsel fees.

[102] The motion judge's determination was discretionary. The appellants have not established any basis for interfering with his determination that $14.5 million was a fair and reasonable fee for class counsel in this case.

The fees of PWC and Mr. Anand

[103] Class counsel retained PWC and Mr. Anand to perform certain work on the basis that they would only be paid if and when the action was successful and then on the same basis as class counsel. For example, PWC agreed to the following:

> We understand that our fees will be payable on a contingency basis. We will accumulate our hours. In the event that your action is successful when you achieve either a settlement or an award from the court, our fees will be payable on a pro rata basis with payment of your own fees and the fees of other members of your team. To this end, our usual fees for time incurred would attract the same multiplier applied to usual hourly rates as the multiplier applied to each of your team's members.
> Our expenses incurred will also be on a contingency basis. They will be paid, pro rata, with the disbursements of the members of your team from any proceeds received before distribution of any fees to the team members.

In the event that your action does not result in a settlement or an award from the court, no amount will be payable to us on account of fees for time incurred or expenses.

[104] The motion judge decided that the fees of PWC and Mr. Anand would be treated as disbursements of class counsel. [page65]The appellants submit that the motion judge erred by failing to approve PWC and Mr. Anand's fees in an amount consistent with the contingency basis on which they were retained. The time value, taxes and disbursements for the work of PWC amounted to $835,629.03; those of Mr. Anand amounted to $16,800. Though the motion judge treated these amounts as disbursements incurred by class counsel, class counsel say they remain contractually obligated to pay these service providers on the basis on which they were retained.

[105] By way of relief, the appellants seek an order that a premium be added to the fees of PWC and Mr. Anand in proportion to the premium added to the fees of the appellants. The unstated premise of this request seems to be that treating the consultants' fees as contingency fees would enlarge the aggregate quantum of fees allowed. I do not agree that this would necessarily be so.

[106] Insofar as the premium granted depends on the risk undertaken in a contingency case, the issue is the quantum of that risk, not the number of risk-takers who have shared it. It is illogical that the total amount of the premium allowed for a given total risk should be higher because there are more risk-takers. For example, the premium allowed should not increase because class counsel in this case was comprised of four law firms. Thus, if the premium allowed to class counsel is predicated on the risk of counsel's fees and disbursements, granting service providers a contingency premium should result in a redistribution of the premium rather than an enlargement of the premium. After all, the risk undertaken by class counsel is diminished by the amount of risk the service providers undertake when they are retained on a contingency basis. If the CPA permits the court to allow contingency premiums to service providers, the appellants, to obtain an increase in the total premium allowed, would have to demonstrate that the motion judge did not base his determination of the premium on the total risk of undertaking the case, including the disbursements for the services of PWC and Mr. Anand.

[107] As I mentioned earlier, the motion judge considered [at para. 87] it unwise to determine the general question whether the CPA could be interpreted to permit contingency fee arrangements with service providers on what was "essentially an ex parte motion where the voices against any change are not being heard". He decided to treat the accounts of PWC and Mr. Anand as disbursements in this case because he was troubled by the appellants' contention for four reasons. First, as non-lawyers, the service providers could not be appointed class [page66]counsel. Second, the CPA does not envisage contingency fee agreements with anyone other than properly appointed class counsel. He pointed out [at para. 85] that s. 32(2) of the CPA refers to an agreement respecting fees and disbursements "between a solicitor and a representative party". Third, it was not clear that the arrangement complied with the Law Society of Upper Canada's Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 2.08(8)(a), for example, provides that a lawyer shall not "directly or indirectly share, split, or divide his or her fees with any person who is not a licensee". And fourth, the arrangement with the non-lawyers might well be champertous. The motion judge pointed out that An Act Respecting Champerty was still in effect.

[108] I agree that the appellants placed before him a fundamental question with far-reaching implications for the future of class actions, and that it is usually desirable to hear the perspectives of all the interests that might be affected before deciding such questions.

[109] While that may be generally so, in my view the answer to the far-reaching question raised in this case is straightforward. The CPA does not contemplate contingency fee arrangements with persons other than class counsel and does not give the court the jurisdiction to allow a service provider a premium on its fees.

[110] Section 33(1) allows a contingency agreement "between a solicitor and a representative party". Section 32(1) requires all agreements between a solicitor and a representative party, including contingency agreements, to meet certain formal requirements. Section 32(2) interferes with freedom of contract by providing that all agreements between a solicitor and a representative party are unenforceable unless approved by the court. If contingency agreements with service providers are allowed under the CPA as the appellants contend, I find it odd that the Act does not set out formal requirements for such agreements or make them unenforceable unless approved by the court.

[111] Section 33(7), which the appellants wish to have applied in this case, could not be clearer. Read in context, s. 33(3)'s definition of "base fee" clearly refers to the hours worked by counsel multiplied by counsel's hourly rates. The only multiplier that the court has jurisdiction to grant under s. 33(7)(b) is one that results in a fair and reasonable compensation to the solicitor for the risk undertaken. Under s. 33(7)(c), the court has jurisdiction to determine the amount of disbursements, but these are disbursements "to which the solicitor is entitled". The text of s. 33 is not concerned with fair and reasonable compensation to [page67]others for risk incurred in undertaking work on the action on a contingency basis.

[112] Section 32(4) may not be as rigidly structured, but still provides the court with authority to determine the amount owing to the solicitor in respect of fees and disbursements. As the appellants argue in their supplementary submissions, the application of the two sections should theoretically lead to roughly the same result -- fair and reasonable compensation for class counsel. I do not read the broader more general authority granted to the court by s. 32(4) as extending to allow a premium to service providers in order to achieve fair and reasonable compensation for them for the risk undertaken in the provision of their services.

read in the context of the entire statute and considered in light of its purpose, leads me to conclude that the legislature did not intend to grant the court jurisdiction to allow service providers a premium for providing their services on a contingency basis. The legislature's intent was to authorize the court to allow class counsel a premium or multiplier for the risk incurred by investing their time and underwriting disbursements, if they take on the case on a contingency basis. The representative plaintiff's selection of counsel who is prepared and able to carry the case on a contingency basis is relevant to the court's determination whether the plan for the proceeding sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the class.

[114] As I find the text of the current legislation to be clear, I do not find it necessary to deal with the other legal and policy arguments advanced by the appellant. Suffice it to say, I agree with the motion judge that what the appellants seek [at para. 87] "would amount to a fundamental change to the design of the Act". The policy issues are not confined to access to justice considerations, the only one identified by the appellants. For example, the broad proposition the appellants assert, that contingency agreements with service providers should be allowed, would apply to expert witnesses and others whose work products are tendered in evidence. This could give rise to concerns about the quality and reliability of the work product.

[115] I might add, I do not anticipate that this decision will have the dire impact on access to justice that the appellants assert. In the almost 20 years the CPA has been in effect, a great number of class actions have proceeded without the court allowing premiums to service providers. [page68]

The fees of FMC and Prof. Krishna

[116] Class counsel also retained FMC and Prof. Krishna to perform certain specialized discrete tasks. The total time value of the work they performed was $32,002.96 and $10,237.50, respectively. Class counsel's agreements with them are not in the record, but the motion judge found that they too were retained by class counsel on a contingency basis. Class counsel requested that the multiplier or premium the motion judge granted to class counsel also be applied to the fees of FMC and Prof. Krishna. The motion judge refused this request and treated their fees as disbursements incurred by class counsel. On appeal, the appellants ask that the order of the motion judge be varied to treat Prof. Krishna and FMC as part of class counsel, and that a premium be added to their fees in proportion to the premium added to the fees of the appellants.

[117] Different considerations apply to the work of FMC and Prof. Krishna because they are lawyers. The same concerns of fee splitting and champerty do not arise in relation to lawyers who have actually worked on the client's file.

[118] The appellants' position is that FMC and Prof. Krishna became part of the class counsel team and their fees should be treated as class counsel fees. They say that the motion judge refused to recognize them as class counsel on the erroneous belief that court approval was necessary for any change in the plaintiff's representation. The motion judge did note that the litigation plan that the representative plaintiff had approved by the court defined class counsel to be the four law firms Sutts, Strosberg, Paliare Roland, Koskie, Minksy and David Stratas of Heenan, Blaikie.

[119] The appellants rely on this court's decision in Fantl v. Transamerica Life Canada (2009), 95 O.R. (3d) 767, [2009] O.J. No. 1826 (C.A.) to submit that no court approval was required to enlarge the class counsel group to include FMC and Prof. Krishna. Fantl merits closer examination. In Fantl, the law firm acting for the representative plaintiff in a class action split up and its former members disputed who should continue as class counsel. The narrow issue was whether the representative plaintiff could choose to retain one of the successor firms and serve a notice of change of solicitors without court approval. Winkler C.J.O. writing for this court said [at para. 47] that he did not view it "as necessary for the plaintiff to seek and obtain approval of the court for every decision involving the selection or change of counsel". Yet, he immediately added, "However, I am of the view that the case management judge charged with responsibility for [page69]the supervision of the proceeding should be immediately and directly notified of such a change."

[121] First, in this case there is no indication the representative plaintiff made a decision to change the makeup of the class counsel team indicated in the litigation plan. In Fantl, what was in issue was the client's choice of new counsel. Winkler C.J.O. said, at para. 44 of Fantl, that "[t]he representative plaintiff in a class action lawsuit is a genuine plaintiff, who chooses, retains and instructs counsel and to whom counsel report". I can see no indication in the record that the representative plaintiff made or participated in any decision to retain FMC and Prof. Krishna as class counsel in this action. While counsel may require assistance and may incur disbursements on the clients' behalf, clients decide who are their counsel.

[122] Second, if there was a change in the composition of class counsel, the court was never immediately and directly notified of the change as Fantl indicates is required.

[123] Moreover, the record does not indicate that Prof. Krishna or FMC were intended to have a solicitor-client relationship with the representative plaintiff. It is not clear to me in what sense FMC and Prof. Krishna are said to be class counsel except for the purpose of being entitled to the same premium allowed to class counsel. I briefly review the relevant portions of the record.

[124] The affidavit of Patricia A. Speight, sworn February 1, 2010, in support of the motion under the heading "Class Counsel" states that "[t]he four law firms acting on behalf of the Class are SS [Sutts, Strosberg], Heenans [Heenan Blaikie], PR [Paliare Roland Rosenberg Rothstein] and KM [Koskie, Minksy]". It adds that other lawyers from other firms "assisted class counsel as required".

[125] The affidavit goes on to describe the role fulfilled by each of Sutts, Strosberg, Heenan Blaikie, Paliare Roland and Koskie, Minksy, but does not mention Prof. Krishna or FMC in this section. The motion material includes costs briefs for Sutts, Strosberg, Heenan Blaikie, Paliare Roland and Koskie, Minksy setting out the supporting details for their fees and disbursements. The motion material before the motion judge did not contain costs briefs for FMC and Prof. Krishna. Without details of their rates and hours worked, it was not possible to treat their fees as class counsel fees under the CPA.

[126] In a later section of Ms. Speight's main affidavit under the heading "Class Counsel Obtained Advice From Others", the affidavit sets out that "class counsel expanded the counsel group to include Professor Vern Krishna who is an expert in international [page70]taxation". In the same paragraph, it indicates that a U.S. insolvency firm was also retained and that Prof. Krishna and the U.S. counsel had "reviewed and approved the parts of this affidavit stating their information, opinions and beliefs". The affidavit does not mention FMC.

> Money Mart had entered into a settlement agreement with counsel in an Alberta payday class action at the time that the Ontario action was structured as a national class. A class member, resident in Alberta, retained SS to file an objection to the proposed Alberta settlement. Mr. Strosberg attended in Alberta and met with plaintiffs' counsel in the Alberta action. As a result of this meeting, Alberta counsel did not proceed to tender the settlement to the Alberta court for approval. Money Mart then sued the objector and sought damages against him and plaintiffs' counsel in Alberta . . . . [Class counsel] arranged for Fraser Milner to act on behalf of the objecting class member . . . with the responsibility of defending the action for the objector[.]

[128] The material indicates that class counsel used FMC and Prof. Krishna as consultants to perform discrete, specialized tasks. FMC was retained on a different action to represent an individual other than the representative plaintiff in this case. Prof. Krishna's work product seems to have been treated like that of an expert witness on international taxation issues.

[129] The appellants claim that paragraph 5(d) of the retainer agreement allowed them to include FMC and Prof. Krishna in the class counsel group. I disagree. Paragraph 5(d) authorizes the Solicitor to > . . . use such persons or resources from the firms Paliare Roland LLP, Koskie Minsky LLP, Heenan Blaikie LLP and any other firm as the Solicitor deems necessary and their services shall be deemed to be provided as members of the Solicitor's law firm.

[130] I do not read the paragraph as purporting to allow class counsel to unilaterally establish a solicitor-client relationship on behalf of the representative plaintiff with any person or resource "used" by class counsel. If the paragraph does intend to do so, it would be unacceptable as it is inconsistent with Winkler C.J.O.'s observation in Fantl that the representative plaintiff is a genuine plaintiff, who chooses, retains and instructs counsel and to whom counsel report. Whatever the import of this paragraph, to the extent it deals with fees, it is part of the fee agreement that was not approved and is not enforceable.

[131] The appeal, which is brought on behalf of class counsel, indicates the appellants are the four law firms Sutts, Strosberg, Heenan Blaikie, Paliare Roland and Koskie, Minksy. Prof. Krishna [page71]and FMC are not included as part of class counsel for the purposes of this appeal.

[132] The motion judge had the general discretion to determine the allowable fees and disbursements in this case. As the material before him did not show that the representative plaintiff made or was even aware of any change in the composition of counsel representing him, or that FMC and Prof. Krishna functioned in a solicitor-client relationship with him, I see no error in his treatment of the fees of FMC and Prof.

Krishna as disbursements rather than as part of class counsel's base fee.

Compensation for the representative plaintiff

[133] The motion judge agreed that the representative plaintiff's "contribution to the class action exceeded that which is normally expected of a representative plaintiff" and granted him compensation in the amount of $3,000 as requested by class counsel. However, without discussion, he ordered that the representative plaintiff's compensation be paid out of class counsel fees. The appellant argues that the motion judge erred by not ordering the representative plaintiff's compensation to be paid out of the settlement fund.

[134] In advancing this argument, class counsel relied upon the decision of Sharpe J. in Windisman v. Toronto College Park Ltd., [1996] O.J. No. 2897, 3 C.P.C. (4th) 369 (Gen. Div.). Counsel did not draw the court's attention to the more recent decisions of Cullity J. in Garland v. Enbridge Gas Distribution Inc., supra, and McCutcheon v. Cash Store Inc., [2008] O.J. No. 5241, 174 A.C.W.S. (3d) 90 (S.C.J.), and Cumming J. in Walker v. Union Gas Ltd., [2009] O.J. No. 536, 74 C.P.C. (6th) 366 (S.C.J.). It seems that the most that can be said is that judges of the Superior Court have different approaches with respect to the payment of the representative plaintiff's fees. This court has never dealt with the issue.

[135] I take the view that as a general matter the representative plaintiff's fee should be paid out of the settlement fund and not out of class counsel fees. Class counsel fees are predicated on the work that class counsel have done for the class. Allocating a part of that fee to a layperson, especially a representative plaintiff, raises the spectre of fee splitting, a concern the motion judge expressed at an earlier point in his reasons.

[136] In the absence of any reason for providing otherwise, I conclude that the $3,000 compensation for the representative plaintiff should be paid out of the settlement fund. I would vary the motion judge's order accordingly. [page72]

Conclusion

[137] I would allow the appeal in part by varying para. 31 of the motion judge's order to provide that the compensation for the representative plaintiff be paid out of the settlement fund. I would dismiss the appeal in all other respects.

Appeal allowed in part.

(Class Proceeding commenced under Part 5.1 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106)

ORDER AND REASONS

I. Introduction

[1] On December 7, 2021, this Court, jointly with the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench [Courts], heard submissions from the parties for approval of the First Nations Drinking Water Settlement Agreement [Settlement Agreement or Settlement]. The Courts have concurrently issued their respective Orders and Reasons approving of the Settlement Agreement [Settlement Approval Decision]. This Order concerning Class Counsel's legal fees should be read together with the Settlement Approval Decision.

[2] On December 8, 2021, after the Settlement Approval Hearing, Class Counsel and the Defendant moved for the approval of Class Counsel's legal fees. The Settlement Agreement defines Class Counsel as McCarthy Tétrault LLP [McCarthy Tétrault] and Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP [OKT].

[3] Under Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 and subsection 38(2) of The Class Proceedings Act, CCSM, c C130, all payments to counsel flowing from a class proceeding must be approved by the Court. The Court must ensure that legal fees payable to Class Counsel are "fair and reasonable" in all of the circumstances (Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 at para 28 [Manuge]; McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1077 at para 2 [McLean]).

[4] As explained in the Settlement Approval Decision, the two Courts exercised their respective jurisdiction to jointly hear the motion for the approval of the Settlement Agreement and Class Counsel's legal fees. As required, each Court separately and independently addressed the governing test as it relates to the issue before the Courts of whether Class Counsel's legal fees are fair and reasonable.

[5] As also noted in the Settlement Approval Decision, the reasons for Settlement Agreement Approval and Class Counsel legal fee approval have been released separately but concurrently by each Court. After a full analysis, the two Courts are in complete agreement with the results and the reasons therefore. Accordingly, the Orders and Reasons released by each Court replicate to a large extent the reasons of the other. This represents what the Courts which to underscore as complete concurrence.

[6] Article 2, section 2.03 of the Settlement Agreement explicitly states that Class Counsel's legal fees are severable from the approval of the Settlement Agreement:

> 2.03 Legal Fees Severable
> Class Counsel's fees for prosecuting the Actions have been negotiated separately from this Agreement and remain subject to approval by the Courts. The Courts' refusal to approve Class Counsel's fees will have no effect on the implementation of this Agreement. In the event that the Courts refuse to approve the fees of Class Counsel set out in Section 18.01, (a) the remainder of the provisions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect and in no way shall be affected, impaired or invalidated, and (b) Section 18.01 shall be modified to reflect such Class Counsel fees as are approved by the Courts, while otherwise effecting the original intent of the Parties as closely as possible.

[7] At the outset, we wish to emphasize that a very important feature of the Settlement Agreement is that the Class is not responsible for paying legal fees for any work leading to the Settlement Agreement or for advice provided to the Class regarding the Settlement Agreement and its acceptance by the Class (Article 18, section 18.01). In addition, the Settlement Agreement provides that the Class will not be responsible for paying Class Counsel's legal fees for ongoing future legal services (Article 18, section 18.02). These provisions read as follows:

>
> Subject to approval by the Courts, and within sixty (60) days of the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay Class Counsel the amount of fifty-three million dollars ($53,000,000), plus applicable taxes, in respect of their legal fees and disbursements for the prosecution of the Actions to the date of the Settlement Approval Hearing, together with advice to Class Members regarding the Agreement and Acceptance.
>
> 18.02 Ongoing Fees
>
> (1) Subject to approval by the Courts, within sixty (60) days after the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay to Class Counsel the additional sum of five million dollars ($5 million), plus applicable taxes, in trust ("Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees") for fees and disbursements for services to be rendered by Class Counsel and the Joint Committee in accordance with this Agreement, including the implementation and administration of this Agreement, for a period of four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing ("Ongoing Fees").
> (2) Class Counsel shall maintain appropriate records and seek Court approval for payment of the Ongoing Fees from the Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees.
>
> (4) Class Counsel shall apply to the Courts for orders directing the payment of any Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees that remain in trust four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing.

[8] The motion record demonstrates that the parties negotiated and agreed on Class Counsel's legal fees after the parties concluded the Settlement Agreement. The evidence on the record and the submissions at the hearing also confirm that these negotiations were arm's length and in good faith.

II. Background

[9] The Settlement Approval Decision provides an overview of the litigation, the risks of the litigation, the negotiations leading to the Settlement Agreement, the engagement with the Class, and the benefits of the Settlement Agreement. It is not necessary to repeat the scope of the proceedings and the terms of the Settlement Agreement. We will only do so where it is necessary to determine whether Class Counsel's legal fees are fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class.

[10] At the Settlement Approval Hearing, no one objected to the approval of the Settlement Agreement. Similarly, no one objected to the approval of Class Counsel's legal fees.

[11] The evidence on this motion came in the form of an affidavit from Mr. Rosenberg of McCarthy Tétrault. Mr. Rosenberg outlined the legal fees of Class Counsel as well as Erickson LLP and First Peoples Law, who assisted Class Counsel. Mr. Rosenberg's evidence consisted of billable hour rates and the numbers of hours expended at the various stages of the proceedings up to November 22, 2021.

III. Issue

[12] The sole issue is whether Class Counsel's legal fees of 53 million dollars plus 5 million dollars for future work are fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class.

IV. Analysis

[13] Class Counsel submitted that the Courts, in deciding whether the fees sought are fair and reasonable, should consider a number of factors, such as:

(a) the extent of the risk assumed by class counsel;

(b) the complexity of issues raised by the litigation;

(c) the character and importance of the litigation;

(d) the degree of responsibility assumed by class counsel;

(e) the likelihood that individual claims would have otherwise been litigated;

(f) the views expressed by class members;

(g) the results achieved by class counsel;

(h) the causal link between the legal effort and the result achieved;

(i) the quality of the legal representation;

(j) the monetary value of the matters at issue;

(k) the amount of professional time incurred by class counsel;

(l) the existence of a fee agreement;

(m) the fees approved in comparable cases;

(n) the ability of the class to pay and the class expectations of fees; and

(o) the opportunity cost to class counsel in the expenditure of time in pursuit of the litigation.

[14] In McLean, Justice Phelan set out a non-exhaustive list of factors in determining what is fair and reasonable:

> [25] The Federal Court has an established body of non-exhaustive factors in determining what is "fair and reasonable". In Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 82, 293 ACWS (3d) 697 [Condon]; Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at paras 78-98, 281 ACWS (3d) 702 [Merlo]; and Manuge at para 28, the factors included: results achieved, risk undertaken, time expended, complexity of the issue, importance of the litigation to the plaintiffs, the degree of responsibility assumed by counsel, the quality and skill of counsel, the ability of the class to pay, the expectation of the class, and fees in similar cases. The Court's comments follow but it should be borne in mind that the factors weigh differently in different cases and that risk and result remain the critical factors (Condon at para 83).

[15] The categories submitted by Class Counsel differ in appearance than those set forth by Justice Phelan in McLean, however, they relate to essentially the same factors. Below, we assess the various factors as set out by Justice Phelan.

A. Results Achieved

[16] The Settlement Agreement is a significant and historic class action settlement. The Settlement Approval Decision, at paragraphs 35-59, set out the results contained within the Settlement Agreement. To summarize, some of the key features include:

(1) Retrospective Relief

- A 1.438 billion dollar Trust Fund to compensate the Class (Article 4, section 4.01(2));
- A 50 million dollar Specified Injuries Compensation Fund for injuries suffered by the Class (Article 5, section 5.01(2));
- A 400 million dollar First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund (Article 6, section 6.01(2));

(2) Prospective Relief

- Canada will spend at least 6 billion dollars between June 20, 2021 and March 31, 2030 to meet its commitment to ensure that First Nations receive safe drinking water (Article 9, section 9.02(2)) [the Commitment].

[17] Under the Commitment, Canada must make reasonable efforts to ensure that Class Members living on reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes. That water must meet the stricter of the federal or provincial requirements or standard governing residential water quality (Article 9, section 9.01(1)). The Settlement Agreement contemplates a specific alternative dispute resolution process [ADR Process] to resolve disputes related to the Commitment. Class Counsel submitted that the ADR Process is informed by Indigenous legal traditions. The ADR process promotes the use of Indigenous languages, it will occur on the First Nations' respective reserves, and it will utilize certain protocols such as gift giving, Elder participation, and traditional teachings.

[18] The Representative Plaintiffs put forth extensive evidence including various expert reports confirming that there are significant problems with the delivery of safe water to First Nation reserves and that the Class is suffering as a result. All of the Representative Plaintiffs submitted affidavits indicating their relief that the Settlement Agreement will finally address water quality issues on reserves.

B. Risk

[19] The Actions filed in the Federal Court and in the Manitoba Court of Queens Bench were novel. There was no jurisprudence on the merits of a class action proceeding that advanced claims by both First Nations and their members simultaneously. Furthermore, there was no jurisprudence on the scope and extent of Canada's responsibility for the provision of water on reserves nor was there any jurisprudence on the type of prospective relief sought in the Actions. Class Counsel pointed to the reversal of a class action award where collective interests had been reduced but the individual claims were upheld (Brazeau v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 ONCA 184 at paras 10, 105-106, 108-113).

[20] Class Counsel also submitted that Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc First Nation v Canada, 2021 FC 988 [Tk'emlúps] confirms that pursuing claims for a Band or First Nation class presents a risk. In Tk'emlúps the Federal Court approved a settlement agreement pertaining to the harms suffered by Day Scholars at Indian Residential Schools. That settlement provided compensation to individual Survivor Class Members and Descendant Class Members. However, the Band Class claims were not settled and that part of the class proceeding is ongoing. Class Counsel submits that this illustrates the risk associated with collective claims of a Band or First Nation.

[21] Counsel also pointed to the following risks:

- the uncertainty of the Class size at the commencement of the Actions;
- the uncertainty of certifying claims due to the number of individual and diverse issues faced by the Class;
- the difficulty in accessing witnesses and records given the semi-historical nature of events;
- the difficulty in obtaining a wide array of expert reports;

- the complex nature of the case involving constitutional law, Aboriginal law, and Indigenous law;
- the defences available to Canada;
- the prospect of not succeeding on the merits due to the complexities; and
- the uncertainty about Court approval of any class action settlement.

[22] In addition, Class Counsel identifies the uncertainty faced due to the political context. At the time of settlement, and during much of the litigation and negotiation, Canada had a minority government with the attendant prospect of a federal election at any time.

[23] With the above in mind, it is fair to state that the success of the class action was far from certain.

C. Time Expended

[24] Mr. Rosenberg's affidavit explains the pertinent information about the legal team and their billable rates. He itemizes the time spent by various team members at the various stages of both litigation and negotiation. Without divulging solicitor-client privilege, Class Counsel has provided the Courts with sufficient background on the times and legal fees spent at each stage.

[25] As of November 22, 2021, Class Counsel, Erickson LLP, and First Peoples Law had docketed their billable hours at a combined value of 6,454,951.50 dollars before tax. As of November 22, 2021, the value of disbursements carried by Class Counsel was 208,159.63 dollars plus tax. Class Counsel also provided separate summaries of the hours expended by each of the law firms involved.

D. Complexity

[26] The Settlement Approval Decision provided a more in-depth assessment of the nature and complexity of the claims. It set out an overview of the claims, the procedural history, and the legal and evidentiary complexities involved in seeking individual and collective relief. It also confirms the novelty of the Settlement.

[27] The Settlement Agreement itself illustrates the complexity of settling retrospective claims and prospective commitments. For example, the Settlement includes various forms of compensation and requirements for how Canada must carry out prospective relief. In particular, the Agreement recognizes the need for legislative changes to ensure that Parliament creates proper water quality standards. It also legally obligates Canada to undertake certain commitments that may have been outside the scope of an award after the conclusion of litigation.

E. Importance to the Plaintiffs

[28] The affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs Chief Emily Whetung, Chief Wayne Moonias, former Chief Christopher Moonias, and Chief Doreen Spence clearly set out how important this class action was to them, their families, their communities, and future generations. The Representative Plaintiffs all echo similar viewpoints. For example, Chief Wayne Moonias stated the following at paragraph 11 of his affidavit:

> We encouraged Class Counsel to push every legal boundary they could in order to achieve justice for us in recognition of our longstanding water advisory. All of our priorities that I have discussed above ended up being part of the Agreement in Principle (and ultimately the Final Settlement Agreement). There would be: > a) a legally enforceable Commitment for Canada to take all reasonable efforts to ensure access to clean, safe drinking water on reserve;
>
> b) a Commitment Dispute Resolution Mechanism that would be informed by our Indigenous legal traditions and would take place on our reserve;
>
> c) compensation for both individuals and First Nations as collectives;
>
> d) compensation for youth that had left the community to attend school;
>
> e) recognition that remoteness of a community compounds harms and a multiplier to compensate that;
>
> f) recognition that the claims process cannot retraumatize individuals;
> g) recognition that mental trauma from being denied water should be compensated as a specified injury.

[29] As well, while noting that financial compensation can never truly make them whole, the additional affidavits of community members confirm the very real impact that the Settlement Agreement will have on them and their families. The areas covered in the Settlement Agreement, as highlighted by Chief Wayne Moonias, address the effect on Individual Class Members.

[30] At the hearing of this motion, Chief Emily Whetung spoke openly and passionately about the effect that the Settlement Agreement will have on her community and on her children. She explained that now, her children will not be forced to leave their community.

[31] Mr. Laforme, one member of Class Counsel, also explained the effect that contaminated water has had on the spiritual practices of many First Nations who hold water in high regard. He described this historic settlement as an example of true reconciliation.

F. Degree of Responsibility Assumed by Counsel

[32] Due to the complexity of this case, Class Counsel assembled a large legal team. Class Counsel has demonstrated their respective expertise and skill. McCarthy Tétrault specializes in class actions and Mr. Rosenberg is one of the leaders of McCarthy Tétrault's class action team. OKT demonstrated that they are specialists in Aboriginal and Indigenous legal issues. Their coming together ensured that Class Counsel advanced all aspects of the Class' interests.

[33] McCarthy Tétrault and OKT were also aided by Erickson LLP and First Peoples Law. These firms provided additional outreach to Indigenous communities and insight into their needs. While McCarthy Tétrault and OKT developed the strategy and approach, they clearly appreciated that others could assist them. In the end, this approach resulted in a very positive outcome for the Class.

G. Quality and Skill of Counsel

[34] Throughout the proceeding, Class Counsel advanced parallel tracks of litigation and negotiations. The quality and skill of Class Counsel was key to reaching the Settlement Agreement and the approval stage. Class Counsel has demonstrated how they engaged with the Defendant to ensure that the litigation was advanced in a timely manner while also ensuring that any negotiations proceeded quickly. Class Counsel also demonstrated how they engaged regularly with the Representative Plaintiffs and Class Members who had questions about the state of the litigation and negotiations.

[35] Both McCarthy Tétrault and OKT highlighted the extensive involvement of Indigenous lawyers on their respective teams. There were no less than five identified Indigenous lawyers who comprised part of the legal team. The evidence of their billable hours confirmed that they were heavily involved. As mentioned in the Settlement Approval Decision, in addition to their professional expertise, Indigenous lawyers provide valuable lived experience that uniquely positions them to understand the needs and objectives of Class Members. While not stated as such, we view this effort by Class Counsel as another aspect of reconciliation. They provided young Indigenous members of their respective teams with an incredible opportunity to participate in an historic claim and settlement. The experience gained by these Indigenous members of the team will be invaluable to their futures and their prospective clients. Class Counsel also provided evidence of the extensive contribution of Indigenous experts, which helped shape the quality and skill of Class Counsel.

H. Ability of Class Members to Pay

[36] As already mentioned, Class Members are not paying Class Counsel's legal fees. Class Counsel's fees are severable and being paid by Canada.

[37] Copies of the retainer agreements between Class Counsel and Representative Plaintiffs indicate that, without Canada's agreement to pay for Class Counsel's legal fees, Class Members would have paid significantly more than what the Settlement Agreement provides for. Based on the contingency fee calculations in the retainer agreements, Class Counsel would have been entitled to recover 293 million dollars on the retrospective compensation or at least 1.1 billion dollars on the global settlement. As it turns out, Class Counsel's fees of 53 million dollars only constitutes 4.8 percent of the fees that they would be contractually entitled to seek from the Class Members.

> …This class action would not have been possible without law firms that were willing to shoulder the cost of litigating issues of such fundamental importance to our communities and similar communities across the country. Class Counsel are being paid far less that the amounts being contemplated in our retainer agreement. Although I agreed that Class Counsel could be paid out of any recovery for the class, I am pleased that Canada has committed to paying our lawyers' fees instead. This will ensure that lawyers' fees do not erode the money available for class members.

[39] If Canada had not agreed to pay for Class Counsel's legal fees, a significant portion of the compensation covered by the Class would have gone toward paying their lawyers. Canada's commitment to pay Class Counsel's legal fees is a significant and positive factor going toward approval of Class Counsel's legal fees.

I. Expectation of the Class

[40] The Representative Plaintiffs' affidavits all state how pleased they are with the performance of Class Counsel and that the Settlement realizes their litigation goals. For example, Chief Doreen Spence states the following in her affidavit at paragraphs 43 and 44:

> I am happy with the work that has been completed by Class Counsel, who have worked very hard to advance this case as quickly as possible. Our case was certified in less than eight months, and we reached the historic Proposed Settlement Agreement less than two years after commencing the action. I always thought that getting to this point would take several years. This result was only possible because Class Counsel engaged a large team and pushed our case forward. I have been very impressed by Class Counsel's strategy and advocacy, which have been essential to achieving the ground-breaking compensation and commitments contained in the Proposed Settlement Agreement.
> We recognize Class Counsel for taking on this case, and achieving extraordinary results. I endorse Class Counsel's requested fees and disbursements, as set out in the Proposed Settlement Agreement. I am content that Class Counsel's fees are being paid separately from the money for class members, therefore maximizing compensation for individuals and First Nations.

J. Fees in Similar Class Actions

[41] The Court acknowledges that Class Counsel's fees as set out in the Settlement Agreement, totalling 53 million dollars, are significant. Coupled with that, is the amount of 5 million dollars for additional future legal fees for post-implementation legal work. That said, these fees must be considered in the proper context.

[42] In McLean, Justice Phelan noted that the legal fees in that case, totalling 55 million dollars plus an additional 7 million dollars for future work, were within the 3% range. He stated:

> [55] In my view, this range is consistent with other mega-fund type settlements such as "Hep C" (Parsons and related cases at $52.5 million on $1.5 billion settlement, approximately 3.5%), "Hep C – Pre/Post" (Adrian and related cases at $37.2 million on $1 billion settlement, approximately 3.7%), "IRRS" (Baxter and related cases at approximately 4.5%), "60's Scoop" (Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641, 296 ACWS (3d) 36, and Brown v Canada (Attorney General), 2018 ONSC 5456, 298 ACWS (3d) 704, at $75 million on $625-> 875 million, at its lowest approximately 4.6%), and Manuge at 3.9% (paid by the Class).

[43] We agree with Class Counsel that McLean is a good comparator. While multipliers are not determinative, they can assist in assessing the reasonableness of counsel fees. The legal fees in this case translate to a multiplier of less than 5.5% of the total claim settlement. More importantly, the legal fees are severable from the Settlement and Canada is paying those fees, not the Class.

[44] We acknowledge that in comparison to the present matter, the legal work in McLean and Tk'emlúps took place over a longer period of time. We are satisfied, however, that Class Counsel's legal fees are reasonable in the circumstances. Class Counsel assembled a large team with different areas of expertise and simultaneously pursued parallel tracks of litigation and negotiation. They were guided by expert opinions and various analyses of insufficient access to safe drinking water for First Nations on reserves. All of this added to their fees and contributed to the Settlement being reached in a shorter period of time.

V. Conclusion

[45] For the above reasons, we conclude that Class Counsel's legal fees are fair and reasonable. The legal fee provisions of the Settlement Agreement are approved.

ORDER in T-1673-19

THIS COURT ORDERS:

1. Class Counsel's fees are fair and reasonable;
2. The Defendant shall pay McCarthy Tétrault LLP fifty-three million dollars ($53,000,000) plus applicable taxes of six million eight hundred and ninety thousand dollars ($6,890,000) (together, the "Class Counsel Fees"), for legal fees and disbursements for the prosecution of the within Actions and services rendered in accordance with section 18.01 of the parties' Settlement Agreement in the within Actions dated September 15, 2021 (the "Settlement Agreement");
3. The Defendant shall pay Class Counsel the Class Counsel Fees within sixty (60) days of the Implementation Date. The Implementation Date shall be:
    a. the day following the last day to appeal or seek leave to appeal the Courts' orders approving the Settlement Agreement; and
    b. the day on which the last of any appeals from the orders approving the Settlement Agreement is finally determined, whichever is later;

4. The Defendant shall pay McCarthy Tétrault LLP five million dollars ($5,000,000), plus applicable taxes of six hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($650,000) (the "Ongoing Fees"), to McCarthy Tétrault LLP within sixty (60) days of the Implementation Date, to be held in trust and disbursed in accordance with further orders of the Courts to pay fees and disbursements in accordance with section 18.02 of the Settlement Agreement;

5. The Class Counsel Fees and the Ongoing Fees shall be paid separately from any amounts payable to Class Members, as defined in the Settlement Agreement, and in accordance with the Settlement Agreement;

6. There shall be no costs of the within motion for fee approval.

JOYAL, C.J.Q.B.

INTRODUCTION

[1] This is a proceeding under The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M. c. C130. The plaintiffs, Chief Spence and Tataskweyak Cree Nation ("TCN") have moved for certification of this action as a class proceeding. Their proposed class proceeding will address class members' entitlement to clean drinking water on Indigenous reserves. The plaintiffs seek both injunctive relief to remedy infrastructure deficits as well as damages to compensate them for the hardships they have suffered.

[2] Canada consents to the certification of the plaintiffs' class proceeding. Despite Canada's consent, the interveners on this motion[1] are objecting to that certification and in so doing, are potentially preventing the parties from turning their attention to the merits of the plaintiffs' claim and the parties' capacity to satisfy the court-ordered timetable governing what should be this case's rapid progress. Pursuant to that court-ordered timetable (formulated and endorsed in the context of case management oversight), the parties have an opportunity to bring this matter to summary judgment (as it relates to the scope of Canada's duties to class members) within a year. In addressing any potential delay and the need to avoid it, counsel for the plaintiffs is correct to assert that it is impossible to overstate the importance of this proceeding to

[1] Although there is legally only one intervener in respect of the legal questions addressed in these reasons, the plural "interveners" is used (when not otherwise specified) when referring generally to both Michael Daryl Isnardy who requests an appointment as representative plaintiff and his counsel (leading the intervention) who seek appointment as class counsel.

[3] In the face of the plaintiffs' and Canada's request for a consent order, which would certify this matter as a class proceeding, the interveners are objecting, alleging as they are on this motion that the plaintiffs have a conflict of interest. They have also raised a last minute and unexpected motion seeking an order appointing Mr. Michael Daryl Isnardy as the representative plaintiff for a subclass of persons in this action.

[4] After providing the interveners a full hearing with respect to their objection on the basis of their contention respecting a conflict, I rejected the interveners' arguments by which they sought to adjourn and stay the plaintiffs' certification claim. At that same hearing and in relation to the unexpected motion seeking the appointment of Mr. Isnardy as the representative plaintiff, I dismissed the motion as ill-timed, made without appropriate standing and/or jurisdiction. Following those determinations, I certified the plaintiffs' action as a class proceeding in accordance with the parties' consent order. At the conclusion of the hearing, I indicated that I would supplement my disposition of the matter (and what would have been the available transcript of my disposition) with brief written reasons to follow at a future date. These are those reasons.

WHO ARE THE INTERVENERS AND WHAT DO THEY SEEK?

[5] The intervention is led by two law firms, Murphy Battista LLP and Gowling WLG (Canada), who are in turn represented by two additional law firms, Bennett Jones LLP and Thompson Dorfman Sweatman LLP. The interveners represent an individual, Michael Daryl Isnardy, who resides in the City of Williams Lake, British Columbia. The interveners have commenced their own class action on behalf of Mr. Isnardy before the Federal Court. Canada has advised that it will not consent to the certification of Mr. Isnardy's Federal Court action as a class proceeding because it is unworkable.

[6] The interveners allege that the plaintiffs have a conflict of interest that prevents them from representing both First Nations and their members. It is the interveners' position that band members must be free to bring claims against their own First Nations for the failure to bring clean drinking water on reserves. Given the position of the interveners, they now propose that only TCN be proposed to represent a class that is limited to impacted First Nations that elect to opt in. With what the plaintiffs describe as a last minute or "surprise" motion, the interveners also propose that Mr. Isnardy be appointed as a representative plaintiff in the present case thereby displacing Chief Spence, to represent a subclass of First Nation members. The plaintiffs however, say the term subclass as used in the present context is a misnomer because the subclass contains the entirety of the class, save for TCN. The plaintiffs are correct when they suggest that the unexpected motion now brought by the interveners, seeks what would effectively be carriage of the class proceeding and that TCN would be relegated to a subclass. It would seem that the interveners' litigation plan suggests that they do not actually intend to represent a subclass; they propose to prosecute a parallel action.

[7] With the interveners' motion, Mr. Isnardy is seeking to have his Federal Court action certified as a class proceeding while simultaneously seeking to be appointed as a representative plaintiff in the overlapping class proceeding before this Court. As part of the context for the interveners' motion, I note that the motion was brought with seemingly little warning and it comes following this Court's denial of the interveners' request for an adjournment of what had already been the scheduled certification hearing.

[8] I also note that Canada does not have instructions to consent to the certification of a class proceeding led by Mr. Isnardy. It is telling as well that it is Canada's position that Mr. Isnardy's proposed litigation plan does not appear workable.

[9] In the circumstances of this intervention and unexpected motion, were this Court to accede to Mr. Isnardy's request on this motion, it is likely that the class members would be denied a class proceeding flowing from what is the purposeful and rigorous court-ordered timetable respecting a matter that is of obvious and urgent importance. That result would be untenable for the many thousands of class members who need the determinations that underlie the relief they seek.

[10] For the reasons that follow, I have determined that Mr. Isnardy is not a member of the proposed class, that he cannot commence an action in this Court and that he does not have the standing to bring the motion that he has brought. Moreover and more fundamentally, the conflict alleged by the interveners does not exist.

ISSUES

[11] Based on the submissions of the parties and the governing law, the issues to be decided can be reduced to the following questions:

1. Do the interveners have standing to bring what the plaintiffs characterize as the "surprise motion"?
2. Does there exist a conflict of interest?
3. Is there any basis to order separate representation for a subclass?
4. Should this action be certified as a class proceeding in accordance with the parties' consent order?

FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND CONTEXT

[12] For the limited purposes of addressing and deciding the above issues, including the question of certification, I rely upon and largely adopt the facts that have been set out by the plaintiffs in their certification factum. Moreover, on the basis of, amongst other things, the various affidavit evidence, I have determined more specifically and find as fact, the following, all of which also importantly, informs my analysis with respect to the issues identified above:

i. That there is in the present case, no conflict of interest between First Nations and their members and indeed, First Nations and their members have significant common interests that should be addressed together;

ii. That the interveners themselves sought to represent a class of First Nations and their members;

iii. That Mr. Isnardy maintains parallel litigation before the Federal Court, which is both narrower and broader than the proposed class action in the present case;

iv. That the basis upon which the interveners sought and were granted standing was limited and it was only for the purposes of making submissions on a narrow legal issue; and

v. That the timing of the interveners' motion poses a real threat to the plaintiffs' efforts to secure access to justice for class members.

[13] As it relates to the question of a conflict of interest as between First Nations and their members, Chief Spence explains in her June 18, 2020 affidavit, her rationale for advancing a class proceeding on behalf of First Nations and their members (June 18, 2020 affidavit at paragraphs 24 and 25):

> This litigation is vitally important to those whose rights I am seeking to vindicate. I consulted widely with members of the proposed class, both before and after filing suit. These conversations have reinforced my belief that we can only achieve meaningful results by advancing a claim on behalf of individuals and communities. To do otherwise would needlessly fragment the claim. This would diminish our chances of success by narrowing the grounds on which we might establish a right toclean drinking water.
> In an action like this one, First Nations and their members have significant common interests that should be addressed together. Everyone wants to establish a right to clean drinking water on reserves, and everyone wants compensation for having been deprived of that right.

[14] According to Chief Spence, this proposed class proceeding does not give rise to any conflict between First Nations and their members. She notes as follows (June 18, 2020 affidavit at paragraph 31):

> I was elected to represent the interests of the members of my First Nation, and I am myself a member. I believe that I am well positioned to speak for both the > community and the individuals who are members of the community. I do not see any conflict of interest between my role as Chief and my representation of the proposed class. This is not a zero sum game. Both First Nations and their members want water security. They also want compensation. I intend to seek full compensation for the damages suffered by communities and individuals; that is how I will instruct counsel. There is no need to pit individual claims against community claims when they can be advanced together in harmony. The class, taken together, must be made whole.

[16] It should be noted that the interveners themselves sought to represent a class of First Nations and their members. It was in early March 2020 and continuing for the next two months that the interveners repeatedly expressed an interest in forming a consortium with class counsel and consolidating the Isnardy action and the Curve Lake First Nations action to advance a national class action of First Nations and their members. At no time during those two months did the interveners suggest that there was any conflict that would prevent class counsel from acting for a class composed of First Nations and their individual members. Indeed, the interveners expressed a desire to represent this same proposed class and they seemed to share the view that it was important to address the First Nations' ongoing water problems in addition to seeking compensation for their individual members.

[17] It should also not be overlooked that Mr. Isnardy maintains parallel litigation before the Federal Court. The plaintiffs note that Mr. Isnardy is an individual who resides in an assisted-living facility in Williams Lake, British Columbia. The plaintiffs contend that he waited until the last moment before bringing this "surprise motion". That motion gives rise to various concerns on the part of the plaintiffs, but in addition to those concerns, they (the plaintiffs) argue that based on class counsel's cross-examination of Mr. Isnardy on the carriage motion in the Federal Court, they do have serious concerns about his (Mr. Isnardy) suitability to serve as a representative plaintiff.

[18] As part of the context for the present motion, I note that Mr. Isnardy's proposed Federal Court class action is both narrower and broader than the proposed action in the present case. In that connection, Mr. Isnardy does not seek to advance any claims on behalf of First Nations, nor does he seek injunctive relief to remedy the water insecurity in reserve communities. Conversely, the present case is limited to First Nations and their members who experienced drinking water advisories lasting more than one year from 1995 onward. It appears that Mr. Isnardy would include every Indigenous person, for all time, who has ever been inconvenienced by a drinking water advisory (of any duration) on a reserve.

[19] When considering the background and context to this motion and the arguments raised by the interveners, it need be remembered that they (the interveners) sought and were granted very limited standing to make submissions on a narrow legal issue. As further background and context to the granting of that limited standing, it should be noted that on June 11, 2020, this Court held a case management teleconference to address the scheduling of the certification motion. Prior to that case conference, the interveners and class counsel made written submissions. At the case conference, they also made oral submissions. After the case conference, they also made further written submissions. It was the interveners' position that the certification hearing should be adjourned until after the Federal Court had decided the carriage motion. It would seem that the interveners by this time were prepared to see this Court certify a class proceeding for First Nations, but they were nonetheless insistent that Mr. Isnardy's Federal Court class proceeding be certified to represent the individual class members.

[20] In the context of this Court's direction that the certification hearing proceed, the interveners sought and were granted standing to make submissions on the narrow legal issue of a conflict of interest between the plaintiffs and the members of the proposed class. The plaintiffs are correct when they maintain that the interveners did not seek standing to participate in the certification hearing more broadly nor did they seek leave to bring a motion to stay this action or to contest any part of the carriage of the proceedings in this Court.

[21] The interveners themselves acknowledge in their July 6, 2020 cross-motion the limited standing they were granted respecting the submissions they would be permitted to make on a narrow legal issue (the alleged conflict of interest). They also acknowledged the Court's direction (which direction was confirmed by the Court in a June 19, 2020 email) respecting what could be decided on the July 14, 2020 hearing date:

> Joyal CJ confirmed that Mr. Stanley [counsel for Mr. Isnardy] and his client were granted leave to make submissions on the narrow legal issue of the purported conflict of interest between the members of the proposed class. Presumably, those submissions will be made. Joyal CJ agrees with Mr. Rosenberg [Class Counsel] that however carriage is decided in the Federal Court, Mr. Stanley and his client will still have to show why the action in the Court of Queen's Bench should not be certified as a class proceeding. At this stage, the hearing date is set. Leave for Mr. Isnardy to make submissions has been granted on the issue identified. Accordingly, it should be understood that the motion for certification is before the Court on July 14, 2020 and may very well be decided.

[22] Following the case management conference on June 11, 2020, there was no contact made with class counsel (from the interveners) respecting their participation in this action, except for confirmation of the hearing date. As a result, the plaintiffs delivered their motion record and factum in support of the parties' consent certification order. It was not until July 6, 2020 that the interveners advised class counsel of the unexpected motion which suddenly stipulated that the interveners were seeking "an order appointing Isnardy as the representative plaintiff for a subclass of … persons" in this action.

[23] Canada has confirmed its position that there is no conflict of interest between the plaintiffs and class members in respect of the proposed common issues. Canada has also advised that it has no instructions to consent to the certification of the class proceeding that Mr. Isnardy now proposes. Indeed, counsel for Canada notes that Mr. Isnardy is in fact, seeking certification of an entirely different proceeding, which will proceed on an entirely different track and timetable. Such an analysis accords with the plaintiffs' position that while the interveners insist that they are not barring the plaintiffs' efforts to secure access to justice for class members, that is in fact precisely the effect of this motion and more specifically the order they now seek.

ANALYSIS

(i) DO THE INTERVENERS HAVE STANDING TO BRING WHAT THE PLAINTIFFS CHARACTERIZE AS THE "SURPRISE MOTION"?

[24] In addressing this question, it must be underscored that the intervener and his counsel were granted leave to intervene on a single issue: whether there is a conflict of interest between the plaintiffs and class members that would prevent the Court from certifying a class proceeding. Given the limited nature of the leave that was granted respecting that intervention and given the discussions and submissions surrounding the case management meeting with this Court, it is not unfair for the plaintiffs to characterize the interveners' motion (seeking an order appointing Mr. Isnardy as the representative plaintiff for a subclass) as a "surprise motion".

[25] It is not inaccurate to assert, as the plaintiffs do, that the interveners had expressed little interest in this action prior to June 9, 2020. Currently, Mr. Isnardy has no action in this Court. He has pleaded no facts that would allow Canada to answer his claim or permit this Court to decide his entitlement to relief. As the plaintiffs have persuasively argued, Mr. Isnardy cannot now step into the shoes of Chief Spence. Her pleadings present the facts of her case, not his.

[26] No less important as to whether I hear Mr. Isnardy on the issue of whether he ought to be appointed the representative plaintiff for a subclass, is the issue of jurisdiction (see Meeking v. Cash Store Inc. et al., 2013 MBCA 81 at paragraph 118). Based on the interveners' statement of claim (at paragraphs 3 to 7), Mr. Isnardy is a resident of British Columbia and he claims to have incurred damages in British Columbia. He has no apparent connection to Manitoba. I am in agreement with the submissions of the plaintiffs that the Manitoba courts can assume jurisdiction over the claims of class members resident in other provinces when they are represented by a Manitoba plaintiff with whom they share common issues (see Meeking at paragraph 97). With respect to Mr. Isnardy however, as the interveners have insisted,

Mr. Isnardy is not a member of the proposed class, which is defined to exclude him (at paragraph 42 of the interveners' factum they state, "the proposed class definition in the Manitoba class action expressly excludes Isnardy"). The Manitoba Court of Appeal has directed that "[t]he plaintiffs who bring the certification action must have standing to sue as if it were an individual action" (see Soldier v. Canada (A.G.), 2009 MBCA 12 at paragraph 30). In other words, even if this Court were prepared to entertain this unexpected motion, it does not have jurisdiction to appoint Mr. Isnardy as a representative plaintiff. Neither does it have an action in which to do so.

[27] I note that Mr. Isnardy moves under s. 15(1) of The Class Proceedings Act, which permits "one or more class members to participate in the proceeding". As Mr. Isnardy is not a member of the proposed class, I am not persuaded that this provision provides Mr. Isnardy assistance. Mr. Isnardy's only standing flows from the Court's Practice Direction regarding Class Action Judicial Protocol dated September 4, 2019. In the present case, the interveners only sought limited standing under the protocol and indeed, that is all they were granted. The plaintiffs are correct to insist that the interveners never sought to vary that order and there is no basis to do so. Accordingly, the interveners' limited standing does not permit a motion to displace Chief Spence as the representative plaintiff.

[28] In addition to the above, it behooves me to note the potentially and unjustifiably disruptive nature and impact of the interveners' motion as it relates to the certification motion. The plaintiffs describe the interveners' action as "a late arriving carriage contest that they [the interveners] do not have standing to marshal and to which the plaintiffs have not had an opportunity to respond". In addressing the potential "disruption", I acknowledge that Chief Spence and TCN have spent months engaging with Canada to negotiate a consent certification order, which, by the interveners' own apparent admission, is advantageous to the class. It is not lost on me that Chief Spence and TCN have, as the plaintiffs suggest, spent months assembling their case on the merits so that they can adhere and attorn (in the context of a designated case management) to a timetable that will enable them to argue for judgment on the first-stage common issue within a relatively brief period of time. For various reasons, courts have consistently rejected what can be objectively seen as disruptive efforts on the part of an intervener, even when such intervention is made on behalf of actual class members who wish to participate in the certification motion. See for example Fairview Donut Inc. v. TDL Group Corp., 2008 CanLII 60983 (Ont. S.C.J.) at paragraph 11; Romeo v. Ford Motor Co., 2017 ONSC 6674 at paragraphs 18 and 19; and Kidd v. Canada Life, 2011 ONSC 6324.

[29] For the reasons noted, Mr. Isnardy is not a member of the proposed class, he cannot commence an action in this Court and he does not have standing to bring what the plaintiffs have characterized as the "surprise motion".

(ii) DOES THERE EXIST A CONFLICT OF INTEREST?

[30] The interveners' arguments respecting the alleged conflict of interest were set out in the interveners' June 10, 2020 correspondence to the Court and in their submissions made in respect of the hearing in this Court for which the interveners were granted limited standing on this very issue.

[31] Amongst other arguments, the interveners suggest the following:

a) That the plaintiffs have presented the common issues in such a way that makes clear that they are "not shared by all the class members and unique to the First Nations' individual's subclass (proposed by Isnardy)" (see paragraph 32 of the interveners' factum);

b) That some of the proposed common issues apply only to individual class members and not to their First Nations;

c) That the First Nations and their members have divergent interests because First Nations cannot assert Charter claims and as a result, cannot seek relief under s. 24(1) of the Charter (see paragraph 54 of the interveners' factum);

d) That First Nations and their members have divergent interests because only individuals "can suffer the results" of certain breaches such as "a lack of adequate access to potable water in terms of both quality and quantity" (see paragraph 56 of the interveners' factum);

e) That First Nations and their members have divergent interests because some heads of damages are only available to individuals, such as "loss of income and loss of advantage" and "loss of opportunity to live on First Nation lands" (see paragraph 60 of the interveners' factum);

f) That First Nations and their members have divergent interests because only individuals can assert a claim of nuisance (see paragraph 58 of the interveners' factum);

g) That individual class members may have claims against their own First Nations that reflect their claims against Canada (see paragraphs 72 to 75 of the interveners' factum); and

h) That even in the absence of claims against a multitude of First Nations, a conflict would nevertheless arise in apportioning fault between First Nations and Canada (see paragraph 76 of the interveners' factum).

[32] I have examined carefully the above arguments and indeed all of the submissions made by the interveners in respect of their position on the issue of conflict of interest. I am not persuaded by those submissions such so as to find the alleged conflict.

[33] Before setting out my brief reasons disposing of the conflict of interest argument, it is well to note as context, three points.

[34] First, it cannot be ignored that the interveners make their arguments with respect to the purported conflict of interest only after it had apparently become clear that they could not form a consortium with class counsel. I note with interest that prior to that, the interveners had sought to join class counsel in representing the same class of individuals and First Nations before the Federal Court.

[35] Second, I also recognize that in Mr. Isnardy's own action before the Federal Court the claim is only against Canada and does not allege that any other person has liability for the damages suffered by his proposed class. As was underscored by the plaintiffs, Mr. Isnardy alleges (as do the plaintiffs) that Canada remains liable to the class members, despite any effort to offload responsibility for water to First Nations.

[36] Third, I wish to state my agreement with the plaintiffs when they appropriately assert that if any party has legitimate reason to raise a conflict of interest, it is Canada — which might seek to apportion liability. Nonetheless, Canada has not in this case, raised the issue of conflict. To the contrary, Canada has consented to the certification of the plaintiffs' class proceeding on the basis that pursuant to s. 4(e)(iii) of The Class Proceedings Act, the plaintiffs do not have a conflict of interest with members of the class in respect of the common issues.

[37] With the above context having been set out, I move now to explain my rejection of the interveners' argument in respect of the alleged conflict.

[38] I observe at the outset that First Nations frequently bring actions in the name of the chief on behalf of the First Nation and all of its members as a means of asserting collective rights (see for example, Tsilhqot'in Nation v. British Columbia, 2014 SCC 44. Indeed, at least five First Nations are proceeding with representative actions against Canada in the Federal Court respecting their entitlement to clean drinking water on their reserves. All of these actions are brought by the chief on behalf of the First Nation and all of the members of the First Nation. They all assert claims similar to those advanced in the present case on behalf of both individuals and the collective.

[39] I accept as does Canada, that pursuant to s. 4(e)(iii) of The Class Proceedings Act, the conflict inquiry is limited to the proposed common issues. As was noted in Berg et al. v. Canadian Hockey League et al., 2019 ONSC 2106 (at paragraph 78):

> Thus, a conflict arises when one subgroup of the class will have an adverse result from the resolution of the common issue, not from some speculative consequence that is irrelevant to the resolution of the common issue. As put by the motion judge, at para. 233:
> > If the difference between the situation of the representative plaintiff and the class members does not impact on the common issues, then the difference does not affect the representative plaintiff's ability to adequately and fairly represent the class and there is no conflict of interest.

[40] As the plaintiffs have argued persuasively in the present case, the proposed common issues are entirely directed at Canada's several liability and they raise no apparent prospect of a conflict of interest among class members. As the plaintiffs explain, the first-stage common issue asks what duties Canada owes to First Nations and their members. The second-stage common issue asks whether Canada breached those duties, and if so, what remedy should ordered. It should go without saying that

First Nations and their members have an obvious interest in seeing each of these issues determined in favour of the Class.

[41] On some of the common issues referred to by the interveners, it would seem clear that if it is established that Canada owed a duty to a First Nation, the question remains whether Canada breached that duty. The plaintiffs are well to emphasize that the common issues would apply equally to individuals if it was established that Canada owed duties to individuals. The plaintiffs submit that the common issues use the language of "members" rather than referencing the subgroup as a whole. As was explained by the Supreme Court of Canada in Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd. v. Microsoft Corporation, 2013 SCC 57 at paragraphs 133 - 35, class actions aggregate the claims of class members, but the class itself does not assert a common claim. In fact, class actions exist to resolve the claims of class members, not of classes. Nonetheless, this does not pre-empt members of a class from sharing common issues.

[42] I accept that the possibility that common issues may be answered differently for different class members does not necessarily make them any less common (see Vivendi Canada Inc. v. Dell'Aniello, 2014 SCC 1 at paragraph 46).

[43] First Nations and their members do not necessarily have divergent interests because First Nations cannot assert Charter claims (as contended by the interveners) or seek relief under s. 24(1) of the Charter. The plaintiffs are well to question that stark proposition particularly in relation to claims pursuant to s. 2(a) of the Charter. In fact, First Nations are legal entities that have the capacity to bring suit in their own name to advance collective interests (see Kelly v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 ONSC 1220 and Bighetty et al. v. Government of Manitoba et al., 2011 MBQB 44 at paragraph 34). The Supreme Court of Canada has already acknowledged that some sections of the Charter have individual and collective aspects (see Alberta v. Hutterian Brethren of Wilson Colony, 2009 SCC 37 and Loyola High School v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 12).

[44] In considering the plaintiffs' response to the interveners' argument, I am persuaded by the proposition that all class members suffer the consequences of Canada's breaches of its duties. This contests the interveners' assertion that First Nations and their members have divergent interests because only individuals can suffer the results of certain breaches. As the plaintiffs have submitted, expansion of housing and economic opportunities are "stunted" by the expense of securing clean drinking water all of which further contributes to the departure of community members. Further, as Chief Spence explained at paragraph 31 of her affidavit, "Elders have noticed that the community's youth are disenfranchised from their culture and are increasingly turning to alcohol and drugs. The loss of traditional knowledge sharing about TCN's water ceremonies will have intergenerational impacts."

[45] Neither is it persuasive to argue as the interveners have, that First Nations and their members have divergent interests because it is alleged that some heads of damages are only available to individuals. It seems clear that damages that are suffered most immediately by individuals can also have a devastating impact on a community. Where such damage to a community arises from a breach of duty to that community, those damages are potentially recoverable by that community (see Blueberry River Indian Band v. Canada (Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 344).

[46] As it relates to the interveners' argument on the issue of nuisance, I am in agreement with the plaintiffs when they say that it suffices that First Nations as a collective can assert a claim in respect of a nuisance on lands that are owned collectively, while individuals can assert a claim in respect of a nuisance on lands that had been allotted or leased to them. In Bighetty (at paragraphs 27 and 34), it was expressly determined that First Nations can assert claims for nuisance in respect of lands that had not been allotted to their members.

[48] I reject as well the interveners' suggestion that even in the absence of claims against the multitude of First Nations, the conflict would nevertheless arise in apportioning fault between First Nations and Canada. Instead, I am persuaded by the plaintiffs who are correct to stipulate that if ever apportioning were in issue (however unlikely), both First Nations and their members would seek to maximize their recovery from Canada as Chief Spence herself confirms at paragraph 26 of her affidavit.

[49] In examining the entirety of the interveners' submissions, I am of the view that even where there exists different entitlements to relief, such different entitlements do not require subclasses. I accept the submission of the plaintiffs that on a proper view of the claim, the most that might be said in the present case is that class members may differ in their entitlement to relief. Nonetheless, this does not require subclasses let alone does it raise a conflict of interest such that it would require separate counsel for a subclass (see Anderson et al. v. Wilson et al., 1998 CanLII 18878 (Ont. Div. Ct.) at paragraph 54, varied on appeal, but affirmed on this point). See also 1176560 Ontario Ltd. v. Grant Atlantic & Pacific Co. of Canada Ltd., 2004 CanLII 16620 (Ont. Div. Ct.) at paragraphs 20 to 23, leave to appeal refused, [2004] O.J. No. 2009 (C.A.) and Grant v. Canada (Attorney General), 2009 CanLII 68179 (Ont. S.C.J.) at paragraphs 95 and 96.

[50] It should be apparent from the above reasons, and given the manner in which the parties have crafted the common issues, that there is no potential conflict of interest that might prevent the representative plaintiffs from representing a class composed of First Nations and their members. Put simply, the intervener's position respecting a conflict of interest is without merit.

(iii) Is there any Basis to Order Separate Representation for a Subclass?

[51] As I explain below, the plaintiffs have satisfied me that irrespective of my earlier determinations, there is in any event, no basis to order separate representation for a subclass. As the plaintiffs have persuasively submitted, the requirement for separate legal representation would require a real and immediate conflict that is apparent from the pleadings. None is apparent. Moreover, the governing legal authorities suggest a clear preference for preserving the class. Additionally, I note that class counsel have made appropriate plans to address any conflict of interest that might arise. No less important is the fact that I have determined that the parallel proceedings proposed by the interveners are not in the interests of class members.

[52] An exclusion of a subclass requires at the certification stage an obvious and direct conflict between the interests of class members that is plain on the face of the pleadings (see Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd.). It is very difficult if not impossible to determine the requirement for subclasses with separate legal representation at the certification stage (see Merck Frosst Canada Ltd. v. Wuttunee, 2009 SKCA 43 (CanLII) at paragraph 120). A more fair, sensible and expeditious approach would commend a supervisory role for the Court pursuant to The Class Proceedings Act. If and where subclasses need be determined, that can and will occur as the need arises (see Bendall v. McGhan Medical Corp. (1993), 14 O.R. (3d) 734 (Ont. S.C.J.) at paragraph 71). Yet even then, as the plaintiffs are right to identify, courts are reluctant to separate a subclass to be then separately represented on all common issues.

[53] The plaintiffs are correct when they argue that given the apparent judicial restraint on this issue as found in the jurisprudence, the intervener and his counsel are asking the Court to do something that no Canadian court has done before.

[54] The preponderance of legal authority seems to favour maintaining the integrity of the class at least until an insurmountable conflict arises on the common issues. See for example Anderson v. Wilson, 1998 CanLII 18878, 1998 CarswellOnt 698 (Ont. Div. Ct.) at paragraphs 57 – 58, varied on appeal but affirmed on this point, [1999] O.J. No. 2494 (C.A.) at paragraph 40, leave to appeal refused, Anderson v. Wilson, [1999] S.C.C.A 476. The general view appears to be that if and when a real problem arises, it should not be difficult to create separate representation. Prior to that need arising, "economy favours single representation" (see Anderson v. Wilson, 1999 CanLII 3753, 1999 CarswellOnt 2073 (Ont. C.A.) at paragraph 39, leave to appeal refused, Anderson v. Wilson, [1999] S.C.C.A. 476).

[55] As earlier noted, class counsel have made appropriate plans to address any conflict of interest that might arise. Were such a need for separate representation required, the plaintiffs advise that the parties' litigation plan provides that McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent a subclass of individuals, while Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP, will represent the subclass of First Nations. I agree with the plaintiffs that this approach is preferable to relegating individual class members to Mr. Isnardy's potentially unworkable Federal Court proceedings or subjecting them to what the plaintiffs say could be duplicative and costly litigation proposed by the intervener and his counsel. I accept class counsel's submission that their approach will more likely than not facilitate access to justice and judicial economy and is more likely to avoid additional expense and delay.

[56] Finally, it is my view that parallel proceedings as proposed by the intervener are not in the interests of class members. As the plaintiffs have convincingly and importantly set out, the interveners are not actually proposing to represent a subclass in the action before the Court. Instead, they are seeking to conduct an entirely separate class proceeding on behalf of the entire class, save for TCN. Such an approach and the corresponding proposed litigation plan, is as argued, incompatible with both the parties' court-ordered timeline for this action and the litigation plan to which the parties have consented. It is an approach and timeline that appears at first blush somewhat unrealistic and it holds out the prospect of considerable delay for the plaintiff class.

[57] In the circumstances of the present case, there is no basis to order separate representation for a subclass.

(iv) Should this Action be Certified as a Class Proceeding in Accordance with the Parties' Consent Order?

[58] Based on the above analysis and based upon the consent of Canada, there is nothing before this Court that ought to pre-empt the requested certification of this action as a class proceeding in accordance with the parties' consent. Moreover, in the particular circumstances of this case, such a certification is consistent and in accord with the legal principles and pre-conditions governing certification in a class proceeding.

[59] The matter should now proceed pursuant to the court-ordered timelines with a view to bringing this urgent and important matter to summary judgment within the appropriately expedited time period.

CONCLUSION

[60] As should be apparent from the foregoing analysis, I have answered the first three questions in issue in the negative. I have answered the fourth question in the affirmative.

[61] In doing so, I am both applying the governing law and acknowledging the importance and urgency of this claim. The class members have experienced drinking water advisories on their reserves. This class proceeding seeks both retrospective compensation and injunctive relief to ensure that class members have adequate access to clean drinking water. Mr. Isnardy's late and unexpected intervention has threatened to disrupt the consent certification of a class proceeding that quite obviously, promises at least the possibility of resolving fundamentally important claims for a disadvantaged group.

[62] I am persuaded that neither Mr. Isnardy, nor his claim, have any connection to Manitoba and that he has no standing to seek appointment as a representative plaintiff in a Manitoba class proceeding. In addition, his ill-timed and unexpected motion, wherein he seeks appointment as a representative plaintiff, has the real potential to cause delay, disruption and prejudice to the plaintiff class in the present case.

[63] Separate and apart from the problematic procedural aspects of Mr. Isnardy's motion and the potential to cause prejudicial delay, I am not convinced that there is a basis to appoint him as a representative plaintiff or to appoint his counsel, Murphy Battista LLP and Gowling WLG (Canada), as class counsel. As earlier noted, given the manner in which the parties crafted the common issues, there is no potential conflict of interest that might prevent the representative plaintiffs from representing a class composed of First Nations and their members. Neither is there a need for subclasses, additional class representatives or separate counsel for the class.

[64] Accordingly, based on my earlier oral disposition of this matter, I am certifying this action as a class proceeding. The representative claimants shall be Tataskweyak

Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence, and class counsel shall be McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP.

[65] I am advised that counsel have settled the matter of costs amongst themselves.

Docket: T-1542-12

Ottawa, Ontario, March 16, 2023

PRESENT: Madam Justice McDonald

CLASS PROCEEDING

BETWEEN:

CHIEF SHANE GOTTFRIEDSON, on behalf of the TK'EMLUPS TE SECWÉPEMC INDIAN BAND and the TK'EMLUPS TE SECWÉPEMC INDIAN BAND, and CHIEF GARRY FESCHUK, on behalf of the SECHELT INDIAN BAND and the SECHELT INDIAN BAND

and

HIS MAJESTY THE KING IN RIGHT OF CANADA as represented by THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

Defendant

ORDER AND REASONS

[1] On this Motion, the parties seek approval of the Fee Agreement signed on February 3 and 8, 2023, where the Defendant Canada has agreed to pay the all-inclusive sum of $20,000,000.00. This sum includes all past and future legal work, disbursements, costs incurred by Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, shíshálh Nation (formerly known as Sechelt Indian Band), and the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee) [Funding Nations], the advance costs of $500,000.00, and honoraria payments of $15,000.00 each of the two individual Representative Plaintiffs.

[2] By separate Order and Reasons reported at Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc First Nation v Canada, 2023 FC 327 on March 9, 2023, the Court approved the settlement agreement for the settlement of the Band Class claims [Settlement Agreement].

[3] This Motion for approval of the Fee Agreement was heard in Vancouver on February 28, 2023, immediately following the Motion for approval of the Settlement Agreement.

[4] For the reasons that follow, the Fee Agreement is approved in the form submitted.

I. Background

[5] The factual background to this class proceeding and the details of the Settlement Agreement for the Band Class are more fully outlined in the Order and Reasons approving the Settlement Agreement at 2023 FC 327.

[6] This class proceeding was commenced by Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc and shíshálh Nation in August 2012. In July 2016, the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee) joined this litigation as a funding Nation. Class Counsel agreed to share the risk of this litigation with the Funding Nations by working at substantially reduced hourly rates, that were subject to a funding cap.

[7] On January 18, 2023, the parties executed the Settlement Agreement.

[8] On January 21, 2023, this Court ordered, on consent, that the Defendant pay advanced costs to the Representative Plaintiffs in the amount of $500,000.00 [Advanced Costs] for the purposes of setting up a not-for-profit entity to receive the settlement fund (Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc First Nation v Canada, 2023 FC 104).

[9] In support of this Motion for Court approval of the Fee Agreement, the following Affidavits were filed:

- Affidavit of Peter Grant, co-counsel for the Plaintiffs, sworn on February 20, 2023;
- Affidavit of Dr. Matthew Coon Come, former Grand Chief of the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee), affirmed on February 23, 2023;
- Affidavit of Shane Gottfriedson, individual Representative Plaintiff and former elected Chief of Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, affirmed on February 21, 2023;
- Affidavit of Jasmine Paul, Vice President Negotiation, Governance, and Policy at Castlemain, retained by shíshálh Nation to review its expenses relating to the Band Class claim, sworn on February 22, 2023;
- Affidavit of Matthew Swallow, Treasurer of the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee), sworn on February 22, 2023; and
- Affidavit of Travis Anderson, a Certified Aboriginal Financial Manager and Executive Director of Finance with Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, sworn on February 22, 2023.

II. Key Terms of Fee Agreement

[10] The key terms of the Fee Agreement are as follows:

- Section 3 provides that Canada will pay the all-inclusive sum of $20,000,000.00 to Class Counsel in trust for legal fees, disbursements, and applicable taxes incurred in the initiation and prosecution of the class action, negotiating and implementing the Settlement Agreement, and honoraria to the individual Representative Plaintiffs;
    - Disbursements include the costs incurred by the Funding Nations, as well as costs incurred by Class Counsel in the prosecution of this Action; and
- Section 4 provides honoraria payments of $15,000.00 to both of the individual Representative Plaintiffs, former Chief Shane Gottfriedson and former Chief Garry Feschuk, for the Band Class.

[11] The Fee Agreement takes into account any amounts previously paid by Canada during this class proceeding, including the Advanced Costs.

III. Issues

[12] The issues for determination on this Motion are as follows:

A. Approval of the Fee Agreement; and

B. Approval of honoraria payments to the individual Representative Plaintiffs.

IV. Analysis

A. Approval of the Fee Agreement

General Principles

[13] Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 requires that the Court approve all legal counsel fees in a class proceeding.

[14] The test applied by the Court on a motion to approve counsel fees is whether the legal fees are "fair and reasonable" in the circumstances (McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1077 at para 2 [McLean]).

[15] The "fair and reasonable" considerations were outlined at paragraph 25 of McLean as follows:

> The Federal Court has an established body of non-exhaustive factors in determining what is "fair and reasonable". In Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 82, 293 ACWS (3d) 697 [Condon]; Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at paras 78-98, 281 ACWS (3d) 702 [Merlo]; and Manuge at para 28, the factors included: results achieved, risk undertaken, time expended, complexity of the issue, importance of the litigation to the plaintiffs, the degree of responsibility assumed by counsel, the quality and skill of counsel, the ability of the class to pay, the expectation of the class, and fees in similar cases. The Court's comments follow but it should be borne in mind that the factors weigh differently in different cases and that risk and result remain the critical factors (Condon at para 83).

[16] Class Counsel in this class proceeding were not acting on a contingency fee basis. Rather, Class Counsel worked on a fixed and discounted hourly rate basis, up to a maximum of $1,800,000.00. Any hours worked over this cap were borne by Class Counsel themselves.

[17] The absence of a contingency fee agreement is a distinguishing feature in considering and weighing the "fair and reasonable" considerations noted above. However, in my view, it is still necessary to consider these factors as against the fees sought to be approved.

(a) Results Achieved

[18] The Representative Plaintiffs' objectives for resolution of the class proceeding were:

(a) a generational solution to the Class Members' loss of languages and culture, in response to generations of harms caused by Residential Schools;

(b) a solution that provides Indigenous peoples autonomy over the programs and initiatives they develop to revitalize Indigenous languages and cultures; and

(c) a resolution guided by the Four Pillars.

[19] The Settlement Agreement of the Band Class met and exceeded these objectives. The Settlement Agreement creates a $2.8 billion dollar fund, which provides for Indigenous-led initiatives to support language, culture, and heritage revitalization initiatives for the Band Class members. The fund will be managed by a not-for-profit entity made up of Indigenous directors.

[20] The Band Class members will identify and develop their own language and culture revitalization programs and initiatives, with a focus on the needs of their individual communities. Those programs will be funded as detailed in the Settlement Agreement. The settlement will provide for 20 years of sustainable funding thus providing a generational focus for the revitalization of Indigenous language and culture.

[21] In this case, the Fee Agreement was negotiated independently from the Settlement Agreement. Isolating these agreements ensured that even if the Fee Agreement was not approved, the Settlement Agreement (if approved) could still be implemented. The two Agreements are also independently funded by Canada.

(b) Risk Undertaken

[22] This was risky litigation and success was far from certain. The claims advanced were novel and untested legal claims seeking damages for loss of language and culture. Canada vigorously defended this class proceeding and raised a number of defenses, including limitation defenses, the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement [IRSSA] releases, and denying any duty of care on the part of Canada. This class action was litigated to the eve of trial and the parties had undergone extensive preparations.

[23] The risk of non-recovery for the Band Class and Class Counsel legal fees was high. Class Counsel nonetheless pushed forward with this proceeding and assumed the risk of only being paid the reduced rate portion of their legal fees, up to the funding cap, if the matter was not successfully concluded. Class Counsel describe this as a risk-sharing arrangement. The contribution cap from the Funding Nations had already been reached prior to trial, meaning Class Counsel were prepared to litigate the ten-week Common Issues Trial without payment.

> 25. The Band Class claim is based on the conduct of Canada throughout the 77-year Class Period from 1920 to 1997 regarding 139 Indian Residential Schools located in ten provinces and territories that were operated in partnership with several different religious entities. The Band Class claim seeks damages for the collective impacts of those Residential Schools on 325 Bands located across Canada.

> 26. Throughout this litigation, Canada routinely used this scope and complexity to attack the very premise of the Band Class claim, continually arguing that this complexity meant that the common questions of law or fact simply could not be answered in common. In fact, Canada suggested in the Trial Brief of the Defendant that, as a result of this complexity, the action should be decertified.
> 27. The Band Class litigation involved significant risk and uncertainty primarily because of the shear novelty of the claim. The following issues, amongst others, had never been addressed by a court in Canada:
>
> (a) Is loss of language and culture a compensable harm?
>
> (b) Is there a generic right to Indigenous language and culture under s. 35 of the Constitution?
>
> (c) Can First Nations and other Indigenous groups claim for loss of language and culture of the collective as a whole?
>
> (d) Who is the proper rights holder for collective rights of language and culture?
>
> (e) Can a court quantify damages for a claim of collective loss of language and culture? If so, how are they measured?
>
> (f) What are the damages for collective loss of language and culture?
> 28. A loss on any one of the above questions could have been fatal to the entire case.

[26] The fact that no other claims were initiated in Canada on behalf of Indian Bands for collective harms of Residential Schools, or for the loss of language and culture as a result of Residential Schools, highlights the uncertainty that surrounded these claims and the risks undertaken by Class Counsel in committing years of time and resources to pursue the action.

(c) Time Expended

[27] This litigation has been ongoing for over a decade. The legal issues were complex and success was uncertain.

[28] The Settlement Agreement was reached immediately before the September 2022 Common Issues Trial was scheduled to begin. Tremendous legal work had been undertaken to prepare this matter for trial. Class Counsel have provided a detailed Affidavit outlining the work performed and has attached copies of time dockets providing a breakdown of the description of the work performed, by who, and the amount of time expended.

[29] Between March 2021 and January 2023, Class Counsel recorded over 8,500 hours. Their legal work will continue as they will provide legal services in the implementation of the Settlement Agreement and in establishing the not-for-profit entity that will administer the settlement fund. This work is over and above any legal work compensated for in the Day Scholars Fee Agreement, following the settlement of the Survivor Class and Descendant Class claims in this class action (Tk'emlúps te Secwepemc First Nation v Canada, 2021 FC 1020).

[30] In considering the risks and obligations undertaken by Class Counsel and the success achieved for the Band Class, I have no hesitation in finding that Class Counsel have very much earned the right to a legal fee premium in excess of any docketed time.

(d) Complexity of the Issues

[31] The complexity of this class action cannot be overstated as referenced in more detail in the Order approving the Settlement Agreement. The claims advanced were novel and untested. The evidence was historic and voluminous.

[32] As set out in the Grant Affidavit:

> 34. In fact, after certification, only 98 out of 640 Nations elected to opt into this proceeding. During the intense negotiations in 2016-2017, the return to litigation and the lead up to the trial, no other action of a similar nature was commenced. No Band that did not opt in to this proceeding has yet started its own action against Canada for collective harms caused by Residential Schools.
>
> 35. These facts strongly suggest that, within the legal community of both class action counsel and Aboriginal law counsel, there was no appetite for taking on the enormous risks involved in advancing the novel claims in this Action.

(e) Importance of the Litigation to the Plaintiffs

[33] The damages caused to First Nations language, culture, and heritage through the operation of Residential Schools in Canada are described in the Truth and Reconciliation report as cultural genocide. These losses have not been acknowledged in previous Residential Schools litigations, but the impacts on the Band Class members are still felt in these communities today.

[34] The Affidavits of the individual Representative Plaintiffs, Chief Shane Gottfriedson and Chief Garry Feschuk, submitted for the Motion to approve the Settlement Agreement, attest to the significance and importance of this litigation to their communities.

[35] Class Counsel Peter Grant noted, in his Affidavit:

> 31. Based on my experience with First Nations and my observations of class action lawyers involved in Residential School claims, boarding home claims, and claims relating to the apprehensions of Indigenous children, it is remarkable that, in the thirty years since litigation regarding Residential Schools began in earnest, there has been no other lawsuit filed either by class action counsel nor by other legal counsel claiming damages for collective harms caused to Indigenous collectives as a whole as a result of Canada's IRS policies.
> 32. Similarly, other than the James Bay Cree in this proceeding, no other First Nation or Indigenous collective in Canada was willing to join the Representative Plaintiffs and take on the case for collective harms arising from Canada's IRS policies.

[36] Importantly, the Settlement Agreement demonstrates that Canada has changed its understanding and treatment of Indigenous language and culture as collective rights.

(f) Degree of Responsibility Assumed by Class Counsel and Quality and Skill of Counsel

[37] Class Counsel are a team of highly experienced lawyers, combining their expertise in Aboriginal law and class-action litigation. The three lead counsel were involved in the IRSSA settlement and were specifically sought out to act on this matter because of their particular expertise.

[38] Class Counsel were clearly committed to the class action and prosecuted the claims diligently, in spite of significant procedural and legal hurdles, and were prepared to push forward with the litigation even at the risk of no recovery of their legal fees.

[39] Ultimately, after many years, Class Counsel were able to achieve a settlement that met and exceeded the objectives of the Band Class members. Counsel will continue to be involved in providing legal services in the implementation of the Settlement Agreement and the establishment of the not-for-profit entity to administer the settlement fund.

(g) Ability of the Class to Pay and the Expectation of the Class

[40] The Affidavits of Chief Shane Gottfriedson, one of the individual Representative Plaintiffs, and Dr. Matthew Coon Come, former Grand Chief of the Grand Council of Crees (Eeyou Istchee), support the approval of the Fee Agreement and confirm the Fee Agreement is in keeping with their understanding of how fees were to be paid on a successful resolution of the class action. They also confirm that, in their opinion, the fees are fair and reasonable.

[41] There were no objections to the Fee Agreement voiced at the Motion.

[42] As noted, Class Counsel were acting on a fee-for-services retainer and not a contingency fee agreement. Class Counsel Peter Grant's Affidavit and the Affidavits of Dr. Matthew Coon Come and Chief Shane Gottfriedson provide details on the Funding Nations' retainer agreements and funding agreements.

[43] These funding and retainer arrangements were set out in the Grant Affidavit as follows:

> 136. The financial arrangement between the Three Nations and Class Counsel was modified after the settlement of the Day Scholars Settlement Agreement at the request of the Three Nations. The Three Nations agreed to fund disbursements and legal fees at fixed and reduced rates to a maximum of $1,800,000 through to the completion of the first phase of the common issues trial. Any unfunded amounts over and above the cap would be borne by Class Counsel.

> 152. As described above, we agreed with the [Three Nations] that their contribution to legal fees and disbursements associated with phase one of the common issues trial would be capped at $1.8 million. As a result of the manner in which the DOJ conducted the litigation, the unanticipated costs of re-opening the opt-in period, and the size, scope and importance of the Band Class claim, our actual docketed fees and disbursements are $4,838,837, far in excess of the $1,800,000 in funding provided by the Three Nations. This left an unfunded amount of over $3 million for docketed fees and disbursements that were not paid by the Three Nations, and that were borne by Class Counsel. If the case had gone to trial, the unfunded amount would have been at least this amount or more for a full trial with all the costs of bringing in witnesses and experts to Vancouver, all of which costs would have been borne by Class Counsel.
> 153. This lawsuit was litigated to the literal eve of trial. Given that we had exhausted the contribution paid by the [Three Nations] before the trial was set to commence, Class Counsel had to be, and were, prepared to fully litigate a ten-week common issues trial without any payment.

[44] In his Affidavit, Chief Shane Gottfriedson stated:

> Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc and shíshálh Nation negotiated a retainer with Class Counsel that apportioned the risk of this litigation between Class Counsel, on the one hand, who agreed to take on the significant burden of a risky highly-complex, multiyear lawsuit at heavily-discounted hourly rates, and Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc and shíshálh Nation, on the other hand, who agreed to provide some ongoing funding in order to make the lawsuit sustainable, given the financial pressures on our communities.

[45] The Representative Plaintiffs negotiated heavily reduced, fixed rate fees with Class Counsel, subject to a cap. After the cap was reached, Class Counsel took on the burden of any unpaid legal fees. Additionally, the costs of litigation were borne by the three Funding Nations equally, to facilitate litigation of this claim and distribute the financial burden. None of the Indian Bands who chose not to opt-in to this class action have commenced an individual action for collective compensation.

(h) Fees in Similar Cases

[46] The total value of the settlement is $2.8 billion. Accordingly, legal fees of $20 million represent less than 1% of the settlement.

[47] By comparison, in McLean, the Indian Day Schools settlement was approximately $2 billion and the approved legal fees were $55 million, plus $7 million for legal fees for services rendered for a period of four years afterward.

[48] In Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641, a ‘Sixties Scoop’ class action, the settlement was $750 million and a $75 million legal fee agreement was approved.

[49] In this case, the legal fees sought to be approved are modest by comparison to fees in similar cases.

[50] Overall, I am satisfied the Fee Agreement is fair and reasonable.

B. Approval of Honoraria Payments to the Individual Representative Plaintiffs

[51] This Court has noted that compensation to representative plaintiffs is appropriate in situations where there are services which are over and above the usual duties of a representative plaintiff (Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at para 73 [Merlo]).

[52] The list of factors relevant for consideration on whether the individual Representative Plaintiffs should receive honoraria includes: significant personal hardship; active involvement in the initiation of the litigation and retainer of counsel; time spent and activities undertaken in the litigation; communications and interactions with other class members; and participation at various stages of the litigation (Merlo at para 72; Toth v Canada, 2019 FC 125 at para 96).

[53] The litigation required exceptional efforts on the part of the individual Representative Plaintiffs, who spent 11 years shouldering the burden of this difficult and psychologically taxing litigation. Former Chief Shane Gottfriedson and former Chief Garry Feschuk continued their active involvement in this litigation for years after their terms as elected Chiefs of their respective Nations ended.

[54] Chief Shane Gottfriedson and Chief Garry Feschuk both provided personal Affidavits for trial, detailing their personal experiences and their families' experiences at Residential Schools. They endured cross-examinations and were prepared to testify openly at trial. In doing so, they exposed themselves to re-traumatization at great personal effort, but done for the collective benefit of the Class members.

> Both Representative Plaintiffs endured many hours of questioning about the following matters, among other things:
>
> (a) their relatives' and community members' experiences at Residential Schools;
>
> (b) the traumas experienced by their families and community members, including from physical, sexual, and emotional abuse;
> (c) the effects of the Canada's assimilationist policies on their languages, cultures, and religions (before and throughout the Class Period); and

[56] The individual Representative Plaintiffs spent significant time travelling to meetings, gathering and reviewing documents, attending examinations and hearings, and reviewing materials to stay up-to-date and informed on the status of the litigation. The individual Representative Plaintiffs have met regularly with Class Counsel to receive updates and provide instructions.

[57] They have also participated in media interviews in relation to this class-action proceeding. At the Settlement Approval Hearing, the Court also heard from Band Class members who praised the vision, commitment, and conviction demonstrated by Chief Gottfriedson and Chief Feschuk in seeing these claims to the end.

[58] In the circumstances, I have no difficulty in finding that this is an appropriate case to recognize the extraordinary efforts of the individual Representative Plaintiffs and I approve the honoraria payments of $15,000.00 to each of Chief Gottfriedson and Chief Feschuk.

V. Conclusion

[59] For the above reasons, the Fee Agreement, including the honoraria payments to the individual Representative Plaintiffs, is approved.

ORDER IN T-1542-12

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. The Fee Agreement attached as Schedule "A", is fair, reasonable and is hereby approved pursuant to Rule 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, and shall be implemented in accordance with its terms;

2. Within thirty (30) days of the Implementation Date, the Defendant shall pay the total and all-inclusive amount of $19,500,000.00 [the Fee Amount, being $20 million less the Advance Costs already paid by the Defendant] to Class Counsel in trust for the legal fees, disbursements, and taxes applicable thereon incurred in the prosecution of the Band Class claim, and for the honoraria payments to the individual Representative Plaintiffs;

3. Honoraria payments of $15,000.00 to the two individual Representative Plaintiffs for the Band Class, former Chief Shane Gottfriedson and former Chief Garry Feschuk, are approved and shall be paid by Class Counsel from the Fee Amount; and

4. There will be no costs on this Motion.

BAND CLASS SETTLEMENT FEE AGREEMENT

1. Fee Agreement

1.01 The Band Class Settlement Fee Agreement ("Fee Agreement") is the standalone legal agreement regarding legal fees, honoraria, and disbursements as defined in the proposed Band Class Settlement Agreement in the certified class proceeding bearing Court File No. T-1542-12, Gottfriedson et al. v. His Majesty the King in Right of Canada ("Settlement Agreement").

1.02 The Fee Agreement was negotiated separately from the Settlement Agreement. All legal fees, disbursements, taxes, and expenses, in addition to the proposed Representative Plaintiff honoraria, are the subject of the Fee Agreement, which is subject to review and approval by the Court.

1.03 Court approval of the Fee Agreement is separate and distinct from Court approval of the Settlement Agreement. In the event that the Court does not approve the Fee Agreement, in whole or in part, it will have no effect on the approval or implementation of the Settlement Agreement.

1.04 In the event that the Court does not approve the Settlement Agreement, the Fee Agreement becomes null and void.

2. Definitions

2.01 Defined terms in the Settlement Agreement have the same meaning as those terms in the Fee Agreement.

2.02 In this Fee Agreement, the following additional definitions apply:

"Advanced Costs" means $500,000.00 to be paid by Canada for costs associated with establishing and running the Trust/Not-For-Profit Entity prior to the Implementation Date;

"Honorarium" means the award, subject to court approval, to each of the Representative Plaintiffs for the Band Class in the Action for their contributions of time and effort to the litigation.

3. Legal Fees, Disbursements, Taxes, and Expenses

3.01 Canada agrees to pay the total and all-inclusive amount of $20,000,000.00 in respect of legal fees, disbursements, and taxes related to initiating and prosecuting the Action, negotiating and implementing the Settlement Agreement, and honoraria to the representative Plaintiffs.

3.02 For greater clarity, disbursements include:

3.02.1 costs incurred by class counsel on behalf of the class in the prosecution of the Action;

3.02.2 costs incurred by Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc, shíshálh Nation and the Grand Council of the Crees (Eeyou Istchee) in the prosecution of the Action;

3.02.3 Advanced Costs include:

3.02.3.1 securing legal counsel to provide legal services and advice;

3.02.3.2 recruiting, hiring and paying interim staff, including an interim executive director and executive assistant;

3.02.3.3 securing and leasing office space;

3.02.3.4 opening an account at an accredited Canadian financial institution to receive the funds for the Trust; and

3.02.3.5 securing the services of financial advisors to provide investment advice.

3.03 Payment of the Advanced Costs shall be made in accordance with the Federal Court Order dated January 21, 2023. Payment of the Advanced Costs will be made to Waddell Phillips PC, in trust.

3.04 Payment of the amount set out in section 3.01, with the exception of the Advanced Costs, will be made to Waddell Phillips PC, in trust, within thirty (30) days after the Implementation Date.

4. Representative Plaintiff Honoraria

4.01 The Court will be asked to approve an Honorarium in the amount of $15,000.00 each to be paid to former Chiefs Garry Feschuk and Shane Gottfriedson in recognition of their time and extraordinary efforts devoted to the litigation. The Honorarium payments will be funded from the amount set out in s. 3.01.

4.02 If approved, payment of the Honorarium amounts will be made to the Representative Plaintiffs by Waddell Phillips PC within seven (7) days of payment of the amount set out in s. 3.01.

4.03 In the event that the Court does not approve any or all of the Honorarium payments, in whole or in part, it will have no effect on the approval or implementation of the Settlement Agreement or the remainder of this agreement.

5. No Other Fees or Disbursements to Be Charged

5.01 The Parties agree that it is their intention that payment of the Fund to the Trust will be made without any deductions on account of legal fees or disbursements other than the ongoing operating costs of the Trust/Not-for-Profit-Entity after the Implementation Date including professional fees.

6. Counterpart

6.01 This Fee Agreement may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which will be deemed to be an original and all of which taken together will be deemed to constitute one and the same agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the Parties have executed this Fee Agreement as of this 21st day of February, 2023.

ORDER AND REASONS

I. Overview

[1] This is a motion brought under Rules 334.29 and 334.4 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 [Rules], for judicial approval of: i) a class action settlement [Settlement Agreement], including the appointment of an administrator of the claims to be filed [Claims Administrator]; ii) the legal fees sought by class counsel Evolink Law Group and Champlain Avocats [Class Counsel Fees]; and iii) the payment of an honorarium to the representative Plaintiff, Mr. Arthur Lin [Honorarium].

[2] The Settlement Agreement, a copy of which is attached as Schedule "A" to this Order, was concluded on August 27, 2021 between Mr. Lin and the defendants Airbnb, Inc., Airbnb Canada Inc., Airbnb Ireland Unlimited Company and Airbnb Payments UK Limited [collectively, Airbnb], in the context of a class action proceeding [Class Action] filed by Mr. Lin in relation to the display of prices on Airbnb's websites and/or mobile applications [Airbnb Platform]. The Airbnb Platform is a digital marketplace connecting individuals seeking accommodations [Guests] with other individuals offering accommodations [Hosts], and allowing them to transact.

[3] For the reasons that follow, I will approve the Settlement Agreement and the appointment of the Claims Administrator on the terms provided by the parties, but I will only approve in part the proposed Class Counsel Fees and Honorarium.

II. Background

A. Procedural context

[4] This Class Action was commenced on October 31, 2017. In his statement of claim, Mr. Lin alleged that Airbnb breached section 54 of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34 [Competition Act], a rarely used criminal offence known as "double ticketing," by charging Guests, for the booking of an accommodation offered by Hosts on the Airbnb Platform, a final price that was higher than the price displayed at the first stage of browsing on the Airbnb Platform. More specifically, Mr. Lin contested the fact that Airbnb added “service fees” to the final price charged for its accommodation booking services, although these fees were not included in the initial price per night displayed on the Airbnb Platform. The heart of Mr. Lin’s claim was that the inclusion of an additional service fee at a later stage of the sale process resulted in a higher price than the first price expressed to Guests, in contravention of section 54 of the Competition Act.

[5] For the purpose of the Settlement Agreement, the class members are defined as all individuals residing in Canada, other than Quebec, who, from October 31, 2015 to June 25, 2019: i) reserved an accommodation for non-business travel anywhere in the world using Airbnb; ii) whose reserved accommodation matched the parameters of a previous search made by the individual on the search results page of Airbnb; and iii) paid, for the reserved accommodation, a price (excluding applicable sales and/or accommodation taxes) that is higher than the price displayed by Airbnb on the said search results page for this accommodation [Class]. Mr. Lin claimed that the Class members having experienced this situation were entitled to the benefit of the lower price, and sought damages equal to the difference between the first price and the final price displayed on the Airbnb Platform.

[6] Following a contested hearing, I certified the proceeding as a class action in a judgment issued on December 5, 2019 (Lin v Airbnb, Inc, 2019 FC 1563 [Certification Judgment]).

[7] As of June 27, 2019, prior to the issuance of the Certification Judgment, Airbnb adjusted the Airbnb Platform so that Airbnb now displays an all-inclusive price for all accommodation bookings, excluding applicable taxes, at every step of the search and booking process.

[8] On December 16, 2019, Airbnb filed a Notice of Appeal of the Certification Judgment at the Federal Court of Appeal [FCA]. The appeal was heard on March 4, 2021 by way of Zoom. After the hearing, the FCA reserved its judgment, and the decision on the appeal was under deliberation when the Settlement Agreement was reached by the parties. The FCA is holding the appeal in abeyance pending the completion of the settlement process.

[9] A few weeks before Mr. Lin launched his class action proceeding before this Court in late October 2017, Mr. Preisler-Banoon had filed a similar class action before the Superior Court of Quebec in the matter Preisler-Banoon c Airbnb Ireland, 500-06-000884-177 [Quebec Action]. On September 13, 2019, prior to the hearing of the "authorization" (as the certification process is known in Quebec) of the Quebec Action, Airbnb and the Quebec plaintiff executed a settlement agreement. On February 3, 2020, the Superior Court of Quebec rendered a judgment approving the settlement of the Quebec Action (Preisler-Banoon c Airbnb Ireland, 2020 QCCS 270 [Quebec Settlement]). The Quebec Settlement has a gross value of $3,000,000 and provides to the Quebec class members (as they are defined in the Quebec Settlement) a credit of up to $45 on their next booking with Airbnb after confirming their eligibility.

B. Overview of Settlement Agreement

[10] The parties have entered into the Settlement Agreement on August 27, 2021, subject to this Court's approval. Mr. Lin's legal counsel, Evolink Law Group and Champlain Avocats [Class Counsel], have concluded that the Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of Mr. Lin and the Class.

[11] The material terms of the proposed Settlement Agreement include:

- the settlement is valued at $6,000,000 [Settlement Amount], which includes any claims administration expenses [Administration Expenses], Class Counsel Fees, any Honorarium, and the applicable sales taxes;

- Airbnb will receive a full and final release in respect of the subject matter of this Class Action, namely, the display of prices on the Airbnb Platform [Release];

- the notification to eligible Class members and the claims procedure will be fully electronic, and managed by the Claims Administrator, Deloitte LLP [Deloitte];

- after the Court approves the Settlement Agreement, and before the claims deadline, eligible Class members can make a claim for a pro-rata share of up to $45 from the settlement funds that will remain after deduction of the Administration Expenses, Class Counsel Fees, Honorarium and applicable sales taxes from the Settlement Amount [Net Settlement Funds];

- distribution of the Net Settlement Funds to the eligible Class members that make a claim will be by way of a non-cash-convertible credit on the Airbnb Platform [Credit], to be redeemed on the next accommodation booking within 24 months of issuance; and

- the individuals covered by the Quebec Settlement are excluded from the Settlement Agreement, and claims relating to those individuals will be dismissed from this Class Action.

[12] Once the Settlement Agreement is approved, a hyperlink will be sent to Class members to make a claim. The Credit to be issued by Airbnb will be a one-time-use only, non-transferable, non-refundable, non-cash-convertible credit of up to $45 in value to each eligible Class member who submits a claim. The Credit's ultimate value will depend on the total number of approved claims and on the amount the Court approves for Administration Expenses, Class Counsel Fees, Honorarium and applicable sales taxes – which will all be deducted from the Settlement Amount. The Credit cannot be combined with any other offer discount, or coupon, and must be redeemed within 24 months after issuance, on the next Airbnb accommodation booking in any location worldwide. The Credit will be in the same amount for each Class member. In order to be able to redeem a Credit, the eligible Class members must accept the most recent version of Airbnb's Terms of Service and not be prohibited from using the Airbnb Platform (in accordance with the Terms of Service).

[13] In exchange, Class members will acknowledge that the Credit is in full and complete settlement of their claims and agree to give up any and all claims they may have against Airbnb relating in any way to the display of prices on the Airbnb Platform, including in respect of conduct alleged (or which could have been alleged) in the Class Action.

[14] With respect to Class Counsel Fees, Section 11.3 of the Settlement Agreement provides that Class Counsel will seek approval of the Court for the payment, by Airbnb, of Class Counsel Fees in the amount of $2,000,000, plus applicable taxes. The Settlement Agreement further states that Class Counsel will not seek additional payments for disbursements. In October 2017, prior to the filing of the Class Action, Class Counsel had entered into a fee agreement with Mr. Lin [Retainer Agreement], which provides for a contingency fee not exceeding 33% of the total amounts recovered by the Class. I pause to observe that, surprisingly, the Class Counsel Fees mentioned in the Settlement Agreement are slightly above what is provided for in the Retainer Agreement concluded with Mr. Lin: they amount to one third of the Settlement Amount (i.e., 33.33%) as opposed to a maximum of 33% set out in the Retainer Agreement, representing a difference of $20,000.

[15] As far as the Honorarium is concerned, the Settlement Agreement provides that Class Counsel may ask the Court for the approval of an Honorarium of $5,000 to Mr. Lin.

[16] Airbnb does not oppose the terms of the Settlement Agreement relating to Class Counsel Fees and to the request made for an Honorarium to Mr. Lin, and has agreed to pay the Class Counsel Fees, Mr. Lin's Honorarium and applicable taxes that are approved by the Court. As indicated above, all of these amounts will be deducted from the Settlement Amount.

C. Notices to Class members

[17] On September 16, 2021, the Court issued an order for the distribution of short-form and long-form notices of settlement approval [together, Notices] to the affected Class members, in accordance with Rule 334.34 [Notice Order]. The Notice Order also fixed the settlement approval hearing before this Court on November 1, 2021.

[18] The Notices have been broadly distributed to all persons residing in Canada who were Airbnb customers between October 31, 2015 and June 25, 2019. Through these Notices, Class Counsel advised the Airbnb customers of the settlement of the Class Action and of the settlement approval hearing, and summarized certain elements of the Settlement Agreement. This summary notably referred to the maximum value of $45 for the Credit and explained the redemption process to be followed, as well as the procedure to opt out or object to the proposed settlement. The Notices further informed the potential Class members that the Notices were just a summary, indicated that the Settlement Agreement itself and other court documents were available through a link to the Class Counsel's website (i.e., https://evolinklaw.com/airbnb-service-fees-national-class-action), and mentioned that the Settlement Agreement shall prevail in case of any discrepancy between the Notices and the Settlement Agreement.

[19] The Notices were sent to the Airbnb customers at the end of September 2021. The Claims Administrator has provided its report on the results of the e-mail distribution of the Notices. They are as follows: i) 2,539,475 e-mails were sent; ii) 494,002 e-mails bounced or were undeliverable; iii) 765,736 e-mails were opened, with 412,934 unique opens to the e-mails. In total, 14 individuals contacted Class Counsel indicating a desire to opt out of the Class Action, and 4 individuals submitted a written objection to the proposed Settlement Agreement.

III. Analysis

[20] This motion is seeking the Court's approval for the Settlement Agreement, Class Counsel Fees and Mr. Lin's Honorarium. Each of these three requests will be dealt with in turn.

A. Settlement Agreement

(1) The law relating to approval of class action settlements

[21] Rule 334.29 provides that a class proceeding settlement must be approved by the Court. The legal test to be applied is whether the proposed settlement is "fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole" (Bernlohr v Former Employees of Aveos Fleet Performance Inc, 2021 FC 113 [Bernlohr] at para 12; Wenham v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 588 [Wenham 1] at para 48; McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1075 [McLean 1] at paras 64-65).

[22] The factors to be considered in the analysis have been reiterated by the Court on several occasions (Bernlohr at para 13; Wenham 1 at para 50; McLean 1 at paras 64-66; Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 [Condon] at para 19). They are similar to the factors retained by the courts across Canada. These factors are non-exhaustive, and their weight will vary according to the circumstances and to the factual matrix of each proceeding. I summarize them as follows, in what I view as their order of relative importance:

1) The terms and conditions of the settlement;
2) The likelihood of recovery or success;
3) The expressions of support, and the number and nature of objections;
4) The degree and nature of communications between class counsel and class members;
5) The amount and nature of pre-trial activities including investigation, assessment of evidence and discovery;
6) The future expense and likely duration of litigation;

7) The presence of arm's length bargaining between the parties and the absence of collusion during negotiations;
8) The recommendation and experience of class counsel; and
9) Any other relevant factor or circumstance.

[23] A proposed settlement must be considered as a whole and in context. Settlements require trade-offs on both sides and are rarely perfect, but they must nevertheless fall within a "zone or range of reasonableness" (Bernlohr at para 14; McLean 1 at para 76; Condon at para 18). Reasonableness allows for a spectrum of possible resolutions and is an objective standard that can vary depending upon the subject matter of the litigation and the nature of the damages for which the settlement is to provide compensation to class members. However, not every disposition of a proposed settlement agreement must be reasonable, and it is not open to the Court to rewrite the substantive terms of a proposed agreement (Wenham 1 at para 51). The function of the Court in reviewing a proposed class action settlement is not to reopen and enter into negotiations with litigants in the hope of improving the terms of the agreement (Condon at para 44). In the end, the proposed settlement is a "take it or leave it" proposition.

[24] I make one other observation, which relates to the interaction between the approval of proposed class action settlements and the approval of class counsel fees. In mandating that both the class action settlements and the payment of class counsel fees be subject to the Court's approval (i.e., Rules 334.29 and 334.4), the Rules place an onerous responsibility on the Court to ensure that the class members' interests are not being sacrificed to the interests of class counsel, who have typically taken on a substantial risk and who have a great deal to gain not only in removing that risk but in recovering a significant reward from their contingency fee arrangement (Shah v LG Chem, Ltd, 2021 ONSC 396 [LG Chem] at para 40).[1] The incentives and the interests of class counsel may not always align with the best interests of the class members. It thus falls on the Court to scrutinize both the proposed settlement agreement and the proposed class counsel fees, as they will typically be interrelated. This is the case here since the Net Settlement Funds available to Class members are equal to the Settlement Amount after deduction of the Class Counsel Fees and other expenses.

(2) Application to this case

(a) Terms and conditions of the settlement

[25] Under the terms and conditions of the settlement, the question to be determined is whether the proposed Settlement Agreement, when considered in its overall context, provides significant advantages to the Class members, compared to what would have been an expected result of litigation on the merits.

[26] The key terms of the Settlement Agreement, as seen by the parties, include: a Settlement Amount valued at $6,000,000; distribution of the Settlement Amount by way of a non-cash-convertible Credit issued on the Airbnb Platform; a maximum Credit of $45 per Class member, redeemable within 24 months on the next accommodation booking; and the dismissal of the claims for the Quebec-based members due to potential overlaps with the Quebec Settlement. In his submissions, Mr. Lin also refers to the fact that Airbnb has modified its behaviour and changed its pricing display, though this is not, as such, a term and condition of the Settlement Agreement.

[27] In his written and oral submissions to the Court, Mr. Lin focused on five particular aspects of the Settlement Agreement, namely, the non-cash nature of the Credit, the Release granted to Airbnb, the exclusion of Quebec members, the identity of the Claims Administrator, and the scope of eligible Class members. I will briefly look at each element.

(i) Non-cash nature of the Credit

[28] In the current case, the monetary benefit of the Settlement Agreement for the Class members will take the form of a non-cash distribution to the eligible Class members, namely, the Credit. I acknowledge that courts in Canada and in the United States have often expressed concerns about class action settlements – generally referred to as "coupon settlements" – in which class counsel are awarded large fees while leaving class members with coupons or other non-cash awards of little or no value. However, I agree with Mr. Lin that, while the Credit available to Class members in this case is a non-cash settlement, it does not bear the problematic attributes generally associated with "coupon settlements."

[29] First, the Credit granted to Class members will have a wide range of applications. The Class members will be able to use it towards accommodation bookings anywhere in the world, including local staycations or short road-trips, for both the service fees (paid to Airbnb) and the listing fees (paid to the Hosts) that are part of a booking on the Airbnb Platform. Second, the ultimate value of the Settlement Amount (i.e., $6,000,000) is known at the outset, and will not be dependent on the number of individual Class members who actually redeem the Credit. Third, the claims procedure will be simplified, as eligible Class members will not be required to submit proof of their claims and will be entitled to share in the settlement upon acknowledging that they meet the requirements for a claim. Fourth, the redemption period is long enough, extending to a maximum of 24 months. Fifth, based on inquiries received from potential Class members after the Notices were distributed, Airbnb appears to have a number of repeat customers for its Airbnb Platform. There is therefore a good likelihood that Class members will do business with Airbnb again, and will effectively use the Credit.

[30] In sum, after scrutiny, I am satisfied that the Credit does not fit among those "coupon settlements" that the Court should be reluctant to approve. Rather, the Credit will be distributed in a way that is more akin to a gift card or a bill credit. In addition, based on the evidence before me, it is expected that the take-up rate will be significant among the Class members. Finally, in the circumstances, the distribution of the Net Settlement Funds in the form of Credits through the Claims Administrator is more practical and economical, compared to what a cash distribution would have entailed.

(ii) Release to Airbnb

[31] Turning to the Release clause, the Court has to review the scope of releases granted in class action settlement agreements to ensure that defendants do not unfairly obtain a broad release (or even a release for future claims), beyond the claims that are or could have been raised in the action. Here, I agree with Mr. Lin that there are no concerns relating to the scope of the Release granted to Airbnb in the Settlement Agreement. The Release is qualified by the words "relating in any way to the display of prices on the Airbnb Platform, including conduct alleged (or which could have been alleged) in the Proceeding," which was the subject matter of Mr. Lin's Class Action. The Release is thus circumscribed to those price-related practices at the source of the Class Action. While the Release extends to all forms of price "display," including arguably false or misleading pricing representations, I am satisfied that it is not overbroad in the context of what was alleged by Mr. Lin in his Class Action.

(iii) Dismissal of the claims for Quebec members

[32] As stated above, the Quebec Settlement provides for the settlement of similar claims made by the class members in the Quebec Action, based on Airbnb's display of prices on the Airbnb Platform. I agree with Mr. Lin that it is fair and reasonable to exclude those claims from the Settlement Agreement as amounts received by the Quebec members under the Quebec Settlement would overlap with the Settlement Agreement and would create a potential of double indemnity for the class members residing in Quebec.

(iv) Use of Deloitte as Claims Administrator

[33] The estimated Administration Expenses primarily consist of the fees for the Claims Administrator, Deloitte, and amount to an all-inclusive total of $320,500. I agree with Mr. Lin that this amount is justified in the circumstances and I am satisfied that Deloitte is well qualified to act as Claims Administrator.

(v) Eligible Class members

[34] The Settlement Agreement provides for an additional requirement to be eligible to claim a Credit, which results in a slight reduction of the number of eligible Class members entitled to receive compensation. Eligible Class members will be limited to those individuals that used the Airbnb Platform for the first time between October 31, 2015 and June 25, 2019. Therefore, Class members that already had an account and had used the Airbnb Platform prior to October 31, 2015 will not be eligible for a Credit. Airbnb estimates that the difference between Class members who will be eligible for a Credit and the total of Class members who used the Airbnb Platform during the relevant period represents approximately 194,000 individuals.

[35] I am satisfied that this reduced distribution of the Settlement Amount to a more limited number of Class members is a reasonable compromise in light of Airbnb's position that those Guests who had experienced the impugned pricing practice more than once are on a different legal footing.

(vi) Other elements

[36] In assessing the terms and conditions of a proposed class action settlement and determining whether they are fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the class members, the Court should also consider the expected take-up rate by the class members, particularly where there is a fixed settlement fund as is the case here (Condon at para 48), or where the quantum of the compensation to be received by each claimant depends on the number of eligible claimants who submit a claim. The Court may therefore take into account evidence on the expected participation in the settlement by class members when it assesses the sufficiency of available settlement funds or the effective monetary compensation of class members (Bodnar v The Cash Store Inc, 2010 BCSC 145 at para 21).

[37] In this case, based on the evidence provided by Mr. Lin (through the affidavit sworn by Class Counsel Simon Lin [Counsel Affidavit]), it is reasonable to estimate that approximately 30% of the Class members will apply for a Credit and participate in the claims process. The evidence reveals that, in the Quebec Settlement, the take-up rate ended up being effectively about 30%, translating into a credit of approximately $9.50 per individual Quebec class member. According to the Counsel Affidavit (at paragraphs 108-110), Class Counsel expects that, in the current case, the take-up rate will be “reasonably high” and “similar” to the Quebec Settlement, although it could be affected by some other factors, in particular the pandemic. Based on the evidence before me, I therefore agree that 30% is a reasonable rough estimation of the proportion of eligible Class members who are expected to file a claim to the Net Settlement Funds.

(vii) Conclusion

[38] In summary, when considered in their overall context, I am satisfied that the terms and conditions of the Settlement Agreement provide significant advantages to the Class members which might not have been achieved with the continued litigation, and are a positive factor supporting the approval of the Settlement Agreement.

(b) Likelihood of recovery or success

[39] The next factor to consider is the likelihood of recovery or success. This factor refers to the likelihood of success of Mr. Lin's Class Action if it were to proceed on the merits. This factor of likelihood of recovery or success must be assessed at the time when the parties choose between proceeding with the litigation or settling the matter. Under this factor, the Court must determine whether the proposed Settlement Agreement is an attractive viable alternative to continued litigation.

[40] Here, I am satisfied that the Settlement Agreement is a reasonable and attractive viable alternative to litigation for Mr. Lin and the Class, because litigating the Class Action could have led to unforeseen conclusions. The ultimate success of Mr. Lin in his Class Action was uncertain for three main reasons, namely, the pending appeal before the FCA, the risk involved at the merits trial, and the difficulties linked to enforcing a judgment from this Court in foreign jurisdictions.

[41] First, the pending appeal before the FCA focused on three important issues, for which the outcome is fairly difficult to predict: i) whether a section 36 claim based on section 54 of the Competition Act requires pleading and proving "reliance"; ii) whether it was sufficient for Mr. Lin to plead the simple difference between the two prices posted by Airbnb as damages under section 36 of the Competition Act; and iii) whether the Class description met the appropriate standard for certification. Since many of these issues are novel, the risk of an adverse decision from the FCA is a real possibility for the Class members.

[42] Second, the success of Mr. Lin at a merits trial faces several hurdles. In my reasons delivered in the Certification Judgment, I commented on the challenges in litigating this Class Action to a successful conclusion on the merits. I notably indicated that the application of the "double ticketing" provision to this case was not free from doubt (Certification Judgment at para 7), and that Airbnb had raised numerous valid points regarding the legal interpretation of sections 36 and 54 of the Competition Act and their application to this case (Certification Judgment at para 34). I further recognized that, in light of the paucity of "double ticketing" cases, Mr. Lin certainly appeared to be stretching the potential interpretation and application of section 54 of the Competition Act, and that he was extending it into unchartered territory (Certification Judgment at para 56). I noted that, in its submissions, Airbnb had raised valid and relevant points regarding the nature and identity of the product or products effectively supplied by Airbnb through the Airbnb Platform, and that it was certainly open to Airbnb to submit and argue that section 54 of the Competition Act could not apply to its situation because what is effectively supplied through the Airbnb Platform are two different products by two different persons at two different prices (Certification Judgment at para 53). In other words, there were solid factual and legal arguments advanced by Airbnb on the presence of two products, on whether what is supplied by Airbnb could be characterized as a bundle of different articles and services, and on whether the product at issue is the bundle or its components, as opposed to the accommodation booking services put forward by Mr. Lin (Certification Judgment at para 54). I also pointed out that it may look like a strange proposition to plead and argue that loss or damage could be established by a customer, based simply on a price differential between the lower and the higher price of a product, when the customer knew about both prices and nevertheless decided to accept the higher price and to proceed with the transaction (Certification Judgment at para 83). I finally acknowledged that demonstrating and proving the existence of an actual loss or damage in these circumstances may present additional challenges for Mr. Lin and the Class members (Certification Judgment at para 83).

[43] All of these observations reflect the fact that the likelihood of success of Mr. Lin at the common issues trial was difficult to predict at the time of certification, and it remains so today. There is little to no jurisprudence on section 54 of the Competition Act, as well as considerable uncertainty in the law as to whether a trial judge would award damages in the context of this Class Action. It is also clear that the legal questions advanced by Mr. Lin were novel with no appellate jurisprudence, suggesting a strong likelihood of multiple levels of appeals after a decision at the merits trial.

[44] Third, there is also a risk with having to enforce a judgment against non-Canadian defendants, as is the case for some of the Airbnb entities.

[45] In sum, when the parties decided to conclude the Settlement Agreement, it was uncertain and questionable whether Mr. Lin's Class Action could be litigated successfully on the merits, given the state of the law on "double ticketing." Most of those factors are still relevant today. This, again, is a positive factor supporting the approval of the Settlement Agreement.

(c) Expressions of support, and number and nature of objections

members, further to the Notices sent by the Claims Administrator after the Notice Order. These responses can be categorized as follows: 43 were general inquiries; 23 members voiced their support for the Settlement Agreement; 14 expressed a wish to opt out; and 4 objected to the proposed settlement. I observe that the deadline for opting out or objecting to the Settlement Agreement – as set out in the Notices – has now passed. The opt-outs and objections were included as exhibits to the Counsel Affidavit.

[47] I agree with Mr. Lin that the number of opt-outs is small compared to the size of the Class. Furthermore, some of the opt-outs appear to have been sent due to confusion as to whether these Airbnb customers were included or not in the Class definition. With respect to the four objections, two complaints regarded the type of remedy available (i.e., a non-cash-convertible Credit to be used on the Airbnb Platform) and two objectors found the maximum amount of the Credit (i.e., $45) too low. One of the complainants who initially objected to the non-cash nature of the Credit distribution voiced some support after Class Counsel explained to him the rationale for the non-cash structure of the settlement. I note that none of the objectors attended the settlement approval hearing before this Court.

[48] I also agree with Mr. Lin that the few objections received do not detract from the fact that the proposed Settlement Agreement, for the Class as a whole, is fair and reasonable and in their best interests. Having considered all of the objections received, I am of the view that they are not sufficient to conclude that the Settlement Agreement should not be approved. The fact that a settlement is less than ideal for any particular class member is not a bar to approval for the Class as a whole (Condon at para 69).

(d) Degree and nature of communications between Class Counsel and Class members

[49] The degree and nature of communications between Class Counsel and Class members is another important factor to consider for the approval of the Settlement Agreement. As will be discussed below in section III.B, it is also, in my view, a factor having an impact on the approval of Class Counsel Fees.

[50] In this case, there is no doubt that Class Counsel and Mr. Lin have evidently communicated well. With regard to the communications between Class Counsel and Class members more generally, since the commencement of this Class Action, Class Counsel has maintained and updated a website to publish basic information regarding the case, including a mailing list that allows interested individuals to subscribe for updates. Court documents and other records have been posted on this website for Class members' review. Prior to the publication of the Notices, there were 70 individuals subscribed to that mailing list, and that number increased to 673 individuals after the Notices announcing the settlement approval hearing were distributed.

[51] After the conclusion of the Settlement Agreement, the Notices were sent by e-mail to all the Class members who registered with Class Counsel and provided valid e-mail addresses. Class Counsel also posted the Notices and the Settlement Agreement on their dedicated website for the Class members. As indicated above, the Claims Administrator provided a report detailing the delivery of the Notices, which showed that the Notices were widely disseminated to Airbnb customers. I agree with Mr. Lin that, in light of the foregoing, sufficient steps were taken to provide notice of the Settlement Agreement to the Class members.

[52] However, in determining the approval of a proposed class action settlement, the Court's analysis must not look solely at the existence of communications to class members and at the efforts deployed by class counsel to distribute such communications in an adequate way. In the exercise of its role, the Court must also review and consider the actual contents of the communications with class members, in light of the proposed settlement agreement and of the evidence provided at the settlement approval motion, and assess whether sufficient information has effectively been provided to the class members to allow them to make an informed decision about the proposed settlement.

[53] In this case, further to my review of the evidence provided by Mr. Lin on this motion, I must conclude that Class Counsel's communications with Class members fall short of the mark to meet the requirements of an adequate, full and frank disclosure of the contemplated Settlement Agreement. In other words, there were some important shortcomings in the informative value of the Notices sent to the Class members. I understand that Class members could have access to the Class Counsel's website and to the Settlement Agreement itself, and that they were invited to do so at the end of the Notices. However, the actual text of both the short-form and long-form Notices were short on details regarding several key features of the proposed Settlement Agreement. More specifically:

- the Notices did not specify that the total Settlement Amount was $6,000,000;

- the Notices did not provide information on the actual amount or on the percentage base of Class Counsel Fees;

- while they mentioned that the Credit of $45 was a maximum amount which could be lowered depending on the number of claimants, the Notices did not provide any additional detail on the likely or expected take-up rate or on the amount of the effective Credit likely or expected to be received by the Class members.

[54] To the extent that the purpose of the Notices was to properly inform the Class members of the Settlement Agreement in order to give them the means to decide to accept it, opt out or voice an objection, I find that, in light of the evidence now before me, the Notices sent to the Class members did not provide a sufficiently transparent, informative and adequate disclosure to the Class members. Of course, I cannot change the Notices retroactively. But, in class actions involving consumer-related issues such as this one, which involve thousands of ordinary consumers affected by pricing or marketing practices or other business conduct, communications of a proposed settlement agreement to the potential class members ought to be much more transparent and forthcoming for the class members than what has been done by Class Counsel in this case.

[55] In my view, in such class action settlement agreements, the notices to the class members should always at least disclose, in clear terms and in both the short-form and long-form versions of the notices, the following basic information about the proposed settlement agreement: i) the quantum of the total settlement amount; ii) the precise list of deductions from the total settlement amount (such as class counsel fees or administration expenses) when these impact the net settlement amount to be received by the class members; iii) the quantum of these various deductions (including the quantum of the class counsel fees); iv) the percentage of the total settlement amount to be received by class counsel as legal fees; v) the maximum compensation amount to be received by each class member, if any; and vi) the likely or expected effective compensation amount, or range of compensation amounts, to be received by the class members, when class counsel has information or is able to estimate the expected take-up rate and/or the likely or expected net compensation amount to be received. Generally speaking, having access to such minimal information is needed by the class members in order for them to be able to make a well-informed decision about what a proposed settlement agreement actually offers, and on whether they shall support it, opt out or object to it. In the current case, most of these basic elements were not included in the Notices to Class members, though some of them could be gleaned from the actual Settlement Agreement made indirectly available to Class Counsel through the Class Counsel's website. In my opinion, to simply provide a link to a 27-page Settlement Agreement as was done in this case does not amount to a satisfactory disclosure of the above-mentioned information to the Class members, and can hardly be considered fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Class.

[56] Though it is impossible to measure what would have been the effect of the disclosure of the above-listed information in the Notices, it is fair to say that it would likely have had a certain impact on the reactions, expressions of support or objections of the Class members to the proposed Settlement Agreement.

[57] For those reasons, I conclude that the degree and nature of communications between Class Counsel and Class members is at best a neutral factor for the approval of the Settlement Agreement.

(e) Amount and nature of pre-trial activities, including investigation, assessment of evidence and discovery

[58] At the time the Settlement Agreement was executed, very limited investigation, discovery, evidence gathering and pre-hearing work had been completed by the parties, meaning that the amount and nature of pre-trial activities necessary to take the case to trial remained high. Moreover, Airbnb's evidence showed that Airbnb does not have precise records of Class members that reserved an accommodation matching the parameters of a previous search made by the individual on the Airbnb Platform, as the Class was defined in this Class Action.

[59] Therefore, an important amount of necessary pre-trial work still had to be completed, and the evidence before me indicates that the parties had a good sense of the extent of this significant remaining pre-trial work. In the circumstances, I am satisfied that the parties were properly positioned to understand the amount and nature of pre-trial activities linked to continued litigation at the time of choosing to settle. This factor thus supports the approval of the Settlement Agreement.

(f) Arm's length bargaining between the parties and absence of collusion during negotiations

[60] There is a strong presumption of fairness when a proposed class action settlement, which was negotiated at arm's-length by experienced counsel for the class, is presented for Court approval. Here, I am satisfied that the negotiations leading to the Settlement Agreement were arm's length and adversarial in nature between Class Counsel and counsel for Airbnb, spanning several months. This, again, supports the approval of the Settlement Agreement.

(g) Recommendation and experience of Class Counsel

[61] Class Counsel are of the view that the proposed Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the Class members. They recommend approval by the Court.

[62] Class Counsel and their firms are experienced, well-regarded plaintiffs' class action counsel. They have a wealth of experience in a substantial number of class actions to draw upon. I have no doubt that their decision to settle this case reflects their best exercise of judgment. Class counsel's recommendations are significant and are given substantial weight in the process of approving a class action settlement (Condon at para 76). This is the case here.

(h) Future expense and likely duration of litigation

[63] Courts have recognized that an immediate payment to class members through a settlement agreement is a factor in support of a proposed settlement. In this case, if there is no settlement now, counsel for the parties anticipate that a long time will be needed for a trial on the merits and for potential appeals, with the need for expert evidence. I am satisfied that this is another factor militating in favour of finding that the proposed Settlement Agreement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class.

(i) Any other relevant factor or circumstance

[64] Mr. Lin submits that the Court should also take into account that all three goals of class actions will likely be achieved by way of this Settlement Agreement, namely, access to justice, judicial economy and behavioural modification. I agree.

[65] In terms of access to justice, eligible Class members will obtain some monetary compensation from Airbnb by way of the Credit though, as I will discuss in more detail in section III.B.2.b below, the evidence suggests that this compensation is expected to be extremely modest.

[66] Judicial economy will also be achieved, as a long litigation with potential appeals will be avoided and the procedure for the payment of the Credit to the Class members will be simple, with limited Court supervision being required.

[67] Finally, behavioural modification has already been accomplished due to the combination of this Class Action and the Quebec Action, as Airbnb modified its pricing display across Canada in June 2019 whilst Mr. Lin's Class Action was underway. Counsel for Mr. Lin also rightly points out that the Class Action also has an impact for actual and potential wrongdoers throughout the Canadian economy since, in the Certification Judgment, the Court released a comprehensive decision giving teeth to the dormant section 54 of the Competition Act, thereby also contributing to potential behaviour modification of other "drip-pricing" practices, to the benefit of Canadian consumers.

(3) Conclusion on the Settlement Agreement

[68] After considering all of the above-mentioned factors, I am satisfied that I was presented with sufficient evidence to allow me to make an objective, impartial and independent assessment of the fairness and reasonableness of the proposed Settlement Agreement (Condon at para 38). A settlement is never perfect, and the Court needs to keep in mind that a settlement is always the result of a compromise, but that it puts an end to the dispute between the parties and provides certainty and finality. In this case, I find that the Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Class and ought to be approved, including the appointment of the Claims Administrator.

B. Class Counsel Fees

[69] I now turn to the Class Counsel Fees. Here, Class Counsel request that the Court award them an amount of $1,980,000 plus applicable taxes for Class Counsel Fees, representing 33% of the Settlement Amount, to be paid from the Settlement Amount. Airbnb does not oppose this request. Rightly so, Class Counsel are not asking the Court to approve the fees payment of $2,000,000 referred to in the Settlement Agreement, an amount that, in any event, they would not have been entitled to receive under the Retainer Agreement.

(1) The law relating to approval of class counsel fees

[70] Rule 334.4 provides that all payments to counsel flowing from a class proceeding must be approved by the Court. The overarching test applicable to class counsel fees is that they have to be “fair and reasonable in all of the circumstances” (Condon at para 81; Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 [Manuge] at para 28).

[71] The Court has established a non-exhaustive list of factors to assist in the determination of whether the class counsel fees are fair and reasonable (Wenham v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 590 [Wenham 2] at para 33; McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1077 [McLean 2] at para 25; McCrea v Canada, 2019 FC 122 at para 98; Condon at para 82; Manuge at para 28). Again, these factors are similar to the factors retained by the courts across Canada. They include, in what I view as their order of relative importance:

1) risk undertaken by class counsel;
2) results achieved;
3) time and effort expended by class counsel;
4) complexity and difficulty of the matter;
5) degree of responsibility assumed by class counsel;
6) fees in similar cases;
7) expectations of the class;
8) experience and expertise of class counsel;
9) ability of the class to pay; and
10) importance of the litigation to the plaintiff.

[72] As is the case for the factors governing the approval of settlement agreements, these factors are non-exhaustive, and their weight will vary according to the particular circumstances of each class action. However, the risk that class counsel undertook in conducting the litigation and the degree of success or results achieved for the class members through the proposed settlement remain the two critical factors in assessing the fairness and reasonableness of a contingency fee request by class counsel (Condon at para 83). The risk undertaken by class counsel includes the risk of non-payment but also the risk of facing a contentious case and a difficult opposing party (Wenham 2 at para 34).

[73] It has long been recognized by the courts that, for class proceedings legislation to achieve its policy goals, class counsel must be well rewarded for their efforts, and the contingency agreements they negotiate with plaintiffs should generally be respected. The percentage-based fee contained in a retainer agreement is presumed to be fair and should only be rebutted or reduced "in clear cases based on principled reasons" (Condon at para 85, citing Cannon v Funds for Canada Foundation, 2013 ONSC 7686 [Cannon] at para 8).

[74] That being said, it is also the Court's role to protect the class, and there may be circumstances where the Court has to substitute its view for that of class counsel, in the interest of the class. The Court must consider all the relevant factors and then ask, as a matter of judgment, whether the class counsel fees fixed by the proposed agreement are fair and reasonable and maintain the integrity of the profession (LG Chem at para 46). This is especially true where, as in this case, the amount of class counsel fees comes out of the global settlement amount available to class members. Here, it is clear that the Net Settlement Funds available for distribution to Class members represents the difference between the Settlement Amount and the sum of Administration Expenses, Class Counsel Fees, Honorarium and applicable taxes.

[75] In the same vein, where the fee arrangement with class counsel is part of the settlement agreement, the Court must decide on the fairness and reasonableness of the proposed fee arrangements in light of what class counsel has actually accomplished for the benefit of the class members. The class counsel fees must not leave the impression or bring about conditions of settlement that appear to be in the interests of the lawyers, but not in the best interests of the class members as a whole. Stated differently, there has to be some proportionality between the fees awarded to class counsel and the degree of success obtained for the class members.

[76] In this case, Class Counsel apply to this Court for fees in an amount representing 33% of the value of the Settlement Amount, or $1,980,000, plus applicable taxes. Class Counsel submit that this is "consistent with" the terms of the Retainer Agreement. I pause to observe that, in the Retainer Agreement signed by Mr. Lin and Class Counsel in October 2017, Section 10 provides that Class Counsel's legal fees "shall not exceed thirty-three percent (33%)" [both emphases in original] of the total amounts recovered by the Class. Two mathematical examples are given at Section 12 of the Retainer Agreement, where the words "shall not exceed" are again used and repeated for each example. In other words, while it is not incorrect to state that the Class Counsel Fees amount presented to the Court for approval is "consistent" with the Retainer Agreement, I must underline that it nonetheless represents the upper maximum limit of what was expressly contemplated in the Retainer Agreement signed by Class Counsel and Mr. Lin.

(2) Application to this case

(a) Risk undertaken by Class Counsel

[77] The risk factor refers to the risk undertaken by Class Counsel when the class proceeding is commenced. It is measured from the commencement of the action, not with the benefit of hindsight when the result looks inevitable. This risk includes all of the risks facing class counsel, such as the liability risk, recovery risk, and the risk that the action will not be certified as a class action or will not succeed on the merits (Condon at para 83). The litigation risk assumed by class counsel is a function of the probability of success, the complexity of the proceedings, and the time and resources expended to pursue the litigation.

[78] There is no doubt in this case that a significant risk was undertaken by Class Counsel. Class Counsel did not seek any third-party litigation funding and bore 100% of the litigation risk. Class Counsel also provided a full indemnification to Mr. Lin in the event of any adverse cost awards. More importantly, there were real risks related to the fact that Mr. Lin's Class Action could not be certified at all, considering the extremely limited history of section 54 and the novelty of the interpretation and approach proposed by Class Counsel in this proceeding.

[79] Class Counsel certainly deserves credit and recognition for having brought a recourse based on sections 36 and 54 of the Competition Act and for having developed an innovative interpretation of section 54 on "double ticketing," something that had never been done in a competition class action. Innovation is what took human beings from caves to computers, and it certainly merits to be rewarded, given the risks that are always inherent to any form of innovation.

[80] In light of the foregoing, the risk undertaken by Class Counsel in this case is, of course, a positive factor supporting the approval of the Class Counsel Fees.

(b) Results achieved

[81] In terms of the results achieved for the Class members, I find that they are mixed. Here, the Court has to distinguish between the non-monetary results stemming from the Settlement Agreement, and the monetary results. I accept that, broadly speaking, the results captured in the Settlement Agreement, both monetary and non-monetary, somehow improved the situation for Class members. However, there is a huge difference in the relative gains for Class members in terms of non-monetary and monetary benefits.

(i) Non-monetary benefits

[82] In this case, I agree that there are significant non-monetary benefits to the Class members, to the Airbnb customers in general, and to Canadian consumers. The most significant benefit consists in the behavioural modification of Airbnb, as Airbnb adjusted the Airbnb Platform throughout Canada in June 2019. Airbnb now displays an all-inclusive price for all accommodation bookings, excluding applicable taxes, at every step of the search and booking process. In other words, the pricing display practice that prompted Mr. Lin's Class Action has now ceased. This is likely the most significant aftermath of Mr. Lin's Class Action, and it reverberates from the Class members to all existent and future Airbnb customers. I point out, however, that this result cannot be said to be an immediate effect of the Settlement Agreement itself, as Airbnb's behavioural modification preceded it and was even implemented before the Certification Judgment in this case. I further observe that the Quebec Action was also an instrumental factor leading up to Airbnb's behavioural modification in June 2019. Nevertheless, I am satisfied that Mr. Lin's Class Action was certainly one of the contributing elements having led to Airbnb's behavioural modification. Such behavioural modification is one of the three well-entrenched objectives of class actions (L'Oratoire Saint-Joseph du Mont-Royal v JJ, 2019 SCC 35 at para 6, citing Hollick v Toronto (City), 2001 SCC 68 at para 15, Western Canadian Shopping Centres Inc v Dutton, 2001 SCC 46 at paras 27-29, and Vivendi Canada Inc v Dell'Aniello, 2014 SCC 1 at para 1).

[83] In weighing the non-monetary results achieved by Class Counsel's work, it is also appropriate for the Court to consider to what extent the two other main objectives of class actions – namely, access to justice and judicial economy – have been met by the proposed Settlement Agreement. Mr. Lin's Class Action provided access to justice for hundreds of thousands of Class members where, absent the Class Action, the scope of the individual claims would not justify litigation. The class action regime in the Rules was designed to encourage class counsel to advance actions like this one, where the individual claims are relatively small because, on an aggregate basis, entrepreneurial class counsel can earn a fee that justifies the risks associated with advancing the class action and the time invested (Condon at paras 101-102).

[84] There are also non-monetary benefits that do not solely benefit the Class members but have positive repercussions on a larger scale, for all Canadian consumers. It is well accepted that a change in a business conduct (such as pricing or marketing practices) is a recognized objective of class actions. Here, Mr. Lin's Class Action will serve as a legal precedent and authority in "drip-pricing" practices more generally, bearing in mind that the Certification Judgment was issued in the context of the low-hurdle test at the certification stage, and that the determination of the merits of the legal arguments on section 54 of the Competition Act still remains uncertain. I also agree with Class Counsel that this matter will indirectly serve as a deterrent for potential wrongdoers in the Canadian marketplace, who will now have a better knowledge that "drip-pricing" is a practice that can run afoul of applicable laws in Canada.

[85] I further agree that Mr. Lin's Class Action has successfully revived and resurrected section 54 of the Competition Act, which had been dormant for several decades. Now, the Canadian public, including merchants and consumers, has guidance on how best to comply with this Competition Act provision on "double ticketing," even in the digital economy. As I indicated at the hearing before this Court, we do not know yet whether section 54 is simply on life support further to the Certification Judgment and whether it will be able to survive a test on the merits, but Mr. Lin's Class Action has certainly awakened a sleepy section 54.

[86] I am therefore satisfied that the non-monetary results reached in this case are a positive factor for the approval of the Class Counsel Fees.

(ii) Monetary benefits

[87] Moving to the monetary front, the results achieved by the Settlement Agreement for the Class members are much more humble. In fact, based on the evidence before me, the monetary success for Class members is expected to be somewhat anemic. This, in my view, is the Achilles' heel hampering the Class Counsel Fees' request in this case.

[88] True, the Settlement Agreement and the Notices refer to a Credit of "up to" $45 in value for each eligible Class member. However, the evidence on the record (mostly contained in the Counsel Affidavit) reveals that what Class members are likely to receive from the settlement will not be very substantial, and far lower than the publicized $45. First, the evidence on the Quebec Settlement indicates that the take-up rate in that matter was effectively about 30%, and translated into an actual credit of approximately $9.50 per individual Quebec class member, well below the maximum of $45 that was also set out in the Quebec Settlement. Class Counsel expects that the take-up rate will be similar in this Settlement Agreement, although it could be affected by some other factors, in particular the pandemic.

[89] Second, the evidence on the record of this motion allows the Court to calculate the likely Credit expected to be effectively received by each Class member. This approximate assessment goes as follows. Airbnb estimates that there will be approximately 1,473,952 eligible claimants in this matter. Assuming a take-up rate of 30% similar to the Quebec Settlement (which is what Class Counsel expects), that would translate into approximately 442,200 Class members exercising their right to claim a Credit. As to the Net Settlement Funds available to be distributed among Class members, they can be estimated to revolve around $3,420,500 (i.e., the Settlement Amount of $6,000,000, less the requested $1,980,000 for Class Counsel Fees, $322,500 for Administration Expenses, and some $277,000 for applicable taxes). This would result in an effective Credit of just above $8 for each Class member (i.e. $3,420,500 divided by 442,200 Class members), far less than the maximum of $45 referred to in the Notices to the Class members. I acknowledge that this back-of-the-envelope calculation is only a rough estimate but, even if I factor in a sizeable margin of error, the evidence on the record certainly allows the Court to infer that the expected Credit to be distributed to eligible Class members is more likely to gravitate around $10 than the publicized maximum of $45.

[90] I make another observation. The success or result achieved in any class action settlement is not an absolute figure but rather a relative one. It always needs to be assessed in relation to what was the anticipated full recovery of the damages alleged to have been suffered by the class members in the class action. This is what allows the Court to determine the fairness and reasonableness of the expected compensation brought about by a settlement agreement. In the current case, the Court is in a difficult position to do so since Mr. Lin and Class Counsel have not provided any estimate of what would have been the expected full recovery of the damages claimed in the Class Action. There is no measure of what the alleged price difference between the first price and the final price posted on the Airbnb Platform during the Class period would amount to, for all Class members affected. Or even an indication of what was the average price difference for the Class members. In other words, the Court has no information on the expected full recovery for Class members. Broadly speaking, the Court always needs to know what would have been the estimated full recovery of a class action in order to assess the recovery rate of a proposed settlement and to figure out the relative success achieved by the settlement. In this case, the only benchmark available to the Court is Mr. Lin's own example: based on Mr. Lin's personal situation as outlined in the Certification Judgment, his claim against Airbnb represented an amount of approximately $92. The maximum Credit of $45 would thus represent a recovery rate slightly below 50% for Mr. Lin, and the likely or expected compensation amount of less than $10 estimated above would represent a much paler recovery rate of about 10%.

[91] In sum, the evidence before me on this motion indicates that, no matter what metric is being used, the monetary compensation likely or expected to be received by the Class members through the Credit will be extremely modest, and will likely lie at the low end of the spectrum for Class members. For all those reasons, I am not satisfied that the monetary results achieved by the Settlement Agreement are a positive factor for the approval of the Class Counsel Fees. Quite the contrary.

(c) Time expended by class counsel

[92] The time expended by class counsel can also be a helpful factor in the approval of class counsel fees, even in cases where the class counsel fees are contingency fees.

[93] Over the years, the courts have expressed a preference for utilizing percentage-based fees in class actions (see, e.g., Mancinelli v Royal Bank of Canada, 2017 ONSC 2324 at para 52). A percentage-based fee is paid based on a percentage of the amounts recovered and should be awarded at a level that appropriately incentivizes and rewards class counsel (Condon at para 84). Contingency fees help to promote access to justice in that they allow class counsel, rather than the plaintiff, to finance the litigation. Contingency fees also promote judicial economy, encourage efficiency in the litigation, discourage unnecessary work that might otherwise be done simply to increase the lawyers' fees based on time incurred, properly emphasize the quality of the representation and the results achieved, ensure that counsel are not penalized for efficiency, and reflect the considerable costs and risks undertaken by class counsel (Condon at paras 90-91). This Court and the courts across Canada have recognized that the viability of class actions depends on entrepreneurial lawyers who are willing to take on these cases, and that class counsel's compensation consequently must reflect this reality (Condon at paras 90-91).

[94] The percentage-based fee set out in a contingency fee retainer agreement is therefore presumed to be fair and "should only be rebutted in clear cases based on principled reasons" (Condon at para 85, citing Cannon at para 8). Examples of "principled reasons" where a court may rebut the presumption that a percentage-based fee is fair include situations where: i) there is a lack of full understanding or true acceptance on the part of the representative plaintiff; ii) the agreed-to contingency amount is excessive; or iii) the presumptively valid contingency fee would result in a fee award so large as to be unseemly (Condon at para 85).

[95] I would add that situations where the class counsel fees are not commensurate with the gains of class members or are not aligned with the terms of the underlying retainer agreement with the representative plaintiff also qualify as other "principled reasons" where the courts may be justified to revisit a percentage-based contingency fee agreement. Importantly, the proposed class counsel fees need to be considered in relation to the actual result achieved for the Class members, especially when the retainer agreement provides for the possibility of a range or margin of appreciation for the effective percentage-based fees to be paid.

[96] The main alternative to a percentage-based fee is applying a "multiplier" to class counsel's time spent in a matter. However, the use of a multiplier approach as the basis for approving class counsel fees has been criticized for, inter alia, encouraging inefficiency and duplication and discouraging early settlement (Condon at para 86). Nevertheless, it can serve as a "useful check" (McLean 2 at para 37). According to Class Counsel, the range of multipliers generally accepted by the Canadian courts in class action settlements is approximately 1.5 to 3.5.

[97] Here, it is clear that Class Counsel have done extensive work over the past four years to reach the Settlement Agreement, including litigating certification through hearings before this Court and the FCA, and devising the settlement for the Class members. The evidence on this motion reveals that Class Counsel have collectively expended 1,628 hours in total up to the filing of the motion, with their services valued at $723,357.50. Class Counsel also expect that they will be required to spend a material number of additional hours to finalize the settlement, if the Settlement Agreement is approved. Class Counsel will notably have to oversee the publication and distribution of the notices of settlement approval; continue to implement and oversee the administration of this Class Action until the settlement distribution is complete; and liaise with the Class members who may have questions about the Settlement Agreement. There is nothing unreasonable in the details examined by the Court and I accept Class Counsel's evidence as an accurate reflection of the time value of the necessary professional services they rendered.

[98] Based on the requested Class Counsel Fees of $1,980,000, this would mean a multiplier varying between 2.3 and 2.7, depending on the additional work needed to implement the Settlement Agreement. Overall, I conclude that the time expended by Class Counsel is a positive factor supporting the approval of the Class Counsel Fees.

(d) Complexity of issues

[99] For the reasons discussed above, there is no question that this class action proceeding raised complex and difficult issues surrounding sections 36 and 54 of the Competition Act. To reiterate, in his Class Action, Mr. Lin brought forward an innovative argument on section 54 and the treatment of fragmented pricing or "drip-pricing" in the digital economy. Section 54 on "double ticketing" was created before the arrival of the digital economy and the emergence of online commerce, and the question of how the provision could extend and apply to current technologies and commercial practices is far from being simple and free from doubt. This is a positive factor for the Class Counsel Fees.

(e) Degree of responsibility assumed by Class Counsel

[100] Class Counsel, consisting of two small firms, took on full responsibility for this case, and bore 100% of the risk of the litigation. This, again, is a positive factor.

(f) Fees in similar cases

[101] Looking at the issue of fees in comparable cases, Class Counsel submit that, at 33%, the percentage of the Settlement Amount claimed as Class Counsel Fees is "comparable" to percentages in settled class actions in the Canadian common law jurisdictions. With respect, I believe that this qualification deserves to be nuanced. I am instead of the view that a 33% contingency fee, while perhaps not unusual, nonetheless sits at the high end of the generally accepted range of court-approved fees for class counsel.

[102] The typical range for contingency fees has been recently described as being "15% to 33% of the award or settlement" in British Columbia (Kett v Kobe Steel, Ltd, 2020 BCSC 1977 [Kobe Steel] at para 54). In the precedent of this Court cited by Class Counsel in support of their claimed 33% contingency fees (i.e., Condon), the Court referred to a range of "up to 30%" and in fact affirmed a 30% contingency fee in that case, not 33% (Condon at paras 92, 111). I do not dispute that some cases confirmed the reasonableness of percentage-based fees of 33% (see, e.g., McLean v Cathay Pacific Airways Limited, 2021 BCSC 1456; Cannon; Dwor et al v Car2Go et al, VLC-S-S-205424, unreported settlement approved on September 20, 2021), but these matters appear to be the exception rather than the rule. Class Counsel also referred to precedents where the accepted contingency fee was at 30% or less in Zouzout c Canada Dry Mott's Inc, 2021 QCCS 1815, at about 31.5% in Hurst c Air Canada, 2019 QCCS 4614, and between 15% to 25% in Abihsira c Stubhub inc, 2020 QCCS 2593. Moreover, in the Quebec Settlement, the court-approved contingency fee was 25%. I am mindful of the fact that the Quebec Settlement was a pre-certification settlement with no contested certification hearing, and that it involved a different theory of liability based on legislations other than sections 36 and 54 of the Competition Act. Nonetheless, it remains the closest precedent to the current Class Action.

[103] As rightly pointed out by Class Counsel, the issue to be determined is whether the requested Class Counsel Fees are fair and reasonable in the circumstances. In this case, despite significant positive results in terms of behavioural modification, the Settlement Agreement brings about a fairly limited success for the Class members on the monetary front, with a large discrepancy between the Class Counsel Fees sought and the likely or expected recovery rate of the Class members. This is an important factor to take into account. In the circumstances of this case, I am therefore not convinced that the low expected monetary return to Class members through the Credit can justify and support a percentage-based contingency fee of 33% that would reside at the high end of the spectrum observed in comparable cases.

(g) Expectation of the Class

[104] Another factor to consider is the expectation of the Class members as to the amount of counsel fees. The fact that the representative plaintiff, Mr. Lin, supports the Class Counsel Fees request is no indicator of the Class members' expectations. Based on the limited evidence before me, I cannot tell what is the expectation of the Class on the legal fees front, as the Class members were not truly aware of the Class Counsel Fees claimed.

[105] As mentioned above, the Notices provided no details on Class Counsel Fees. It is true that there was no opposition from Class members on Class Counsel Fees, but it may well be because the Class members were kept in the dark with respect to this issue. I again acknowledge that the Class members could have accessed the Settlement Agreement itself, where the amount of the Class Counsel Fees were precisely laid out; but this is a 27-page document that the average Class member is unlikely to read. Providing a link to the full text of a 27-page Settlement Agreement is not an acceptable substitute to an adequate, full and frank disclosure on the Class Counsel Fees in the Notices themselves. As indicated above at paragraph 55 of these Reasons, notices to class members need to be transparent on the key terms of proposed class action settlement agreements, including on the issue of class counsel fees, in order to allow the Court to properly assess the fairness and reasonableness of proposed settlements and class counsel fees. In this case, I do not know what would have happened if the proposed Class Counsel Fees had been openly disclosed to the Class members in the Notices. But, given that – even with the existing Notices – there were some objections to the low level of the publicized $45 Credit, it may well have triggered more objections from Class members had they been properly informed about the real magnitude of the Net Settlement Funds, the percentage fees of Class Counsel and the likely or expected monetary amount to be distributed to the Class members.

[106] In my view, in situations like this one, where the likely or expected recovery to class members is limited and resides at the low end of the spectrum, notices to class members should clearly set out the total amount of the class counsel fees and the percentage that class counsel are seeking to receive from a settlement agreement, so that class members can have a full understanding of the agreement presented to them for approval. Communications between class counsel and class members need to be transparent, including on class counsel fees, so that class members can be in a position to make a well-informed decision on their approval and support of both the proposed settlement agreement and class counsel fees. Especially in situations where, as here, Class Counsel Fees eat up an important portion of the Net Settlement Funds available to Class members.

[107] Therefore, I am not persuaded that the Class members could fairly weigh this issue of Class Counsel Fees when deciding whether to opt out or to participate in the lawsuit going forward (Condon at para 107). This is a neutral factor in assessing the fairness and reasonableness of the Class Counsel Fees.

(h) Quality and experience of Class Counsel

[108] There is no doubt as to Class Counsel's standing in the class action legal community and in the areas of law relevant to this litigation. Evidence was provided that Class Counsel have practised in class actions for many years. They have a breadth of experience in litigating class actions, and have collectively negotiated settlements of several class actions. This is, of course, a positive factor favouring the approval of the Class Counsel Fees.

(i) Ability of the Class to pay

[109] It is also obvious that Class members did not and do not have the ability to pay for the services of Class Counsel. This, once again, is a positive factor in the Court's assessment of the Class Counsel Fees.

(j) Importance of litigation to the plaintiff

[110] Finally, I find that this Class Action is of limited importance to Mr. Lin and is a neutral factor in the determination of the fairness and reasonableness of Class Counsel Fees. This case is of no outstanding importance to Mr. Lin or to the Class members, in the sense that it does not involve human rights violation or personal injury. It has an impact for consumer protection and the deterrence of potential anti-competitive behaviour, but nothing allows me to conclude that this matter would qualify as being a “litigation of importance” to Mr. Lin or the Class members.

(3) Conclusion on the Class Counsel Fees

[111] Looking at all the above-mentioned factors cumulatively, I am not satisfied that the Class Counsel Fees requested to be approved by Class Counsel in this case can be qualified as fair and reasonable in the circumstances, when considered in light of the modest results achieved for the Class members on the monetary front. In other words, in the particular circumstances of this case, the requested 33% percentage-based fees cross too many redlines to be approved as such.

[112] Important “principled reasons” lead me to this conclusion. I cannot help but note that the proposed 33% contingency fee is not entirely “consistent” with the Retainer Agreement concluded at the commencement of the Class Action. The Retainer Agreement provided, in underlined and bolded terms, that the Class Counsel legal fees “shall not exceed” 33% of the recovered sums. Nevertheless, the Class Counsel Fees sought in this motion are at the extreme high end of what the Retainer Agreement envisaged. In addition, the requested 33% fee also sits at the top of the range of percentage-based fees awarded by the courts in comparable cases. In sum, the legal fees sought by Class Counsel on this motion are at the maximum contemplated by the Retainer Agreement and in comparable cases, in a context where the likely or expected monetary result for the Class members sits at the totally opposite end of the spectrum as far as their anticipated recovery is concerned. This is not fair and reasonable.

[113] I find it unjustifiable, in light of the highly modest success likely or expected to be achieved for the Class members on the monetary front, that Class Counsel could be entitled to receive what they themselves recognized as being the top end of the spectrum for their contingency fees in the Retainer Agreement. When class counsel agree to fees up to a certain amount in the context of class actions, it has to mean something, and it goes without saying that achieving a low or short result for the class members does not sound like a situation where it is fair and reasonable to be granted the maximum of contemplated fees.

[114] In view of the significant contrast between the Class Counsel Fees sought, which are at the very top of the range contemplated in the Retainer Agreement and in comparable cases, and the expected monetary benefit to Class members, which will likely grant them a very low rate of recovery, I find that the requested Class Counsel Fees are disproportionate in relation to the overall results achieved for the Class, notwithstanding the commendable success in terms of Airbnb's behavioural modification. Put differently, while the success achieved for Class members is at best modest, the fees requested by Class Counsel are anything but modest. This does not fit the definition of being "fair and reasonable in the circumstances."

[115] There is no magic formula to determine what should be the appropriate percentage-based fees of class counsel in a class action settlement. It is a matter of judgment, based on the particular circumstances of any given case and the interests of the class, bearing in mind – in the current case – the material non-monetary benefits in terms of behavioural modification and the need to adequately reward entrepreneurial Class Counsel who were willing to undertake important risks and spent significant resources on this litigation. In the circumstances, I will therefore slightly reduce the Class Counsel Fees to 30% or $1,800,000, which will remain in the upper part of the range and close to the maximum set out in the Retainer Agreement. By any measure, Class Counsel will still be very well compensated for their efforts. I am mindful of the fact that this reduction in Class Counsel Fees will bring diminutive material benefit to each Class member in terms of an increase in the likely or expected average Credit to Class members. But, in my judgment, this reduction will at least bring the Class Counsel Fees within fair and reasonable territory.

[116] As the British Columbia Supreme Court recently stated in Kobe Steel, "[t]he integrity of the profession is a consideration when approving legal fees in the class action context" (Kobe Steel at para 58, referring to Plimmer v Google, Inc, 2013 BCSC 681 and Endean v The Canadian Red Cross Society; Mitchell v CRCS, 2000 BCSC 971, aff'd 2000 BCCA 638, leave to appeal dismissed, [2001] SCCA No 27). Sometimes, substantial rewards to class counsel can create the wrong impression or perception that the ultimate beneficiaries of class actions are class counsel, rather than the class members. Where, as here, the settlement amount likely or expected to be received by class members is minimal – and in fact abysmal when compared to the legal fees claimed by Class Counsel –, there could be such a perception. In such cases, it is the Court's duty to attempt to rectify this perception and to ensure that counsel do not leave the impression that the class action process serves "to obtain a result in which [class counsel] are the only or major beneficiaries" (Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd v Microsoft Corporation, 2018 BCSC 2091 at para 53). As the court reminded in Kobe Steel, "[t]he ultimate purpose of the class action vehicle is to benefit the class, not their lawyers. The payment to the lawyers is simply a way to achieve the benefits for the class, not the other way around" (Kobe Steel at para 58, citing Cardoso v Canada Dry Mott's Inc, 2020 BCSC 1569 [Cardoso] at para 37).

C. Honorarium

[117] Class Counsel finally request that the Court award a $5,000 Honorarium to Mr. Lin, the representative plaintiff, to be paid from the Settlement Amount. Airbnb has indicated that it is prepared to make that payment if ordered by the Court.

(1) Law relating to the approval of an honorarium

[118] No specific Rule provides for the payment of an honorarium to a representative plaintiff in class actions. However, this Court has the discretion to award honoraria to representative plaintiffs, and it has indeed done so on numerous occasions (see, e.g., Wenham 1; McLean 2; Condon; Manuge). Honoraria to representative plaintiffs are to be awarded sparingly, "as representative plaintiffs are not to benefit from the class proceeding more than other class members" (McLean 2 at para 57, referring to Eidoo v Infineon Technologies AG, 2015 ONSC 2675 at paras 13-22). In Ontario, the predominant view is that an honorarium is exceptional and that courts should only rarely approve an award of compensation to a representative plaintiff (Park v Nongshim Co, Ltd, 2019 ONSC 1997 at paras 84-86; Markson v MBNA Canada Bank, 2012 ONSC 5891 at paras 55-71). It requires an exceptional contribution that has resulted in success for the class.

[119] In other words, an honorarium is not to be awarded as a routine matter but is rather "a recognition that the representative plaintiffs meaningfully contributed to the class members' pursuit of access to justice" (Condon at para 115). "Honorariums [sic] are given when the representative plaintiff(s) contribute more than the normal effort of such a position – for example, forfeiting their privacy to a high profile class litigation and participating in extensive community outreach" (McLean 2 at para 57). It is only where representative plaintiffs can demonstrate "a level of involvement and effort that goes beyond what is normally expected and is truly extraordinary, or where there is evidence that they were financially harmed because they agreed to be a class representative that an honorarium will be justified" (Casseres v Takeda Pharmaceutical Company, 2021 ONSC 2846 at para 10). Representative plaintiffs are not entitled to receive additional compensation for simply doing their job as class representatives (see, e.g., Cardoso at paras 42-51).

[120] In determining whether the circumstances are exceptional, the Court may consider several factors, including: i) active involvement in the initiation of the litigation and retainer of counsel; ii) exposure to a real risk of costs; iii) significant personal hardship or inconvenience in connection with the prosecution of the litigation; iv) time spent and activities undertaken in advancing the litigation; v) communication and interaction with other class members; and vi) participation at various stages in the litigation, including discovery, settlement negotiations and trial (LG Chem at para 50). A review of the case law also indicates that the courts have approved the payment of an honorarium to a representative plaintiff when he or she rendered active and necessary assistance in the preparation or presentation of the case, and such assistance resulted in monetary success for the class.

[121] In addition, the Court must also ensure that "the amount of any separate payment to the representative plaintiff is not disproportionate to the benefit derived by the class members, the effort of the representative plaintiff, and the risks assumed by the representative plaintiff" (Parsons v Coast Capital Savings Credit Union, 2010 BCCA 311 at para 19).

(2) Application to this case

[122] For the reasons that follow, I am not persuaded that the payment of the requested $5,000 Honorarium to Mr. Lin is justified in this case.

[123] I first note that, contrary to the situation in Condon (expressly referred to by counsel for Mr. Lin in his submissions to the Court), the affidavit of Mr. Lin is virtually silent on details of his involvement in this case, and does not state or even suggest that he expended a significant amount of time carrying out his duties as representative plaintiff. On his work as representative plaintiff, the affidavit of Mr. Lin is limited to a meagre two-line paragraph (paragraph 5), which reads as follows: "I assisted Class Counsel throughout this litigation, including providing information, offering my opinion and instructions, and keeping updated on developments." This provides no helpful evidence to the Court. I acknowledge that a slightly more elaborate statement is provided in the Counsel Affidavit (at paragraph 140), but it does not emanate from Mr. Lin himself and it essentially offers generic descriptions with limited particulars regarding the actual work done by Mr. Lin in this matter. In fact, the list of tasks described in the Counsel Affidavit boils down to a recitation of the usual tasks expected to be undertaken by any representative plaintiff.

[124] It is not sufficient for class counsel to simply argue the exceptional work done by a representative plaintiff. There needs to be evidence, from the representative plaintiff, at a convincing level of particularity, allowing the Court to assess and measure the nature and the involvement of the class representative. No matter how eloquent arguments from counsel may be, they cannot replace the need for the representative plaintiff to provide clear, convincing and non-speculative evidence supporting the extent and exceptional nature of his or her involvement (Jensen v Samsung Electronics Co, Ltd, 2019 FC 373 at paras 41-43).

[125] Here, there is no evidence that Mr. Lin was intimately involved in the Class Action, that he initiated the action himself, or that he was a driving force behind it. Furthermore, this is not a high profile litigation or a situation where Mr. Lin's name was widely publicized, where he had exposure to the media, or where his privacy was invaded through the recitation of his personal story to advance the case. There is also no evidence of any community outreach and of public representations made by Mr. Lin about the case. Moreover, Mr. Lin did not have to prepare for or attend a cross-examination on his affidavit filed in support of the certification motion.

[126] I do not question Mr. Lin's contribution or commitment to the Class Action, and Mr. Lin certainly deserves acknowledgement for his role in the conduct of the proceeding. However, representative plaintiffs do not receive additional compensation for simply doing their job as class representatives. In this case, I find no clear and convincing evidence of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances to support the payment of the substantial Honorarium requested by Mr. Lin. In short, I cannot conclude, based on the evidence before me, that Mr. Lin's contribution, while laudatory, had any exceptional or extraordinary value.

[127] I further underline that the monetary compensation expected to be received by the Class members in this case will likely be excessively modest, in the form of a Credit which may not exceed $10. In these circumstances, to grant Mr. Lin an Honorarium of $5,000 would mean compensating him in an amount that would be more than 500 times the average benefit of each Class member. This would be preposterous and plainly unreasonable in the circumstances. What is more, an Honorarium of $5,000 would represent over 50 times the actual loss that Mr. Lin claimed to have suffered on his booking accommodation at the source of this Class Action. Again, nothing would justify such a massive Honorarium in a context where the benefits likely or expected to be received by the Class members are minuscule, and the evidence of any exceptional work done by Mr. Lin is absent.

(3) Conclusion on the Honorarium

[128] Having regard to the Credit awarded to the Class members from the Settlement Amount, the relevant authorities and the scant evidence on Mr. Lin's actual involvement in this proceeding, I find that the $5,000 Honorarium sought by Mr. Lin is unreasonable and unjustified in the circumstances. I instead determine that a nominal Honorarium of $1,000 is more appropriate and more commensurate with the Net Settlement Funds and the expected Credit and with the work done by Mr. Lin in this matter.

D. Rule 60

[129] I take a moment to make a short remark on Rule 60, invoked by counsel for Mr. Lin in the form of an epilogue at the end of their written and oral submissions before the Court. It left the impression that counsel was referring to this Rule to suggest that the Court might have some duty or obligation to inform Mr. Lin of gaps in his evidence or in his motion, and to provide him with an opportunity to correct any shortcomings. With respect, I do not agree that this is the purpose of Rule 60.

[130] Rule 60 provides that "[a]t any time before judgment is given in a proceeding, the Court may draw the attention of a party to any gap in the proof of its case or to any non-compliance with these Rules and permit the party to remedy it on such conditions as the Court considers just." Rule 60 does not create some sort of obligation on the part of the Court to point out how a party's case is incomplete or insufficient in terms of contents or evidence. It is well established that it is not the role of the courts to provide legal or tactical advice to litigants (SNC-Lavalin Group Inc v Canada (Public Prosecution Service), 2019 FCA 108 at para 9). Rather, Rule 60 is part of a group of provisions, namely, Rules 56 to 60, which address the consequences of a party's failure to comply with the Rules, and articulate a series of actions that may be taken by a party, or the Court, in such situations. As I indicated in Lessard-Gauvin v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 730 at paragraphs 116-119, the objective of these Rules is to ensure that procedural irregularities can be rectified without necessarily resulting in the dismissal of a proceeding.

[131] Rule 60 is not a tool available to parties to obtain free legal advice from the Court or to ask the Court to do work that the parties themselves, or their counsel, may have failed to do.

IV. Conclusion

[132] For the reasons detailed above, I find that the Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the Class as a whole, and that it shall be approved, along with the appointment of the Class Administrator.

[133] I find that the requested Class Counsel Fees are not fair and reasonable, and that they shall be adjusted downward to $1,800,000 plus applicable taxes.

[134] I find that the requested Honorarium for Mr. Lin is not fair, reasonable and justified, and that it shall be reduced to $1,000.

[135] An order will issue giving effect to these findings and substantially incorporating the language proposed by both parties in the draft orders submitted to the Court as part of the motion materials.

[136] No costs will be awarded.

ORDER in T-1663-17

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

A. General Terms

1. In addition to the definitions used elsewhere in these Reasons, for the purposes of this Order, the definitions set out in the Settlement Agreement attached as Schedule "A" to this Order apply to and are incorporated into this Order.

2. In the event of a conflict between the terms of this Order and the Settlement Agreement, the terms of this Order shall prevail.

B. Settlement Agreement

3. The Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Settlement Class.

4. The Settlement Agreement is hereby approved pursuant to Rule 334.29 and shall be implemented and enforced in accordance with its terms.

5. All provisions of the Settlement Agreement (including its Recitals and Definitions) are incorporated by reference into and form part of this Order, and this Order, including the Settlement Agreement, is binding upon each member of the Settlement Class, including those Persons who are minors or mentally incapable, and the requirements of Rule 115 are dispensed with.

6. Upon the Effective Date, each Releasor has released and shall be conclusively deemed to have forever and absolutely released the Releasees from the Released Claims.

7. Upon the Effective Date, each Releasor shall not now or hereafter institute, continue, maintain, intervene in or assert, either directly or indirectly, whether in Canada or elsewhere, on their own behalf or on behalf of any class or any other Person, any proceeding, cause of action, claim or demand against any Releasee, or any other Person who may claim contribution or indemnity, or other claims over relief, from any Releasee, whether pursuant to legislation or at common law or equity in respect of any Released Claim.

8. For purposes of administration and enforcement of the Settlement Agreement and this Order, this Court will retain an ongoing supervisory role and the Defendants attorn to the jurisdiction of this Court solely for the purpose of implementing, administering and enforcing the Settlement Agreement and this Order, and subject to the terms and conditions set out in the Settlement Agreement and this Order.

9. No Releasee shall have any responsibility or liability whatsoever relating to the administration of the Settlement Agreement.

10. In the event that the Settlement Agreement is terminated in accordance with its terms, this Order shall be declared null and void and of no force and effect on subsequent motion made on notice.

11. Upon the Effective Date, the Proceeding shall be dismissed against the Defendants, with prejudice and without costs to the Defendants, Plaintiff, or Releasees, and that such dismissal shall be a defence to any subsequent action in respect of the subject matter hereof.

C. Appointment of Claims Administrator

12. Deloitte is hereby appointed as Claims Administrator pursuant to the Settlement Agreement and the duties and obligations are as set out in the Settlement Agreement, and are binding on the Claims Administrator.

13. The Claims Administrator's estimated fees, disbursements and other costs are $320,500, all-inclusive, and these Administration Expenses will be paid by Airbnb Ireland Unlimited Company, and will be deducted from the Settlement Amount in accordance with Sections 10.1(6) and 10.1(7) of the Settlement Agreement.

14. Unless ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction, no documents or information received by the Claims Administrator by reason of the settlement or its administration and implementation, whether received directly or indirectly and whether received before or after this Order was made, are producible in any civil or criminal proceeding, administrative proceeding, grievance, or arbitration.

15. Unless ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction, neither the Claims Administrator nor its employees, agents, partners, or associates can be compelled to be a witness in any civil or criminal proceeding, administrative proceeding, grievance, or arbitration where the information sought relates, directly or indirectly, to information obtained by the Claims Administrator by reason of the settlement or its administration and implementation.

16. No person may bring an action or take any proceeding against the Claims Administrator or its employees, agents, partners, associates, or successors for any matter in any way relating to the settlement or its implementation and administration, except with leave of this Court on notice to all affected parties.

D. Class Counsel Fees

17. The Retainer Agreement between the plaintiff and Class Counsel is approved.

18. Class Counsel Fees in the amount of $1,800,000 plus applicable taxes is approved under Rule 334.4.

19. Other than Class Counsel Fees, Class Counsel shall not claim any other payments for this Proceeding, including disbursements.

20. The defendants shall pay the aforementioned Class Counsel Fees in accordance with the Settlement Agreement.

E. Honorarium

21. An Honorarium in the amount of $1,000 is awarded to the plaintiff.

22. The Defendants shall pay the aforementioned Honorarium in accordance with the Settlement Agreement.

23. No costs are awarded on this motion.

NATIONAL SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

RECITALS

A. WHEREAS the Proceeding was commenced by the Plaintiff in the Federal Court of Canada and the Plaintiff claims class-wide damages allegedly caused as a result of the conduct alleged therein;

B. WHEREAS the Proceeding alleges that some or all of the Releasees' booking platforms displayed prices to Settlement Class Members during the Class Period in a manner that was contrary to Part VI of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34;

C. WHEREAS the Proceeding was certified as a class action by the Court on December 5, 2019, following a contested hearing and the Plaintiff was appointed representative plaintiff of the Class, but notice of the certification and an opportunity to opt out of the Proceeding have not yet been provided;

D. WHEREAS the Releasees do not admit, through the execution of this Settlement Agreement or otherwise, any allegation of unlawful conduct alleged in the Proceeding, and otherwise deny all liability and assert that they have complete defences in respect of the merits of the Proceeding or otherwise;

E. WHEREAS the Plaintiff, Class Counsel and the Settling Defendants agree that neither this Settlement Agreement nor any statement made in the negotiation thereof shall be deemed or construed to be an admission by or evidence against the Releasees or evidence of the truth of any of the Plaintiff's allegations, which allegations are expressly denied by the Settling Defendants;

F. WHEREAS the Settling Defendants are entering into this Settlement Agreement in order to achieve a final and nation-wide resolution of all claims asserted or which could have been asserted against the Releasees by the Plaintiff and the Settlement Class in the Proceeding, and to avoid further expense, inconvenience and the distraction of burdensome and protracted litigation;

G. WHEREAS the Settling Defendants do not hereby attorn to the jurisdiction of the Court or any other court or tribunal in respect of any civil, criminal or administrative process except to the extent they have previously done so in the Proceeding or as expressly provided in this Settlement Agreement with respect to the Proceeding;

AL SL

H. WHEREAS Counsel for the Settling Defendants and Class Counsel have engaged in arm's-length settlement discussions and negotiations, resulting in this Settlement Agreement relating to Canada;

I. WHEREAS, on or around June 27, 2019, the Settling Defendants have adjusted the Airbnb Platform to display an all-inclusive price to Guests for the booking of Accommodations, at every step of the search and booking process;

J. WHEREAS as a result of these settlement discussions and negotiations, the Settling Defendants and the Plaintiff have entered into this Settlement Agreement, which embodies all of the terms and conditions of the settlement between the Settling Defendants and the Plaintiff, both individually and on behalf of the Settlement Class the Plaintiff represents, subject to approval of the Court;

K. WHEREAS the Quebec Action was commenced against certain of the Releasees by the Quebec Plaintiff, on behalf of the Quebec Class, and which action was settled in 2019 and finally approved by the Quebec Court in February 2020;

L. WHEREAS there is a pending motion before the Court where the Parties are in dispute as to the validity and/or enforceability of the settlement in the Quebec Action;

M. WHEREAS the Parties do not intend for any member of the Quebec Class to be eligible for benefits under this Settlement Agreement;

N. WHEREAS Class Counsel, on their own behalf and on behalf of the Plaintiff and the Settlement Class Members, have reviewed and fully understand the terms of this Settlement Agreement and, based on their analyses of the facts and law applicable to the Plaintiff's claims, having regard to the burdens and expense associated with prosecuting the Proceeding, including the risks and uncertainties associated with trials and appeals, and having regard to the value of the Settlement Agreement, have concluded that this Settlement Agreement is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of the Plaintiff and the Settlement Class he represents;

O. WHEREAS the Parties therefore wish to and hereby finally resolve on a national basis, without admission of liability, the Proceeding as against the Releasees, provided that members of the Quebec Class are not entitled to obtain recovery from this settlement; and

AL SA

P. WHEREAS the Parties agree to proceed to obtain approvals from the Court as provided for in this Settlement Agreement, on the express understanding that such agreement shall not derogate from the respective rights of the Parties in the event that this Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason;

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the covenants, agreements and releases set forth herein and for other good and valuable consideration, the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby acknowledged, it is agreed by the Parties that the Proceeding be settled and dismissed with prejudice as to the Settling Defendants, all without costs as to the Plaintiff, the Settlement Class Members, and the Settling Defendants, subject to the approval of the Court, on the following terms and conditions:

SECTION 2 – SETTLEMENT APPROVAL

2.1 Best Efforts

(1) The Parties shall use their best efforts and act in good faith to implement this Settlement Agreement and to secure the prompt, complete and final dismissal with prejudice of the Proceeding as against the Settling Defendants.

2.2 Motions Seeking Approval of Notice and Certification

(1) The Plaintiff shall file a motion before the Court, as soon as practicable after the Date of Execution, for orders approving the notices described in Section 9.1(1).

(2) The order approving the notices described in Section 9.1(1) shall be substantially in the form attached as Schedule A.

2.3 Motions Seeking Approval of the Settlement Agreement

(1) The Plaintiff shall make best efforts to file a motion before the Court for an order approving this Settlement Agreement as soon as practicable after the expiry of the opt-out period in Section 4.1(5) and within the timelines permitted under the Federal Courts Rules

(2) The order approving this Settlement Agreement shall be substantially in the form attached as Schedule B.

2.4 Pre-Motion Confidentiality

(1) Until the first of the motions required by Section 2.2(1) is brought, the Parties shall keep all of the terms of the Settlement Agreement confidential and shall not disclose them without the prior consent of Counsel for the Settling Defendants and Class Counsel, as the case may be, except as required for the purposes of financial reporting, the preparation of financial records (including tax returns and financial statements), as necessary to give effect to its terms, or as otherwise required by law.

2.5 Settlement Agreement Effective

(1) This Settlement Agreement shall only become final on the Effective Date.

ALSC

SECTION 3 – SETTLEMENT BENEFITS

3.1 Redeemable Credits

(1) The Settling Defendants shall offer to compensate Credit Eligible Class Members by offering credits of a total gross value equal to the Settlement Amount to be used on the Airbnb Platform, subject to the deductions and conditions set out in this Settlement Agreement.

(2) The following fees and costs shall be paid from the Settlement Amount and will be deducted from the gross value of the credits:

(a) Administration Expenses;

(b) The cost of publication of any notices to Settlement Class Members that the Court may require;

(c) The plaintiff's honorarium as described in Section 11.4, to the extent approved by the Court; and

(d) Class Counsel Fees and Class Counsel Disbursements, plus any applicable sales taxes, to the extent approved by the Court and as provided in Section 11.3 below.

(3) The value of each Redeemable Credit to be distributed to Credit Claiming Class Members shall be determined at the expiry of the Claims Deadline in accordance with Section 7.1(6).

(4) The Settlement Amount and other consideration to be provided in accordance with the terms of this Settlement Agreement shall be provided in full satisfaction of the Released Claims against the Releasees.

(5) For greater certainty, the Settlement Amount shall be all-inclusive of all amounts, including interest, costs, any honorarium paid to the Plaintiff, Administration Expenses, Class Counsel Fees, Class Counsel Disbursements, and taxes.

(6) The Releasees shall have no obligation to pay any amount in addition to the Settlement Amount, for any reason, pursuant to or in furtherance of this Settlement Agreement or the Proceeding. In particular, after the Settlement Agreement has been implemented and executed, there shall be no surplus amount remaining for remittance, reparation or compensation to any Settlement Class Member, Class Counsel or Plaintiff other than the Redeemable Credits, and the payment of Class Counsel Fees.

SECTION 4 – OPTING OUT AND OBJECTIONS

4.1 Opt-Out and Objection Procedure

(1) Potential Settlement Class Members seeking to opt out of the Proceeding or object to the settlement must do so by sending a written notice, personally signed by the potential Settlement Class Member (or the potential Settlement Class Member's parent or guardian if he/she is legally incapable), by pre-paid mail, courier, fax or email to Class Counsel at an address to be identified in the notice described in Section 9.1(1).

(2) Any potential Settlement Class Member who validly opts out of the Proceedings shall not be able to participate in the Proceeding and no further right to opt out of the Proceedings will be provided.

(3) An election to opt out or notice of objection will only be valid if it is received on or before the Opt-Out Deadline to the designated address in the notice described in Section 9.1(1).

(4) The written election to opt out or notice of objection must contain the following information in order to be valid:

(a) the potential Settlement Class Member's full name, current address, telephone number, and the e-mail address for which they received the notice in Section 9;

(b) an acknowledgment that the Potential Settlement Class Member is a resident of Canada (except Quebec) and aware that he/she will no longer be entitled to participate in any benefits from this settlement; and

(c) in the case of a written election to opt out:

(i) a statement to the effect that the Person wishes to be excluded from the Proceedings; and

(ii) the reasons for opting out; or

(d) in the case of a notice of objection:

ALSC

(i) the grounds for the objection; and

(ii) whether the potential Settlement Class Member intends to appear at the approval hearing himself/herself, or through his/her lawyer (at the potential Settlement Class Member's own expense);

(5) Class Counsel may request potential Settlement Class Members that submit an election to opt out or notice of objection to provide their proof of residency and/or other proof that they are a potential Settlement Class Member.

(6) Within thirty (30) days of the Opt-Out Deadline, Class Counsel shall provide to the Settling Defendants a list containing the names, contact information, and reason provided for opting out for each individual who has submitted an opt-out request in accordance with Section 4.1(4) above.

(7) With respect to any potential Settlement Class Member who validly opts out from the Proceedings, the Settling Defendants reserve all of their legal rights and defences.

(8) The Plaintiff through Class Counsel expressly waives his right to opt-out of the Proceeding.

SECTION 5 – TERMINATION OF SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

5.1 Right of Termination

(1) In the event that the Court:

(a) declines to dismiss the Proceeding as against the Settling Defendants as provided in Section 6.3(1);

(b) declines to approve this Settlement Agreement or any material part, or approves this Settlement Agreement in a materially modified form; or

(c) issues a settlement approval order that is materially inconsistent with the terms of the Settlement Agreement or not substantially in the form attached to this Settlement Agreement as Schedule B;

or in the event any order approving this Settlement Agreement does not become a Final Order, the Plaintiff and the Settling Defendants shall each have the right to terminate this Settlement Agreement by delivering a written notice pursuant to Section 12.15, within ten (10) days following an event described above.

(2) In addition, if the Credits are not provided to Credit Claiming Class Members in accordance with Sections 3.1(1) and 7.1, the Plaintiff shall have the right to terminate this Settlement Agreement by delivering a written notice pursuant to Section 12.15 or move before the Courts to enforce the terms of this Settlement Agreement.

(3) If more than 100 Settlement Class Members validly exercise their right to opt out in accordance with Section 4, the Settling Defendants shall have the right to terminate this Settlement Agreement by delivering a written notice pursuant to Section 12.15, within five (5) days of being provided with the opt out report described in Section 4.1(5).

(4) Except as provided for in Section 5.4, if the Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, the Settlement Agreement shall be null and void and have no further force or effect, and shall not be binding on the Parties, and shall not be used as evidence or otherwise in any litigation or in any other way for any reason.

(5) Any order, ruling or determination made or rejected by the Court with respect to Class Counsel Fees shall not be deemed to be a material modification of all, or a part, of this Settlement Agreement and shall not provide any basis for the termination of this Settlement Agreement.

5.2 If Settlement Agreement is Terminated

(1) If this Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated in accordance with its terms, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason:

(a) no motion to approve this Settlement Agreement that has not been decided shall proceed;

(b) the Parties will cooperate in seeking to have all issued order(s), in the Court or the Federal Court of Appeal, on the basis of the Settlement Agreement or approving this Settlement Agreement set aside and declared null and void and of no force or effect, and any Person shall be estopped from asserting otherwise;

ALSC

(c) within ten (10) days of such termination having occurred, Class Counsel shall make reasonable efforts to destroy all documents or other materials provided by the Settling Defendants and/or Counsel for the Settling Defendants under this Settlement Agreement or containing or reflecting information derived from such documents or other materials received from the Settling Defendants and/or Counsel for the Settling Defendants and, to the extent Class Counsel has disclosed any documents or information provided by the Settling Defendants and/or Counsel for the Settling Defendants to any other Person, shall make reasonable efforts to recover and destroy such documents or information. Class Counsel shall provide Counsel for the Settling Defendants with a written certification by Class Counsel of such destruction. Nothing contained in this Section 5.2 shall be construed to require Class Counsel to destroy any of their work product. However, any documents or information provided by the Settling Defendants and/or Counsel for the Settling Defendants, or received from the Settling Defendants and/or Counsel for the Settling Defendants in connection with this Settlement Agreement, may not be disclosed to any Person in any manner or used, directly or indirectly, by Class Counsel or any other Person in any way for any reason, without the express prior written permission of the relevant Settling Defendants. Class Counsel shall take appropriate steps and precautions to ensure and maintain the confidentiality of such documents, information and any work product of Class Counsel derived from such documents or information; and

(d) With respect to the Settling Defendants' motion to exclude the Quebec Class from this Action, the Plaintiff and the Quebec Class reserve all of their legal rights and defences.

5.3 Payments Following Termination

(1) If the Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, the Settling Defendants shall be under no obligation to make any Credits available to Credit Eligible Class Members or make any other payments under this Settlement Agreement.

ALSK

5.4 Survival of Provisions After Termination

(1) If this Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, the provisions of Sections 5.1(4), 5.2, 5.3, 5.4, 8.1, and 8.2 and the definitions and Schedules applicable thereto shall survive the termination and continue in full force and effect. The definitions and Schedules shall survive only for the limited purpose of the interpretation of Sections 5.1(4), 5.2, 5.3, 5.4, 8.1, and 8.2 within the meaning of this Settlement Agreement, but for no other purposes. All other provisions of this Settlement Agreement and all other obligations pursuant to this Settlement Agreement shall cease immediately.

SECTION 6 – RELEASES AND DISMISSALS

6.1 Release of Releasees

(1) Upon the Effective Date, subject to Section 6.2, and in consideration of making available the Redeemable Credits and for other valuable consideration set forth in the Settlement Agreement, the Releasors forever and absolutely release and forever discharge the Releasees from the Released Claims that any of them, whether directly, indirectly, derivatively, or in any other capacity, ever had, or now have.

(2) The Plaintiff and Settlement Class Members acknowledge that they may hereafter discover facts in addition to, or different from, those facts which they know or believe to be true regarding the subject matter of the Settlement Agreement, and it is their intention to release fully, finally and forever all Released Claims and, in furtherance of such intention, this release shall be and remain in effect notwithstanding the discovery or existence of additional or different facts.

6.2 No Further Claims

(1) Upon the Effective Date, each Releasor shall not now or hereafter institute, continue, maintain, intervene in or assert, either directly or indirectly, whether in Canada or elsewhere, on their own behalf or on behalf of any class or any other Person, any proceeding, cause of action, claim or demand against any Releasee, or any other Person who may claim contribution or indemnity, or other claims over relief, from any Releasee, whether pursuant to legislation or at common law or equity in respect of any Released Claim. For greater certainty and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Releasors shall not assert or pursue a Released Claim, against any Releasee under the laws of any foreign jurisdiction.

ALSC

6.3 Dismissal of the Proceedings and Appeal

(1) Upon the Effective Date, the Proceeding shall be dismissed with prejudice and without costs as against any party.

(2) Upon the Execution Date, the Parties shall inform the Federal Court of Appeal to hold the appeal A-464-19 in abeyance until the Court has heard and decided the approval of this settlement.

(3) If the Court approves the settlement, and upon the Effective Date, the parties shall execute any necessary order(s) to dismiss the appeal in A-464-19.

(4) If the Court does not approve the settlement, the Parties shall promptly inform the Federal Court of Appeal.

6.4 Material Term

(1) The releases, covenants, and dismissals contemplated in this Section shall be considered a material term of the Settlement Agreement and the failure of the Court to approve the releases, covenants, and dismissals contemplated herein shall give rise to a right of termination pursuant to Section 5.1 of the Settlement Agreement.

SECTION 7– DISTRIBUTION AND CONDITIONS OF CREDITS

7.1 Distribution Process

(1) Credit Eligible Class Members will be able to obtain a Redeemable Credit through a claim process as further described in this Section 7.

(2) Within ten (10) days of the Effective Date, a notice will be sent to Settlement Class Members notifying them that the settlement has been approved and containing a hyperlink for Credit Eligible Class Members to click on if they wish to claim a Redeemable Credit. The online claims process shall allow for the identification of each Credit Eligible Class Member who clicks on said hyperlink as a Credit Claiming Class Member. The Credit Eligible Class Members shall not be required to provide any further information or take any further action. Should any email sent to a Settlement Class Member or Credit Eligible Class Member result in a Bounce Back, no additional steps will be required from the Parties to communicate with the relevant class member.

ALSC

(3) All Claims by Credit Eligible Class Members must be submitted and received by the Claims Deadline. The Claims Deadline shall be clearly set forth in the notice and on the website of Class Counsel. As part of the claims process, the relevant Credit Eligible Class Member shall acknowledge that they fit the criteria for being a Credit Eligible Class Member.

(4) Credit Eligible Class Members who do not submit a Claim by the Claims Deadline shall no longer be eligible to receive benefits under this Settlement Agreement but will be bound by the remaining terms.

(5) Within ten (10) days of the Claims Deadline, the Claims Administrator shall provide a list of Credit Claiming Class Members along with the information collected through the automated process described above to Counsel for the Settling Defendants.

(6) Within sixty (60) days of the Claims Deadline, the Settling Defendants shall deliver to each Credit Claiming Class Member a Redeemable Credit to his or her Account, available to be redeemed automatically at the next check-out, of a value in Canadian Dollars equivalent to a pro rata share of the Net Settlement Amount. By way of illustrative example only, if there are 100,000 Credit Claiming Class Members, and the total fees, expenses, and taxes in Section 3.1(2) is CAD$2,500,000, then the Net Settlement Amount would be CAD$3,500,000 (i.e., $6,000,000 minus $2,500,000), and each Credit Claiming Class Member would receive a credit of CAD$35.

(7) For greater certainty, in the event that a Credit Claiming Class Member has made more than one booking during the Class Period, he or she will only be entitled to one Redeemable Credit.

(8) The Redeemable Credits may be used on the Airbnb Platform, within twenty-four (24) months from the date of issuance, for making Bookings of Accommodations in any location worldwide, after which period the Redeemable Credit will expire. The Redeemable Credits are one-time use only (and any amount not used on the transaction is extinguished), non-transferable, non-cash convertible, non-refundable, and cannot be combined with any other offer, discount, credit or coupon. It is also understood that a Credit Claiming Class Member must agree to the most recent version of the Terms of Service in order to meet the criteria to make a Booking of an Accommodation offered on the Airbnb Platform.

(9) Notwithstanding anything in this Section 7.1, in no event shall any Credit Claiming Class Member be entitled to a Redeemable Credit in an amount greater than CAD$45.

AL SC

(10) If the CAD $45 cap described in Section 7.1(9) is triggered and as a result a portion of the Net Settlement Amount remains undistributed, the Settling Defendants shall pay in the form of cash or cheque, on a cy pres basis, to an organization agreed to by the Parties and approved by the Court.

(11) It is expressly agreed and understood by the Parties that unused, unredeemed or unclaimed Redeemable Credits shall not constitute, nor may they under any circumstances give rise to, a remaining balance for any purpose, including for a claim for reparation or compensation by Settlement Class Members or for the payment of a charge, levy or toll by any third party, including a charge, levy or toll contemplated by any regulation. For greater certainty and without limitation, the Settling Defendants may terminate this Settlement Agreement in the event any court recognizes the existence of a remaining balance.

7.2 Responsibility for Administration or Fees

(1) Except as otherwise provided for in this Settlement Agreement, the Settling Defendants shall not have any responsibility, financial obligations or liability whatsoever with respect to the administration of the Settlement Agreement including, but not limited to, Administration Expenses.

SECTION 8 – EFFECT OF SETTLEMENT

8.1 No Admission of Liability

(1) The Plaintiff and the Releasees expressly reserve all of their rights if the Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason. Further, whether or not the Settlement Agreement is finally approved, is terminated, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, this Settlement Agreement and anything contained herein, any and all negotiations, documents, discussions and proceedings associated with this Settlement Agreement, and any action taken to carry out this Settlement Agreement, shall not be deemed, construed, or interpreted to be an admission of any violation of any statute or law, or of any wrongdoing or liability by the Releasees, or of the truth of any of the claims or allegations contained in the Proceedings, any Other Actions, or any other pleading filed by the Plaintiffs.

ALSL

8.2 Agreement Not Evidence

(1) The Parties agree that, whether or not it is finally approved, is terminated, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, this Settlement Agreement and anything contained herein, and any and all negotiations, documents, discussions and proceedings associated with this Settlement Agreement, and any action taken to carry out this Settlement Agreement, shall not be referred to, offered as evidence or received in evidence in any pending or future civil, criminal or administrative action or proceeding, except in a proceeding to approve and/or enforce this Settlement Agreement, to defend against the assertion of Released Claims, as necessary in any insurance-related proceeding, or as otherwise required by law.

8.3 Confidentiality of Settlement Negotiations

(1) Class Counsel or anyone currently or hereafter employed by or a partner with Class Counsel may not divulge to anyone for any purpose any information obtained in the course of the Proceeding on a confidential basis or the negotiation and preparation of this Settlement Agreement, except to the extent such information was, is or becomes otherwise publicly available or unless ordered to do so by a court.

SECTION 9 – NOTICE TO SETTLEMENT CLASS

9.1 Notices Required

(1) The Settlement Class Members shall be given notice of: (i) the hearing at which the Court will be asked to approve the Settlement Agreement and/or Class Counsel Fees, including the procedure for opting out or commenting on the proposed settlement; (ii) the Court's approval of the settlement; and (iii) if the proposed settlement is not approved or otherwise fails to take effect, notice that the proposed settlement was not approved and the litigation shall continue.

9.2 Form and Distribution of Notices

(1) The notices shall be in a form agreed upon by the Parties and approved by the Court or, if the Parties cannot agree on the form of the notices, the notices shall be in a form ordered by the Court.

ALSC

(2) The notices shall be disseminated by a method agreed upon by the Parties and approved by the Courts or, if the Parties cannot agree on a method for disseminating the notices, the notices shall be disseminated by a method ordered by the Courts.

SECTION 10 – ADMINISTRATION AND IMPLEMENTATION

10.1 Mechanics of Administration

(1) Except to the extent provided for in this Settlement Agreement, the mechanics of the implementation and administration of this Settlement Agreement shall be determined by the Court on motions brought by Class Counsel.

(2) The Parties agree that any information provided by the Settling Defendants in accordance with this Section shall be kept confidential, shall be used only for purposes of administering the Settlement Agreement, and shall not be used for marketing or any other purposes.

(3) The Claims Administrator will be required to (i) go through Airbnb's security review process for third-party vendors (including completing a vendor intake form) and be approved by Airbnb, and (ii) sign Airbnb's standard Controller/Processor Data Privacy Addendum. Should these conditions not be met, the Parties agree to replace the Claims Administrator with another that meets these requirements.

(4) The Claims Administrator shall administer the terms of this Settlement Agreement in a cost-effective and timely manner.

(5) The Claims Administrator shall maintain records of all Claims submitted for two years after the Claims Deadline, and such records will be made available upon request to Counsel for the Parties. The Claims Administrator shall also provide such reports and such other information to the Court as it or the Parties may require.

(6) The Administration Expenses will be paid out of the Settlement Amount, as directed by the Court. Should the Settlement Agreement not be approved by the Court or otherwise becomes null and void, no Administration Expenses shall be owed.

ALSC

(7) The Parties anticipate that no sales taxes will be payable in respect of Administration Expenses. To the extent any such taxes are payable, they will be paid from the Settlement Amount in accordance with Section 3.1.

10.2 Information and Assistance

(1) The Settling Defendants will provide to the Claims Administrator a list of the names and email addresses of Persons located in Canada, other than Quebec, who had Airbnb accounts during the Class Period.

(2) It is acknowledged that the Settling Defendants cannot precisely identify Settlement Class Members, any account lists provided under this Section 10.2 for the purpose of providing notice are overinclusive, and the fact a Person is included on such a list does not indicate he or she is a Settlement Class Member or Credit Eligible Class Member.

(3) The name and address information required by Section 10.2 shall be delivered to the Claims Administrator no later than ten (10) days after the orders required by Section 2.2(1) have been obtained, or at a time mutually agreed upon by the Parties.

(4) The Claims Administrator shall be bound by the same confidentiality obligations set out in Section 10.1(2). If this Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated, or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, all information provided by the Settling Defendants pursuant to Section 10.2(1) shall be dealt with in accordance with Section 5.2(1)(c) and no record of the information so provided shall be retained by Class Counsel, any Court-appointed notice-provider and/or the Claims Administrator in any form whatsoever.

(5) The Settling Defendants will make themselves reasonably available to respond to questions respecting the information provided pursuant to Section 10.2(1) from the Claims Administrator. The Settling Defendants' obligations to make themselves reasonably available to respond to questions as particularized in this Section shall not be affected by the release provisions contained in Section 6 of this Settlement Agreement. Unless this Settlement Agreement is not approved, is terminated or otherwise fails to take effect for any reason, the Settling Defendants' obligations to cooperate pursuant to this Section 10.2 shall cease when all settlement funds or court awards have been distributed.

ALSC

(6) The Settling Defendants shall bear no liability with respect to the completeness or accuracy of the information provided pursuant to this Section 10.2.

SECTION 11 – CLASS COUNSEL FEES AND PLAINTIFF'S HONORARIUM

11.1 Responsibility for Fees and Taxes and Plaintiff's Honorarium

(1) The Settling Defendants, jointly and severally, agree to pay from the Settlement Amount the Class Counsel Fees, Class Counsel Disbursements, the Plaintiff's Honorarium, and applicable taxes, that are approved by the Court.

11.2 Responsibility for Costs of Notices

(1) The Settling Defendants shall be responsible for distribution of notices, which is part of the Administration Expenses and payable from the Settlement Amount. The Releasees shall not have any responsibility for the costs of the notices.

11.3 Court Approval for Class Counsel Fees and Disbursements

(1) Class Counsel Fees represent any and all claimable fees by Class Counsel that are to be approved by the Court. It is understood by the Parties that Class Counsel will seek approval of the Court for the Settling Defendants' payment of Class Counsel Fees in the amount of CAD$2 million, plus applicable taxes.

(2) The Settling Defendants will represent to the Court that they do not oppose approval of the Class Counsel Fees described in Section 11.3(1).

(3) Class Counsel will not seek approval for any additional payments (including any Class Counsel Disbursements).

(4) Class Counsel may seek the Court's approval to pay Class Counsel Fees contemporaneous with seeking approval of this Settlement Agreement. The Settling Defendants shall pay the Class Counsel Fees out of the Settlement Amount within ten (10) days of the Effective Date, by way of cheque and/or wire transfer, at Class Counsel's option.

11.4 Court Approval for Plaintiff's Honorarium

(1) Class Counsel may seek Court approval of an honorarium for the Plaintiff not exceeding five-thousand ($5,000) dollars CAD.

(2) The Settling Defendants will represent to the Court that they do not oppose approval of the honorarium described in Section 11.4(1).

(3) The Settling Defendants shall pay Plaintiff's Court-approved honorarium out of the Settlement Amount within ten (10) days of the Effective Date, by way of cheque payable to the Plaintiff, and delivered to Class Counsel's office.

SECTION 12 – MISCELLANEOUS

12.1 Motions for Directions

(1) Class Counsel or the Settling Defendants may apply to the Court as may be required for directions in respect of the interpretation, implementation and administration of this Settlement Agreement.

(2) All motions contemplated by this Settlement Agreement shall be on notice to the Parties, except for those applications concerned solely with the implementation and administration of the Distribution Protocol.

12.2 Headings, etc.

(1) In this Settlement Agreement:

(a) the division of the Settlement Agreement into sections and the insertion of headings are for convenience of reference only and shall not affect the construction or interpretation of this Settlement Agreement; and

(b) the terms "this Settlement Agreement," "hereof," "hereunder," "herein," and similar expressions refer to this Settlement Agreement and not to any particular section or other portion of this Settlement Agreement.

12.3 Computation of Time

(1) In the computation of time in this Settlement Agreement, except where a contrary intention appears,

(a) where there is a reference to a number of days between two events, the number of days shall be counted by excluding the day on which the first event happens and

including the day on which the second event happens, including all calendar days; and

(b) only in the case where the time for doing an act expires on a holiday as "holiday" is defined in the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c. I-21, the act may be done on the next day that is not a holiday.

12.4 Governing Law

(1) This Settlement Agreement shall be governed by and construed and interpreted in accordance with the laws of the Province of Ontario and the laws of Canada applicable therein.

12.5 Entire Agreement

(1) This Settlement Agreement constitutes the entire agreement among the Parties, and supersedes all prior and contemporaneous understandings, undertakings, negotiations, representations, promises, agreements, agreements in principle and memoranda of understanding in connection herewith. None of the Parties will be bound by any prior obligations, conditions or representations with respect to the subject matter of this Settlement Agreement, unless expressly incorporated herein.

12.6 Amendments

(1) This Settlement Agreement may not be modified or amended except in writing and on consent of all Parties hereto, and any such modification or amendment must be approved by the Court.

12.7 Binding Effect

(1) This Settlement Agreement shall be binding upon, and enure to the benefit of, the Plaintiff, the Settlement Class Members, the Settling Defendants, the Releasors, the Releasees and all of their successors and assigns. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, each and every covenant and agreement made herein by the Plaintiff shall be binding upon all Releasors and each and every covenant and agreement made herein by the Settling Defendants shall be binding upon all of the Releasees.

ALSC

12.8 Counterparts

(1) This Settlement Agreement may be executed in counterparts, all of which taken together will be deemed to constitute one and the same agreement, and a facsimile or electronic signature shall be deemed an original signature for purposes of executing this Settlement Agreement.

12.9 Negotiated Agreement

(1) This Settlement Agreement has been the subject of negotiations and discussions among the undersigned, each of which has been represented and advised by competent counsel, so that any statute, case law, or rule of interpretation or construction that would or might cause any provision to be construed against the drafter of this Settlement Agreement shall have no force and effect. The Parties further agree that the language contained in or not contained in previous drafts of this Settlement Agreement, or any agreement in principle, shall have no bearing upon the proper interpretation of this Settlement Agreement.

12.10 Language

(1) The Parties acknowledge that they have required and consented that this Settlement Agreement and all related documents be prepared in English; les parties reconnaissent avoir exigé que la présente convention et tous les documents connexes soient rédigés en anglais.

12.11 Recitals

(1) The recitals to this Settlement Agreement are true and form part of the Settlement Agreement.

12.12 Schedules

(1) The schedules annexed hereto form part of this Settlement Agreement.

12.13 Acknowledgements

(1) Each of the Parties hereby affirms and acknowledges that:

(a) he, she or a representative of the Party with the authority to bind the Party with respect to the matters set forth herein has read and understood the Settlement Agreement;

ALSC

(b) the terms of this Settlement Agreement and the effects thereof have been fully explained to him, her or the Party's representative by his, her or its counsel;

(c) he, she or the Party's representative fully understands each term of the Settlement Agreement and its effect; and

(d) no Party has relied upon any statement, representation or inducement (whether material, false, negligently made or otherwise) of any other Party, beyond the terms of the Settlement Agreement, with respect to the first Party's decision to execute this Settlement Agreement.

12.14 Authorized Signatures

(1) Each of the undersigned represents that he or she is fully authorized to enter into the terms and conditions of, and to execute, this Settlement Agreement on behalf of the Parties identified above their respective signatures and their law firms.

12.15 Notice

(1) Where this Settlement Agreement requires a Party to provide notice or any other communication or document to another Party, such notice, communication or document shall be provided by email, facsimile or letter by overnight delivery to the representatives for the Party to whom notice is being provided, as identified below:

(Class Proceeding commenced under Part 5.1 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106)

ORDER AND REASONS

I. Introduction

[1] This is a motion to approve the First Nations Drinking Water Settlement Agreement [Settlement Agreement or Settlement] pursuant to Rule 334.29(1) of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106 [Rules] and section 35(1) of The Class Proceedings Act, CCSM, c C130 [The Class Proceedings Act]. The underlying actions are class proceedings. The Settlement Agreement compensates First Nation individuals who have lived under a drinking water advisory for a year or more. It also provides First Nations with compensation and assistance in securing safe drinking water through future infrastructure funding.

[2] Both the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench [Courts] have jurisdiction over this proceeding. On October 11, 2019, Curve Lake First Nation [Curve Lake], Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation [Neskantaga], and Former Chief Christopher Moonias filed a statement of claim in the Federal Court [Federal Action]. On November 20, 2019, Tataskweyak Cree Nation [Tataskweyak] and Chief Doreen Spence filed a Statement of Claim in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench [Manitoba Action, and together with the Federal Action, the Actions]. After the Actions were certified, the Courts appointed these individuals and First Nations as the Representative Plaintiffs. The current Chief of Neskantaga, Wayne Moonias, represents the collective interests of Neskantaga. The defendant in both Actions was the Attorney General of Canada [Defendant or Canada]. McCarthy Tétrault LLP [McCarthy Tétrault] and Olthuis Kleer Townshend [OKT] are class counsel [Class Counsel]. The parties finalized the Settlement on September 15, 2021.

[3] The Representative Plaintiffs now bring a motion for an Order:

a. that the proposed Settlement Agreement be approved and its terms given effect;
b. that the Defendant pay the funds contemplated in the proposed Settlement Agreement, and that said funds be distributed in accordance with the proposed Settlement Agreement;
c. that Class Members (defined below) be notified of the approval of the proposed Settlement Agreement as set out in Schedule M and N of the Settlement Agreement; and
d. that the Actions be discontinued on a without costs basis.

[4] The Courts jointly case managed and heard the motion for settlement approval, as contemplated by the Canadian Bar Association's "Canadian Judicial Protocol for the Management of Multi-jurisdictional Class Actions and the Provision of Class Action Notice" (2018), online: The Canadian Bar Association <www.cba.org>. The Courts exercised their jurisdiction to hear this motion jointly pursuant to Rules 3 and 4 of the Rules and section 12 of The Class Proceedings Act.

[5] The two Courts exercised their respective jurisdiction to jointly hear the motion for the approval of the Settlement Agreement. However, as required, each Court separately and independently addressed the governing legal test as it relates to the issue before the Courts and the Actions that were certified in their respective jurisdictions.

[6] The reasons for Settlement and Fee Approval have been released separately but concurrently by each Court. After a full analysis, the two Courts are in complete agreement with the result and the reasons therefore. Accordingly, the reasons released by each Court to a large extent replicate the reasons of the other. This represents what the Courts wish to underscore as complete concurrence.

[7] The Settlement Agreement is historic. It is the first Settlement to tackle the problem of drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves. Additionally, this proceeding marks the first time the Federal Court and another Superior Court have sat together. Most importantly, however, the record before the Courts demonstrates that the Settlement Agreement we are being asked to approve represents what many hope will be a turning point for Canada and First Nations. Both parties acknowledge that an agreement of this nature is long overdue. Although the parties reached the Settlement in just under two years, the Courts acknowledge that Indigenous communities have been advocating for decades to ensure future generations' access to safe water. Those tireless efforts, the willingness of the government, and the expertise and focus of legal counsel have now brought the parties to this promising and hopeful turning point.

[8] For all the reasons outlined below, the Courts approve the proposed Settlement Agreement.

II. Background

A. Drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves in Canada

[9] Authorities issue drinking water advisories when testing indicates that the water supply is or may be unsafe. There are three types of drinking water advisories: boil before use, do not consume, and do not use. Long-term drinking water advisories are those that have been in place for more than one year. The Settlement Agreement only applies to individuals residing on First Nations that have been subject to a long-term drinking water advisory and to those First Nation communities.

[10] The affidavit of Peter Gorham, an expert actuary jointly retained by both parties, states that from 1995-2007, there were 713 recorded long-term drinking water advisories that affected some 257 First Nations. Class Counsel submitted a January 28, 2021 report by Dr. Melanie O'Gorman, a professor of economics and scholar in water infrastructure and long-term drinking water advisories in First Nations. That report states that in comparison to municipal and private water systems, First Nations disproportionately experience long-term drinking water advisories.

[11] As discussed in more detail below, the Actions alleged that Canada is responsible for the establishment of drinking water systems on reserves and that Canada has chronically underfunded First Nations' water needs. As a result, Canada has failed to ensure that Class Members have access to potable water of adequate quality and quantity. Class Counsel pointed out that in a press conference on November 24, 2021, Minister of Indigenous Services, the Honourable Marc Miller, stated that the deficits pertaining to drinking water infrastructure on reserve are a result of systemic racism.

B. Experiences of Representative Plaintiffs & Class Members

[12] The Representative Plaintiffs and other Class Members filed affidavits in support of settlement approval, which outlined the status of drinking water on their respective First Nations. All of those affidavits explained the importance of safe water for the physical, spiritual, emotional, psychological, cultural, or economic health of individuals and communities. In particular, many of the affidavits, including the affidavits of Elder Richard Allen Keeper and Anne Taylor, emphasized the role water plays in ceremony and how contaminated water results in the breakdown of knowledge transmission. Class Members also discussed the tragic relationship between poor drinking water, mental health, and youth suicide. Likewise, they noted that contaminated water has forced members to relocate, which perpetuates the history of displacement of Indigenous peoples from their lands and the separation of families. Class Member Roderick Richard Spence explains:

> Now that I live in Winnipeg, I can drink the water that comes out of my tap, just like other Canadians. But I have lost a piece of who I am. It seems like an awful trade to have to make. I certainly hope that my grandchildren get better treatment. I dream for this, pray for this, and cry for this.

[13] The frustration, stress, and loss of dignity that Class Members have experienced is palpable. As detailed in their affidavits discussed below, members of the Representative First Nations have and continue to suffer unacceptable hardships.

(a) Curve Lake

[14] Curve Lake is an Ojibway First Nation located 15 kilometers outside of Peterborough, Ontario. Chief Whetung was elected Chief on June 18, 2019. She is Michi Saagiig of the Anishnaabe nation. She is a 36-year old lawyer and a mother of two. Chief Whetung's affidavit explains that Curve Lake experiences 10 to 15 boil-water advisories every year, some of which have lasted for more than one year. Her affidavit and the affidavit of Shawn Williams, a member of Curve Lake, state that the water treatment plant on Curve Lake inadequately disinfects water and only services 56 of the 550 homes in the community. Canada constructed it in the early 1980s and intended it to be temporary. The remaining homes on the First Nation are not connected to a public water system and rely on private wells. Members of the community, including Chief Whetung's entire family, have contracted E.coli due to the contaminants in their drinking water. Others have become gravely sick, suffered rashes, and more.

[15] Mr. William's affidavit explains that for decades Curve Lake has been negotiating with Indigenous Services Canada [ISC] to get a new water treatment plant. He describes the process as a "hamster wheel": "the First Nation is constantly running, working to provide proposals, obtain necessary studies, seek funding, only to be in the exact same position decades later." He explains that since Canada provides the funding, the federal government's sign off is needed at every stage of development. He attributes the delay to ISC's habit of providing "funding for studies, small projects, and other lower cost items as a means to appease First Nations while they wait for the big ticket funding to actually address their needs, if that day ever arrives."

[16] The affidavit of Katie Young-Haddlesey, the Economic Development Coordinator of Curve Lake, states that the water crisis has "strangled Curve Lake's economic development." She explains that for every business proposal, Curve Lake must consider whether "there will be enough water and whether the quality will impact the business." Proposals for businesses like laundromats, car washes, restaurants, and hotels are not feasible because there is simply not enough water in the community.

[17] Chief Whetung spoke passionately before both Courts on December 8, 2021. She explained that Curve Lake has been fighting for clean drinking water since before she was born.

For her, the Settlement not only means that the First Nation will have clean water in the near future, but that her children will be able to stay and grow up in their community.

(b) Neskantaga

[18] Neskantaga is an Oji-Cree remote fly-in community in northern Ontario and is situated along Lake Attawapiskat. Neskantaga is subject to the longest drinking water advisory in Canada – the First Nation has not had safe drinking water for over 26 years. Members of Neskantaga have had to evacuate their community twice in the past three years because of their water.

[19] Christopher Moonias was the Chief of Neskantaga from 2019 to 2021. He now acts as special advisor to Neskantaga and remains a Representative Plaintiff. Chief Wayne Moonias is the current Chief of Neskantaga. He took office on April 1, 2021 and continues the work of Former Chief Christopher Moonias with respect to these Actions.

[20] The affidavit of Chief Wayne Moonias describes the traumatic effect the drinking water advisory has had on both individuals and the community and emphasizes its adverse effect on community members' mental health. As explained by the Community of Neskantaga in the Joint Press Release dated July 20, 2021, "[o]ur symptoms are real, and result in kids committing suicide, getting rashes, and suffering severe eczema. The skin conditions are particularly awful. They make our people feel like they have to hide themselves, and furthers their loss of dignity, on top of already feeling like maybe they don't deserve clean water."

[21] Class Members from Neskantaga also submitted affidavits supporting the Settlement and detailing their stories. Those Class Members included Former Chief Peter Moonias, Dorothy Sakanee, Maggie Sakanee, Marcus Moonias, and Amy Moonias. Maggie Sakanee's affidavit details the skin rashes and sores that her grandchildren developed due to the water, which only cleared up after being evacuated to Thunder Bay. Amy Moonias' affidavit tells a very similar story. Due to the expense of bottled water (a 4-litre bottle of water in Neskantaga costs 16 dollars), Amy Moonias often had to choose between feeding and bathing her baby. Likewise, Dorothy Sakanee sometimes had to choose between buying bottled water and essentials like food or diapers. When she had to boil water, it came at the expense of spending time with her children. Former Chief Peter Moonias' affidavit states that he declared a State of Emergency in the early 2000s because a cancer-causing chemical was found in the water. Dorothy Sakanee's affidavit explains that her youngest daughter died in 1988 from brain cancer. She states that she suspects that the cancer was caused from the water in Neskantaga.

(c) Tataskweyak

[22] Tataskweyak is located in northern Manitoba and has 4000 members, 2300 of whom live on the reserve. Chief Spence is Split Lake Cree and is the Chief of Tataskweyak, where she has lived most of her life. She was elected on November 6, 2016 and is the first female Chief. She is a mother of three and a grandmother of one. In her affidavit, Chief Spence states that Tataskweyak has been under a boil water advisory for three years. She explains that the community sources its tap water from Split Lake, which has been contaminated by upstream development and recurring flooding. The affidavit of Tataskweyak member, Robert Spence, further explains that sewage is periodically released into Split Lake. Split Lake is contaminated with E.coli and large-scale blue-green algae blooms known to cause serious illness in humans.

[23] Accordingly, in 2006 and 2019, Tataskweyak sent Canada feasibility studies for a new water intake system, which would draw from Assean Lake. Instead, Canada upgraded the filtration and UV system in the existing water plant, which left the water tasting and smelling like chemicals. Chief Spence explained that occasionally, when the water line breaks, the tap water runs brown. The affidavit of Roderick Richard Spence, another member of Tataskweyak, similarly describes the tap water as smelling like chlorine and looking like "lemonade." Even after Canada's upgrades, the water remains unsafe to drink without boiling. In May 2020, Chief Spence obtained Canada's commitment to pay for bottled water delivery and enhanced water testing. Prior to this, however, community members who could not afford bottled water had to drink tap water or haul buckets of water from Assean Lake. In comparison, residents of the City of Thompson, which is upriver from Tataskweyak, enjoy virtually unlimited potable water.

explains that illnesses related to contaminated drinking water have been exacerbated by inadequate access to healthcare, overcrowded housing, and the COVID-19 pandemic.

C. Nature of the Claims & Defences

[25] In the Statements of Claim filed in both Actions, the Representative Plaintiffs submitted that Canada failed to provide Class Members with potable drinking water. Accordingly, they sought orders and declarations that Canada has: breached its duty of care and acted negligently; contravened the honour of the Crown; breached its fiduciary duties; violated section 36 of the Constitution Act, 1982; and committed violations of sections 2(1), 7, and 15 of the Charter, which are not saved by section 1. They submitted that as a result, Class Members are denied adequate access to clean drinking water; unable to adequately wash and care for themselves and their families; and prevented from performing traditional ceremonies and spiritual practices.

[26] The Representative Plaintiffs submitted that Canada has always taken responsibility for water systems on reserves but has never provided adequate funding. Furthermore, Canada knew that its funding was inadequate. The Representative Plaintiffs maintain that for most First Nations, federal funding is the only means of constructing and maintaining water infrastructure on reserve but Canada has tied funding to compliance with a complex system of specifications. Accordingly, Canada controls what infrastructure is built, where, how, when, and by whom.

[27] The Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Action requested damages in the amount of 2.1 billion dollars, plus costs. Of particular note, they also sought an interim or interlocutory injunction and a permanent injunction requiring Canada to construct or approve and fund construction of appropriate water systems to ensure Class Members have adequate access to potable water.

[28] The Defendant did not file Statements of Defence because the Settlement was reached relatively early in the proceeding. Initially, Canada opposed the relief sought by the Class stating that it had no liability to the Class. The affidavit of John P. Brown, a lawyer for Class Counsel, explains that Canada's public position "was that it funded water systems on reserves rather than manage[ing] them, and that it could not be liable for funding decisions that reflected a core policy." On December 7, 2021, during the Motion for Settlement Approval, Class Counsel explained that their team anticipated that Canada's defence would be similar to that in Okanagan Indian Band v Attorney General of Canada, Vancouver T-1328-19 (FC) [Okanagan]. Okanagan is an ongoing Federal Court case dealing with similar claims.

D. Procedural History of the Action

[29] The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified the Manitoba Action on July 14, 2020. On September 16, 2020, with the consent of the Defendant, the Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Action brought a motion for certification. The Federal Court certified the Federal Action on October 8, 2020 pursuant to Rules 334.16 and 334.17.

[30] The Courts certified the following common issues:

> (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class Members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

> (b) If the answer to the First Stage common issue is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?
> (c) If the answer to common issue (a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter saved by s. 1 of the Charter?
>
> (d) If the answer to common issue (a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class Members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?
>
> (e) If the answer to common issue (a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue (b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

[31] The Courts appointed McCarthy Tétrault and OKT as Class Counsel. CA2 Inc. was appointed as administrator for the purpose of giving notice of certification. CA2 Inc. gave notice in accordance with the certification orders. Individuals were included in the Class unless they opted out. There were no opt-outs within the opt-out period, which ended on March 29, 2021. First Nations were included in the Class if they opted in.

[32] On December 30, 2020, the Representative Plaintiffs brought a motion for summary judgment on behalf of the Class. Summary judgment was set to be heard before both Courts, sitting together, on October 4 to 7, 2021. In advance of the summary judgment motion, more than 120 First Nations opted in to the Actions. The Representative Plaintiffs summonsed witnesses and were prepared to proceed with cross-examinations. However, on June 20, 2021, the Parties reached an Agreement in Principle. The Agreement in Principle was executed on July 29, 2021 and the Settlement was finalized on September 15, 2021.

[33] On October 5, 2021, Class Counsel brought a motion to approve the Short and Long Form Notices of the Settlement Approval Hearing, as well as a plan for the distribution of these notices. By way of Order dated October 8, 2021, the notices and the plan for distribution were approved. CA2 Inc. was appointed as administrator to give notice and it did so in accordance with the Courts' orders. CA2 Inc. gave Notice of the Settlement Approval Hearing on October 16, 2021. That Notice of Settlement contemplated a 45-day late opt-out period for First Nations that first experienced long-term drinking water advisories after the Actions were certified. There were no late opt-outs.

[34] On November 17 and 18, 2021, respectively, the Courts provisionally appointed Deloitte LLP as the Administrator for the Settlement Agreement [Administrator].

E. Settlement Agreement: Key Provisions

(1) Basics

[35] Importantly, the Settlement Agreement contemplates and ensures both retrospective and prospective compensation. The Settlement Agreement provides First Nations and individuals resident on those First Nations with compensation for lack of regular access to safe drinking water. The Settlement also commits Canada to work with First Nations to provide access to clean water and requires Canada to construct and fund appropriate water systems for First Nation communities. The key terms and provisions are set out below.

(a) Class & Class Period

[36] The Class Period runs from November 20, 1995 to present. The Class includes (a) Individual Class Members and (b) First Nation Class Members [collectively, Class Members]. Mr. Gorham's affidavit states there are approximately 142,300 Individual Class Members, of which more than 60,000 are minors, and 258 eligible First Nation Class Members.

[37] Individual Class Members include individuals, other than Excluded Persons, who are members of a band [First Nation] as defined by the Indian Act, RSC 1985, c, I-5 [Indian Act], whose lands are subject to the Indian Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, SC 1999, c 24, and whose lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present [Impacted First Nation]. Those individuals must not have died before November 20, 2017 and must have ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year.

[38] First Nation Class Members include Tataskweyak, Curve Lake, Neskantaga, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity.

[39] "Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy. These persons are excluded from the Settlement because they have ongoing actions related to drinking water on reserves. When the Actions were initiated, these persons requested that they be excluded so that their ongoing litigation would not be affected.

(b) Retrospective Compensation

[40] Under the Settlement Agreement, Canada has agreed to pay individual Class Members a total of 1.438 billion dollars into a trust fund to be distributed to the Class Members, including by paying individual damages in accordance with Article 8, section 8.01(2)(a). Individual Class Members will be paid:

a. 2000 dollars per year for people in remote First Nations under long-term drinking advisories;
b. 2000 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under do not use advisories;
c. 1650 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under do not consume advisories; and
d. 1300 dollars per year for people in non-remote First Nations under boil water advisories.

[41] Damages for Individual Class Members will be subject to how many individuals make a claim and how many First Nations join the class action. Prorated amounts will be paid for any partial years after the first full year. Furthermore, damages for Individual Class Members are subject to a synthetic federal limitation period. This means that individuals born after 1995 can claim for all the years and portions of the years between November 20, 1995 and June 20, 2021 while they were ordinarily resident on reserve during a drinking water advisory that lasted a year or more. Individuals born before November 20, 1995 can claim for all years and portions of years between November 20, 2013 and June 20, 2021 where they were ordinarily resident on reserve during a drinking water advisory that lasted a year or more.

[42] Individuals who have suffered specified injuries because of drinking water advisories can claim additional compensation from a specified injuries compensation fund totalling 50 million dollars (Article 5). To claim damages for a specified injury a person must have been ordinarily resident on a reserve under a drinking water advisory for at least a year while the advisory was in place. Furthermore, the injury must have occurred during that time. Individuals suffering specified injuries will only be able to claim for injuries that happened or continued during drinking water advisories after November 2013. Individuals born after November 20, 1995 will be able to claim for injuries going back to that date. The person making the claim must show that they suffered the injury and that the injury was caused by using the water in accordance with the drinking water advisory or by restricted access to safe water caused by the advisory.

[43] Finally, 400 million dollars will be used to establish a First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund. From that fund, First Nation Class Members will receive a base payment of 500,000 dollars and an amount equal to 50% of the damages, not including specified injuries, paid to individual Class Members living on that First Nation’s reserve. The retrospective compensation received by First Nation Class Members reflects the harms to the community, which are different from the harms to its individual members. First Nations are free to use that money for any purpose.

(c) Prospective Relief

[44] In addition to compensating First Nations and their members, Canada has also agreed to provide funding to fix the problem moving forward. The stated intention of the parties is that the future never again resembles the past. Concretely, Canada has committed to taking all reasonable steps to remove long-term drinking water advisories affecting Class Members, including doing everything set out in their Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory Action Plan [Action Plan], which will be updated on an ongoing basis. Formerly a political promise, Class Counsel submits that the Action Plan becomes a legally enforceable obligation under the Settlement.

[45] Additionally, the Settlement requires Canada to take "all reasonable efforts" to ensure that Class Members have regular access to safe drinking water in their homes [the Commitment]. This water must meet either federal or provincial water quality standards, whichever is stricter. The amount of water must be enough that it allows people to use water for all the usual things people in Canada use water for, like drinking, bathing and showering, making food, washing dishes, and cleaning their home and clothes. In support of the Commitment, Canada is required to spend at least 6 billion dollars through March 31, 2030 at a rate of at least 400 million per year on water and wastewater on First Nation reserves. Class Counsel described this 6 billion as the "floor" rather than the "ceiling." Under the Settlement, Canada must use this money to fund the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation and maintenance of water infrastructure on First Nation reserves.

[46] Further, Canada has committed to take reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, SC 2013, c 21 and replace it with legislation that is developed through consultation with First Nations. The Settlement also requires Canada to spend 20 million dollars in funding through 2025 for a First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water. That Committee will work with ISC to support forward-looking policy initiatives and provide strategic advice. Additionally, Canada will provide 9 million dollars in funding through 2025 for Class Members' water governance initiatives and 50 million for the cost of administering the Settlement Agreement.

(2) Alternative dispute resolution process for Commitment disputes

[47] The Settlement Agreement and Schedule K contemplate different stages of dispute resolution. Any disputes related to the Commitment (i.e., where Canada and a First Nation cannot agree on whether Canada is meeting its Commitment under the Settlement Agreement and about proposed plans for meeting its Commitment) proceed through a specific alternative dispute resolution process [ADR Process]. Class Counsel submitted that the ADR Process integrates Indigenous Legal Traditions. It should be noted that the ADR Process promotes the use of Indigenous languages and where necessary, will occur on the First Nations' respective reserves while utilizing certain protocols such as gift giving, Elder participation, and traditional teachings. Engagement with the ADR Process entails the following steps:

1. If a First Nation determines that Canada is not meeting or has ceased meeting the Commitment, the First Nation must let Canada know (section 9.06 (1)).
2. Canada then has an obligation to consult with the First Nation to try to meet the Commitment as soon as possible. Canada must also pay the costs of any technical advice the First Nation needs to determine what Canada must do to meet the Commitment (sections 9.06(2), (3)).

3. Canada must make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the First Nation that identifies the steps Canada will take to fix the issues (section 9.06(4)).
4. If Canada does not comply with the agreement or if the parties do not reach an agreement within three months, the First Nation can start the ADR Process. The ADR Process proceeds through negotiations, mediation, and, if no agreement can be reached, arbitration (section 9.07).

[48] In short, on a matter of such great and fundamental importance — the provision of safe drinking water — Canada will not be the final arbiter respecting its own efforts in relation to the Commitment outlined in the Settlement Agreement. Further, all of the phases outlined above must be completed within strict timelines.

[49] Under the Settlement, Canada will pay the reasonable costs of convening the ADR Process, together with the reasonable fees and disbursements of any mediator or arbitrator. Canada will also pay half of the reasonable costs and disbursements of a First Nation's participation in the ADR Process.

(3) Supervisory Role of the Courts

[50] Under Article 1, section 1.16 of the Settlement, the Courts maintain jurisdiction to supervise the implementation of the Agreement in accordance with its terms, including the adoption of protocols and statements of procedure and may give any directions or make any orders that are necessary for those purposes.

(4) Claims Process

(a) First Nation Class Member Damages

[51] To participate in the Settlement, First Nation Class Members must give notice of acceptance to the Administrator. The Parties have provided the Administrator with a list [List] identifying, to the best of the Parties' knowledge, the First Nations eligible to become First Nations Class Members. Inclusion on the List is conclusive proof that the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. If the First Nation is not on the List, the Administrator shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. The Administrator may request additional information or evidence before making the determination as to whether a First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member.

(b) Individual Class Member Damages

[52] Individual Class Members wishing to make a claim for retrospective compensation (including a claim for a specified injury) must submit a claims form. The claims form is simple and requires the following: identifying and contact information; what First Nations the claimant is a part of; dates of residence on reserves experiencing long-term drinking water advisories; representative information; declaration and consent; and details about a specified claim, if applicable.

[53] Section 17 of Schedule F of the Settlement outlines the Claim Process. Schedule F states that for those making a specified injuries claim, a claimant may submit some or all of the following to the Administrator in support of their claim:

a. Medical records of the injury and its cause;

b. Other records, including written records, photographs, and videos, of the injury and its cause;

c. A written statement; and

d. Oral testimony.

[54] Section 18 of Schedule F states, “the process of claiming compensation for Specified Injuries is intended to be non-traumatizing and section 17 of this Schedule F does not prevent a Claimant from establishing their eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation on the basis of their Claims Form alone.” The burden of proof for establishing a specified injury is on the balance of probabilities.

[55] The claims process will commence within 60 days of settlement approval. The Administrator will promptly review each claims form, band council confirmation, and other relevant information to determine if the claimant is eligible and calculate the claimant’s entitlement. When the Administrator pays compensation to the claimant, the Administrator must also explain how the amount was calculated and that the claimant may appeal the Administrator’s decision to the Third-Party Assessor.

(c) Third Party Assessor

[56] When an individual or First Nation claimant wants to appeal a decision of the Administrator, the claimant must provide a written statement to the Administrator within sixty days of receiving the Administrator’s decision. That written statement must explain how the Administrator erred. The Administrator will forward the materials to the Third Party Assessor.

When considering an appeal, the Third-Party Assessor may consult the claimant, the Administrator, and the Settlement Implementation Committee. The Third-Party Assessor may also request further evidence to support the claim. The Third Party Assessor's decision is final and not subject to appeal or review.

(5) Counsel Fees

[57] Class Counsel's fees are severable from the rest of the Settlement and subject to a different Order and Reasons issued separately but concurrently by both Courts. In other words, the Courts can approve the Settlement separate from the approval of Class Counsel's fees. The Courts' refusal to approve Class Counsel's fees would have no effect on the implementation of the Settlement Agreement. Additionally, Class Counsel's fees were negotiated after the Settlement was reached and do not take money away from Class Members.

(6) Appeal Period

[58] Following the approval of the Settlement, a Class Member may appeal the Orders of the Courts within thirty days. Under Rule 334.31(2) of the Rules there is an additional thirty days for a Class Member to apply for leave to appeal to exercise the right of a Representative Plaintiff's right of appeal if no Representative Plaintiff commences an appeal within the first thirty days. This means that the earliest Implementation Date, as defined in the Settlement, is sixty days from the Courts' Orders. Thereafter, the Proposed Settlement Agreement will become binding on all Individual Class Members. The Proposed Settlement Agreement will become binding on First Nations as they formally accept its terms.

(7) Release

[59] Importantly, in exchange for everything discussed above and as set forth in the Settlement, Class Members agree to release Canada in respect of any liability for failing to provide, or fund the provision of safe drinking water on their reserves through the end of the Class Period.

III. Issue

[60] The sole issue on this motion is whether the Courts should approve the Settlement Agreement. Mindful of the governing law and legal test, that issue reduces to the following question: is the Settlement Agreement fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class?

[61] It should be noted that a separate set of reasons, also concurrently released by each Court, assesses the question of whether the Court should approve Class Counsel fees.

IV. Analysis

A. Legal Framework

[62] Rule 334.29 of the Rules and section 35(1) of The Class Proceedings Act state that class proceedings may only be settled with the approval of a judge. The relevant test for approving a settlement is whether the Settlement is "fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class as a whole" (Merlo v Canada, 2017 FC 533 at para 16; Toth v Canada, 2019 FC 125 at para 37; McLean v Canada, 2019 FC 1075 at para 65 [McLean]; Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc First Nation v Canada, 2021 FC 988 at para 36 [Tk'emlúps]; Gray v Great-West Lifeco Inc, 2011 MBQB 13 at para 58). Recently, in Tk'emlúps, Justice McDonald summarized the appropriate approach that should inform a court's application of the governing legal test:

> [37] The Court considers whether the settlement is reasonable, not whether it is perfect (Châteauneuf v Canada, 2006 FC 286 at para 7; Merlo, at para 18). Likewise, the Court only has the power to approve or to reject the settlement; it cannot modify or alter the settlement (Merlo, at para 17; Manuge v Canada, 2013 FC 341 at para 5).
> [39] …as noted in McLean (para 68), the proposed settlement must be considered as a whole and it is not open to the Court to rewrite the substantive terms of the settlement or assess the interests of individual class members in isolation from the whole class.

[63] To reject a settlement, the Courts must conclude that the settlement does not fall within a zone or range of reasonable outcomes (Dabbs v Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada (1998), 40 OR (3d) 429 (Gen Div) at 440-44; Haney Iron Works v Manufacturers Life Insurance Co (1998), 169 DLR (4th) 565 (SC) at para 44). A zone of reasonable outcomes reflects the fact that "settlements rarely give all parties exactly what they want" and are a result of compromise (Nunes v Air Transat AT Inc, 2005 CanLII 21681 (ON SC) at para 7 [Nunes]; McLean at para 9).

[64] The Court should consider the following non-exhaustive factors when assessing if a settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the class (Condon v Canada, 2018 FC 522 at para 19; McLean at para 66; Tk'emlúps at para 38]:

> a. The likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success;
>
> b. The amount and nature of discovery, evidence or investigation;
>
> c. The terms and conditions of the Settlement;
>
> d. The number of objectors and nature of objections;
>
> e. The presence of arm's length bargaining and the absence of collusion;
>
> f. The information conveying to the Court the dynamics of, and the positions taken, by the parties during the negotiations;

g. Communications with Class Members during litigation; and

h. The recommendation and experience of counsel.

[65] These factors are to be given varying weight depending on the circumstances (McLean at para 67). The respective factors are addressed below.

B. Factors

(1) Likelihood of recovery or likelihood of success

[66] The risks associated with litigating the Actions created a high degree of uncertainty, particularly at the beginning of the proceeding. Those risks included but were not limited to the novelty of the claims; delays due to appeals; possible defences raised by Canada; limitation periods; evidentiary issues associated with proving semi-historical wrongs; and the 2021 federal election. As a result, it is fair to say that the likelihood of success was uncertain. Additionally and always, there are significant and ongoing human costs associated with litigation. Separate from the inevitable frustrations and stresses attached to any Court process, the Courts cannot ignore that, as noted by Class Counsel, “every day without water compounds the harms Class Members experience.”

[67] If Class Counsel successfully established the first common issue, there would be significant evidentiary hurdles to establish that Canada breached their duties. Doing so would require proceeding on a First Nation by First Nation basis, incurring further delay and expense. Furthermore, Class Members would have to testify, which may be re-traumatizing.

[68] Novel claims pose a significant challenge for litigants (Tk'emlúps at para 41). At the time of filing, there was uncertainty in the law regarding the ability of collective entities to assert Charter claims. Furthermore, there remains uncertainty about the Courts' ability to compel the type of prospective relief contemplated in the Settlement. For example, the Representative Plaintiffs asked the Courts to compel government spending on a go-forward basis to ensure access to safe drinking water.

[69] As time went on, the Representative Plaintiffs' case became stronger and there were some assurances of success. For example, the first class-wide award of aggregate Charter damages was confirmed by the Court of Appeal for Ontario after the Actions were commenced (Reddock v Canada (Attorney General), 2019 ONSC 3196; aff'd in Brazeau v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 ONCA 184). However, the delays and scope of available remedies still loomed large. In that same Ontario Court of Appeal case, the Court reversed an order directing Canada to spend money on inmate mental health to correct ongoing Charter violations in its prisons. While this ruling may have posed significant challenges for the plaintiffs, it is well to note Justice Phelan's words in McLean. In the McLean settlement, there was prospective relief in the form of a 'Legacy Fund' to promote healing for Indian Day School survivors. Justice Phelan wrote, "[t]here is uncertainty that a court could order such a creation but, no doubt for another day, if Aboriginal issues and litigation are sui generis, remedies available might likewise be sui generis" (McLean at para 103*)*.

[70] Ultimately, in the present case, the Class did not shoulder the risk alone. The outcome was also uncertain for Canada. Canada was required to contemplate an outcome in which the Courts may have settled the law in favour of the Plaintiffs (McLean at paras 94-95). Put simply, uncertainty in the law meant that both parties faced a real and present risk of failure.

[71] In the end, we are of the view that like McLean, this too is a "case which cries out for settlement" (McLean at para 79). The Settlement reduces risk and delay. It simplifies the compensation process, enhances access to justice, and most importantly, provides funding to fix the problem. It creates a degree of certainty that First Nations will be able to lift water advisories in the near future. That is an assurance that litigation could not promise.

(2) The amount and nature of discovery, evidence, or investigation

[72] Over the entire course of the Actions, Class Counsel consulted with fourteen experts including First Nation Elders and knowledge keepers, hydrologists, infectious disease experts, aquatic toxicologists, history professors, and more. The parties also jointly retained and instructed an actuary to determine the size and distribution of the Class. In addition to consulting with experts, the affidavit of John P. Brown explains that Class Counsel reviewed thousands of pages of publically available documentation from Canada and extensively researched relevant legal and factual issues, including causes of action and theories of damages.

[73] As stated above, prior to reaching the Settlement, the parties completed the record for a summary judgment motion. Class Counsel did not file their record but it apparently consisted of 2800 pages, 8 experts, and 24 witnesses. The parties exchanged the evidentiary records for summary judgment and were ready to begin cross-examinations. It was at this point, after both sides put in a high degree of investigation and the strength of the case became apparent, that negotiations began to intensify. The parties reached the Settlement less than a month before the summary judgment motion was scheduled. The Courts agree with Class Counsel that by that time, a great deal of work had been undertaken to prepare this matter for judgment on the merits.

[74] The Courts are satisfied that Class Counsel put in great effort to gather relevant facts, assess liability and damages, and had a clear understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of the Actions.

(3) Terms and conditions of the Settlement

[75] These reasons have already provided an overview of the Settlement's important terms and provisions at paragraphs 35-59, above. In considering the governing test, it is the view of both Courts that some of the more significant features of the Settlement that "underpin its fairness" include:

- The relief contemplated is not just compensatory in nature – it looks forward to actually solving the root causes of drinking water advisories on reserves and is legally enforceable;
- The 6 billion dollars in prospective relief must adhere to a nine-year timeline, thus ensuring expedient resolution of those root causes;
- Compensation for Individual Class Members is relative to the duration of the advisory, type of advisory, and the remoteness of a First Nation. Factoring in remoteness acknowledges the increased cost of living in remote areas, including the price of bottled water, and that remote communities like Neskantaga have had to evacuate;
- With respect to Class Members claiming specified injuries:

° The paper based claims process is simple;

° The burden of proof is low;

° Claims are assessed through a harms grid;

° There is a presumption of truthfulness and good faith;

° All reasonable inferences must be drawn in favour of claimants; and

° There is a low likelihood of re-traumatization.

(See McLean at para 107; Tk'emlúps at para 49; Riddle v Canada, 2018 FC 641 at para 36).

- Specified injuries include mental health injuries;
- If the specified claims exceed 50 million dollars, the Settlement is structured in such a way that any trust surplus will go toward supplementing specified injuries;
- First Nation Class Members receiving an amount equal to 50% of the total damages paid to individual Class Members living on that reserve can use that money for any purpose;
- The ADR Process draws on the Indigenous legal traditions specific to and defined by the relevant First Nation;
- Canada is responsible for paying 100% of the reasonable costs of convening the ADR process and 50% of the reasonable costs of a First Nation's participation in that process;
- The Administrator is "experienced and renowned" (McLean at para 107);
- Legal fees are not payable from the settlement funds, meaning that Class Counsel is not taking money away from Class Members (Tk'emlúps* at para 51);

- Legal fees were negotiated after the Settlement was reached, ensuring that "the issue of legal fees did not inform or influence" the terms of the Settlement (Tk'emlúps* at para 51)
- The release is proportionate to the claims being resolved in this action. Class members retain their rights for several liability of third parties and claims arising after June 20, 2021.

[76] On balance, the benefits of the Settlement outweigh the concessions that the Class had to make. In their affidavits, the Representative Plaintiffs voiced disappointment that the base rate of compensation for Individual Class Members (ranging between 1300-2000 dollars for every year living under a water advisory) was too low. Additionally, the application of a limitations period significantly curtails the retrospective compensation that community members – particularly elders – will receive. In their Factum, Class Counsel noted that the application of the limitations period was particularly difficult in light of the Truth and Reconciliation Call to Action #26. However, those same affidavits recognized that the primary objective of the litigation was to ensure future generations' access to safe drinking water. They also state that no amount of money can compensate for the harms experienced while living under drinking water advisories. The Courts agree with the Representative Plaintiffs that these concessions are tough compromises. However, overall, the Settlement offers significant benefits for the Class and certainly falls within the zone of reasonableness.

(4) Future expense and likely duration of litigation

[77] Due to the novel claims advanced in the Actions, it is reasonable to expect that if this litigation did not settle, it would be long, involved, and expensive. The issues presented in this case are likely questions of significant and general public importance to the country as a whole. It is not outside the realm of possibility that certain issues could be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, protracting litigation. Furthermore, if litigation ensued, evidence of individual communities would have to be collected and presented.

[78] Class Counsel pointed to the Okanagan action to support their position that if the Crown aggressively defended the Actions, litigation would be drawn out. That case advances similar claims but did not reach settlement. It has been ongoing for over 6 years. Likewise, the trial in Tk'emlúps, another recent mega-settlement involving Indigenous class members, was set down for 74 days (Tk'emlúps at para 52).

[79] The expected future expenses and likely duration of the litigation weigh in favour of approving the Settlement.

(5) Recommendations of neutral third parties

[80] For the purposes of settlement approval, the following experts submitted affidavits and reports:

a. Kerry Black, Assistant Professor and Canada Research Chair in the Department of Civil Engineering and the Centre of Environmental Research and Education at the University of Calgary;
b. Ian Halket, President of Halket Environmental Consultants Inc.;
c. Peter Gorham, President and Actuary of JDM Actuarial Expert Services Inc. and Fellow of Canadian Institute of Actuaries and the Society of Actuaries;

d. Jillian Campbell, toxicologist and senior project manager with over 15 years of experience in human health and ecological risk assessment, toxicology, and contaminated site investigation;
e. Gary Chaimowitz, Head of Service at the Forensic Psychiatry Program at St. Joseph's Healthcare Hamilton, a Professor of Psychiatry at McMaster University, and the President of the Canadian Academy of Psychiatry and the Law;
f. James Reynolds, historian and author on the relationship between the Crown and Indigenous Peoples in Canada;
g. Adele Perry, Distinguished Professor of History and the Director of the Centre for Human Rights Research at the University of Manitoba; and
h. Brittany Luby, Assistant Professor of History in the College of Arts at the University of Guelph.

[81] Some of these reports did not offer opinions about the Settlement Agreement itself. Rather, they provided valuable information describing the history, causes, and current state of drinking water advisories on First Nation reserves.

[82] Jillian Campbell's affidavit, however, confirmed that Article 8, section 8.02 and Schedule H of the Settlement Agreement adequately incorporates the types of injuries that result from drinking contaminated or untreated water, the symptoms of those injuries, and the likely effect on Class Members if they suffered those injuries. Gary Chaimowitz similarly confirmed in his affidavit that the 'Mental Health' row in Schedule H and Appendix H-1 to the Settlement accurately identifies the types of mental health injuries Class Members may have suffered and the primary symptoms of those injuries.

[83] Further, Kerry Black submitted an affidavit dated November 21, 2021 expressing her support for settlement approval. For over a decade, Dr. Black has worked with Indigenous groups to understand their water infrastructure needs. In her opinion, the Settlement adequately addresses the objectives of First Nations.

[84] After canvassing some of the key provisions of the Settlement, Dr. Black stated that in her opinion, the Settlement will "address the water crisis in Canada in an historic, comprehensive and meaningful way." Further, it will "have an immeasurable and in many cases life-changing impact on the lives of First Nations members and their communities across Canada." In particular, Dr. Black confirmed that the minimum spend of 6 billion dollars over the next nine years in prospective relief is a reasonable amount to remedy water systems on First Nations. Furthermore, she noted the significance of including private water systems in the Commitment because Canada has historically excluded the cost of that type of infrastructure when providing funding to First Nations. Finally, she notes that it is significant that Canada has committed to funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves for First Nations because Canada has chronically underfunded these aspects of water infrastructure for decades.

[85] In our opinion, these objective third-party opinions reinforce the fairness of the Settlement.

(6) Number of objectors and nature of objections

[86] Eric Khan, the Director of CA2 Inc., swore an affidavit on December 6, 2021 that CA2 Inc. had not received any opt-out coupons or notices of objections. At the Settlement Approval Hearing, throughout the day, potential Class Members had the opportunity voice their objections but no one came forward.

[87] While there were no formal objections raised, Class Counsel submitted correspondence and newspaper articles to alert the Courts to potential criticisms of the Settlement. In that regard, Class Counsel submitted a letter dated November 23, 2021 from counsel of a First Nation that intended to object to the Settlement. That letter expressed two concerns: (a) the Settlement relies on Canada's list of drinking water advisories and (b) the Settlement excludes First Nations with short-term drinking water advisories. After speaking with Class Counsel about these concerns, the First Nation withdrew their objection. Similarly, another lawyer voiced his concerns to the media. Those concerns related to (a) uncertainty about who is included in the Class; (b) the exclusion of First Nations with short-term drinking water advisories; and (c) ambiguity about what advisories are counted and what authorities get to declare those advisories.

[89] First, it is untrue that the Settlement only relies on Canada's records to determine what First Nations have been subject to a drinking water advisory. Sections 10-12 of Schedule F of the Settlement state that if a Class Member makes a claim and their First Nation is not included on the existing List of Eligible First Nations, the Settlement Implementation Committee shall determine if that First Nation should be added to the List and may request further information or evidence before making their decision. Class Counsel explained that the intent of this provision to ensure inclusivity and that the List is, in fact, subject to change.

[90] Second, Class Counsel acknowledged that there is a prevalence of short-term drinking water advisories on First Nations, some of which have occurred on and off for long periods of time. With that said, however, it need also be acknowledged that in class proceedings, class members must suffer a common harm. When determining that commonality, Class Counsel's opinion was that long-term advisories were more clearly linked to government underfunding that resulted in an infrastructure gap. This class proceeding does not affect the ability of First Nations experiencing short-term drinking water advisories to commence their own actions.

[91] Finally, with respect to the criticisms voiced in the media, Article 1, Section 1.01 of the Settlement Agreement clearly defines who is included in the Class (see also paragraph 37, above) and who constitutes "Excluded Persons." These definitions were also included in the Short and Long Form Notices. Additionally, the same section defines an "Advisory Body" as "provincial, territorial, regional, municipal, or First Nation government or governmental authority, chief, band council, health authority, or any executive, judicial, regulatory or administrative body or similar body or its delegate, in each case that issues Drinking Water Advisories." Any of these bodies may issue any one of the three types of drinking water advisories that may bring a First Nation or Individual Class Member into the Settlement Agreement. Again, this definition is intended to foster inclusion and ensure that First Nations are not dependent on government definitions or data in order to benefit from the Settlement.

[92] It should also be noted that the law firm representing the "Excluded Persons" in the Settlement inquired with Class Counsel about how the Settlement will affect their clients and whether the 6 billion dollars in prospective relief will apply to all First Nations or only those who opt in to the Settlement. Class Counsel replied indicating that the Settlement does not apply to the "Excluded Persons" and that as a result, they are free to continue pursuing their own actions related to drinking water.

[93] In airing all of the concerns noted above, Class Counsel fulfilled its obligation to provide the Courts with full and frank disclosure relevant to the settlement approval. In our view, in the absence of any formal objections, the support of the Representative Plaintiffs and other Class Members need be seen as unchallenged. Numerous affidavits included in the Motion Record expressed support for the Settlement, including community members of Curve Lake, Neskantaga, and Tataskweyak. The Representative Plaintiffs all expressed their support for the Settlement and unanimously voiced their opinion that the Settlement Agreement achieves their litigation objectives.

(7) Presence of arm's length bargaining, absence of collusion, and the positions taken by the parties during negotiation

[94] It is appropriate to address these factors together because in this case, the positions taken by the parties during the negotiation demonstrate the presence of arm's length bargaining and absence of collusion.

[95] Class Counsel's strategy in this proceeding was to pursue a "two track approach" where they aggressively pursued litigation and negotiation simultaneously. In our opinion, this approach demonstrates that the proceeding was always adversarial in nature and that Class Counsel's primary goal was to advance the Class' interests. Clearly, such a historic Settlement would be impossible without cooperation on both sides. Although the parties cooperated wherever possible, both parties were prepared to proceed to litigation. The parties consented to an expedited litigation timeline and the Representative Plaintiffs aggressively advanced motions for summary judgment.

[96] It is also significant to note that negotiations lasted for just under a year. In our view, this timeline evidences what John P. Brown referred to as "hard bargaining sessions" where counsel advanced their respective clients' positions. Indeed, the affidavit of Chief Whetung stated that at times, negotiations broke down and she felt ready to "walk away" and push forward with litigation.

[97] We have no concerns that the Settlement Agreement was anything other than the result of good strategy, dedication, and compromise. We are satisfied that the parties always engaged in good faith negotiations and that there has been no collusion in reaching the Settlement. We note that there is a strong presumption of fairness when a proposed settlement was negotiated at arm's-length by Class Counsel (Nunes at para 7).

(8) Communication with Class Members

[98] In advance of the summary judgment motions, Class Counsel reached out to various First Nations to have them opt-in in support of the Actions. Clearly, these efforts were effective as more than 120 First Nations joined the Representative Plaintiffs in seeking judgment. Furthermore, Class Counsel created a dedicated webpage to provide Class Members with access to information and documents related to the Actions. The webpages included a case description, new developments, news releases and reports, case documents, FAQs, and contact details. They also promoted the Actions to the media as a way of communicating with Class Members.

[99] Similarly, throughout settlement negotiations, Class Counsel stayed in close contact with the Representative Plaintiffs and Class Members. The affidavit of Christopher Moonias confirms that Class Counsel worked closely with the Representative Plaintiffs, who, in turn, consulted with their respective band councils and/or community members regarding the Agreement in Principle and the Settlement Agreement. Likewise, Class Counsel engaged directly with Class Members by visiting communities, answering Class Members' questions, listening to their stories, and "socializing" the Agreement.

[100] The Courts approved the Settlement Notice Plan on October 8, 2021. CA2 Inc. published the Short Form Notice in fifteen daily newspapers and The First Nation Drum. Similarly, on or about October 16, 2021 CA2 Inc. distributed legal notices of settlement approval to Curve Lake, Neskantaga, Tataskweyak, the Assembly of First Nations, and 713 Chiefs and Band Offices that have been affected by drinking water advisories. Finally, the October 8, 2021 Order required CA2 Inc. to set up a toll-free support line to answer Class Members' questions and to provide the Short and Long Form Notice to any member that requested it. These materials were provided in both English and French.

[101] Statements of support and objection can indicate that Class Counsel sufficiently communicated with the Class (McLean at para 116). While no objections were made at the Settlement Approval Hearing, the Motion Record demonstrates that various First Nations and/or their legal counsel reached out to Class Counsel to ask questions about the Settlement. Additionally, it is clear that Representative Plaintiffs and Class Counsel spoke with other First Nations and Indigenous governance organizations. We are satisfied that in this circumstance the absence of objections indicates that potential Class Members understand and support the Agreement. It is also telling that 18 Class Members submitted affidavits indicating their support for the Agreement.

[102] Overall, we are satisfied that Class Counsel provided a "robust, clear and accessible" notice of the Settlement to potential Class Members (Tk'emlúps at para 72).

(9) Recommendations and experience of counsel

[103] Both Class Counsel and counsel for the Defendant recommend settling. In Class Counsel's view, continued negotiation would not have led to a better result for the Class, particularly with respect to retrospective compensation. Further, Class Counsel stated that compensation was within the range expected on judgment, without the uncertainty of outcome or delay. Class Counsel similarly felt that litigation would not have achieved a better result for the Class. As already discussed, it is uncertain whether courts would be able to order the same type of prospective relief reached in the Settlement Agreement.

[104] Overall, Class Counsel felt that the Settlement addressed the Representative Plaintiffs' litigation objectives (Tk'emlúps at para 73). Indeed, the affidavits of the Representative Plaintiffs confirmed as much, placing particular emphasis on the prospective relief guaranteed in the Settlement.

[105] Class Counsel states that its recommendation is based on its experience in class actions, Indigenous rights, and Aboriginal law. McCarthy Tétrault is recognized nationally as having one of Canada's leading and largest class actions team. McCarthy Tétrault also enlisted the assistance of lawyers at their firm who specialize in contract drafting, tax, trusts, and estate law matters. OKT is Canada's largest law firm specializing in Aboriginal law and Indigenous rights. It serves northern and Indigenous clients in every territory and most provinces in Canada. Class Counsel also collaborated with First Peoples Law and Erickson's LLP. Both firms have close connections with various First Nation communities.

[106] Notably, members of Class Counsel at both firms included Indigenous lawyers and students at law. In our view, these team members, in addition to their professional expertise, provide valuable lived experience that uniquely enables them to understand the needs and objectives of Class Members.

[107] For all the reasons already discussed, the record demonstrates that Class Counsel has been alert and alive to the needs of the Class and the risk reward-balance unique to this proceeding. The simplified claims process, which has a low burden of proof in an effort to avoid re-traumatization, demonstrates that Class Counsel has applied the lessons from past class actions involving Indigenous Class Members. Overall, the large, diverse, and competent team constructed by Class Counsel demonstrates a commitment to carry out the Settlement in a good way using the necessary infrastructure and personnel to do so (McLean at para 113).

V. Conclusion

[108] For decades, members of First Nations have endured harm while living under drinking water advisories. Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water has resulted in deep frustration and relationships being tainted by mistrust. We share Chief Whetung's hope that the Settlement will result in Indigenous communities being able "to turn their taps on just like non-Indigenous communities in Canada and drink and bathe in the water without fear for our health." It is also our hope that this Settlement symbolizes a step down the long trail towards healing the relationship between Canada and First Nations.

[109] The Courts agree that the Settlement is fair and reasonable and in the best interests of the Class as a whole. In the form of the attached Order, the Courts approve the Settlement Agreement and order that the Actions against the Defendant be discontinued.

[110] The Courts retain jurisdiction over this case and specifically, over the Order and Settlement. The Order specifies the retention of jurisdiction and it may be amended as circumstances dictate.

ORDER in T-1673-19

Without any admission of wrongdoing or liability by the Defendant, which denies any wrongdoing and disclaims any liability to the Class, this Court orders:

1. That the Parties' settlement agreement dated September 15, 2021, including the first addendum dated October 8, 2021 (together, the "Proposed Settlement Agreement"), is fair, reasonable, and in the best interests of the Class.

2. That the Proposed Settlement Agreement, attached hereto as Appendix "1" in English and Appendix "2" in French, is approved and its terms shall be given effect.

3. That the Defendant shall pay the funds set out in the Proposed Settlement Agreement, and that said funds be distributed in accordance with the Proposed Settlement Agreement.

4. That Class Members, as defined in the Proposed Settlement Agreement, be notified of the approval of the Proposed Settlement Agreement substantially as set out in Schedule M and N of the Proposed Settlement Agreement, and in accordance with the Notice Plan attached hereto as Appendix "3", with such modifications as the Parties may agree, and with the Defendant to pay the cost.

5. That, without affecting the finality of this Order or the dismissal of these Actions, the Court retains continuing jurisdiction as set out in the Proposed Settlement Agreement to interpret, supervise, construe, and enforce the Proposed Settlement Agreement, as applicable, for the mutual benefit of the Parties.

6. That the within Action be discontinued on a without costs basis.

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF CANADA

("Canada")

WHEREAS:

A. The Federal Action Plaintiffs commenced the action styled as Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. T-1673-19 in the Federal Court on October 11, 2019 (the "Federal Action");

B. The Manitoba Action Plaintiffs commenced the action styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. CI-19-01-24661 in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on November 20, 2019 (the "Manitoba Action", and together with the Federal Action, the "Actions");

C. The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified the Manitoba Action as a class proceeding on July 14, 2020, and the Federal Court certified the Federal Action as a class proceeding on October 8, 2020;

D. The "Class" in each of the Actions is as follows:

(a) all persons, other than Excluded Persons, who:

(i) are members of a First Nation;

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) during the Class Period ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation for at least one year while it was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; and

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other First Nation that gives notice of Acceptance in accordance with the terms of this Agreement;

E. Notice of the certification of the Actions was given in the form approved by the Courts and in the manner directed by the Courts. Individual Class Members were given the opportunity to Opt Out of the Class for a period of one hundred and twenty (120) days following the first publication of notice of certification (the "Opt-Out Period");

F. The Opt-Out Period expired March 29, 2021. None of the Individual Class Members Opted Out of the Actions;

G. The Class has suffered considerable hardships as a result of being deprived of safe drinking water and such hardships have seriously harmed both individuals and their communities;

H. Canada acknowledges the hardships faced by Class Members and wishes to support Class Members in securing regular access to safe drinking water;

I. Class Counsel and Canada concluded an agreement in principle dated June 20, 2021, which set out in principle the terms on which Canada was prepared to settle the Actions, and which Class Counsel would recommend to the Manitoba Action Plaintiffs and the Federal Action Plaintiffs (together, the "Representative Plaintiffs");

J. Chief Wayne Moonias has succeeded Christopher Moonias as Chief of Neskantaga First Nation and will seek leave of the Federal Court to replace him as a Representative Plaintiff;

K. The Representative Plaintiffs and Canada concluded an agreement in principle dated July 29, 2021 which set out the principal terms of their agreement to settle the Actions, and which forms the basis for this Agreement;

L. In drafting this Agreement, the Parties:

(a) intend there to be a fair, comprehensive and lasting settlement of claims related to Class Members' deprivation of safe drinking water and their hardships resulting therefrom;

(b) desire the implementation of concrete measures to prevent a recurrence of the harms suffered by Class Members;

(c) acknowledge the importance of providing First Nations with funding for projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities, and respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which such funds are directed;

(d) desire to promote healing, education, commemoration, and reconciliation; and

(e) intend to include Modern Treaty First Nations, as applicable, but recognize the uniqueness of each Modern Treaty First Nation, its lands, peoples, and relationship with Canada, and therefore agree that the specific details of the participation of any Modern Treaty First Nation will be developed in consultation with the Parties and the applicable Modern Treaty First Nation.

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual agreements, covenants, and undertakings set out herein, the Parties agree as follows:

1.02 Headings

The division of this Agreement into paragraphs and the use of headings are for convenience of reference only and do not affect the construction or interpretation of this Agreement.

1.03 Extended Meanings

In this Agreement, words importing the singular number include the plural and vice versa, words importing any gender or no gender include all genders and words importing persons include First Nations. The term "including" means "including without limiting the generality of the foregoing". Any reference to a government ministry, department or position shall include any successor government ministry, department or position.

1.04 Interpretation

The Parties acknowledge that they have reviewed and participated in settling the terms of this Agreement and they agree that there shall be no presumptive rule of construction to the effect that any ambiguity in this Agreement is to be resolved in favour of any particular Party.

1.05 Statutory References

In this Agreement, unless something in the subject matter or context is inconsistent therewith or unless otherwise herein provided, a reference to any statute is to that statute as enacted on the date of such reference and not as the statute may from time to time be amended, re-enacted, or replaced, and the same applies to any regulations made thereunder.

1.06 Day For Any Action

Where the time on or by which any action required to be taken hereunder expires or falls on a day that is not a Business Day, such action may be done on the next succeeding day that is a Business Day.

1.07 Currency

All references to currency herein are to lawful money of Canada.

1.10 No Effect on Treaties or Existing Agreements

Nothing in this Agreement shall cancel or supersede any treaty between Canada and any one or more Class Members, or any existing agreement between Canada and any one or more Class Members with respect to First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories, or similar matters, save and except for the Agreement in Principle, which this Agreement shall supersede.

1.11 No Derogation from Constitutional Rights

This Agreement is to be construed as upholding the rights of Indigenous peoples recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, and not as abrogating or derogating from them.

1.12 Benefit of the Agreement

This Agreement will inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the Parties, and for Canada and First Nation Class Members, upon their respective successors, and for Individual Class Members, upon their estates, heirs, Estate Executors, Estate Claimants, and Personal Representatives.

1.13 Applicable Law

This Agreement will be governed by the laws of Canada together with the laws of Manitoba, as applicable, or alternatively, at the election of a Class Member, the laws of Canada together with the laws of the province or territory where the Class Member is ordinarily resident, as applicable.

1.14 Counterparts

This Agreement may be executed electronically and in any number of counterparts, each of which will be deemed to be an original and all of which taken together will be deemed to constitute one and the same Agreement.

1.15 Official Languages

Class Counsel shall prepare a French translation of this Agreement for use at the Settlement Approval Hearing. Following the Settlement Approval Orders, such French version shall be of equal weight and force at law.

1.16 Ongoing Supervisory Role of the Courts

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Agreement, the Courts shall maintain jurisdiction to supervise the implementation of this Agreement in accordance with its terms, including the adoption of protocols and statements of procedure, and the Parties attorn to the jurisdiction of the Courts for that purpose. The Courts may give any directions or make any orders that are necessary for the purposes of this Section.

ARTICLE 2 – EFFECTIVE DATE OF AGREEMENT

2.01 Date when Binding and Effective

On the Implementation Date, this Agreement will become binding on all Individual Class Members. This Agreement will become binding on all First Nation Class Members on the later of (a) the date of their Acceptance and (b) the Implementation Date. If a First Nation Class Member does not give notice of Acceptance by the Acceptance Deadline, this Agreement will not bind the First Nation Class Member and the First Nation Class Member will not be entitled to any benefit hereunder unless the Courts order otherwise.

2.02 Effective Upon Approval

Subject to Section 2.03, none of the provisions of this Agreement will become effective unless and until the Courts approve this Agreement.

2.03 Legal Fees Severable

Class Counsel's fees for prosecuting the Actions have been negotiated separately from this Agreement and remain subject to approval by the Courts. The Courts' refusal to approve Class Counsel's fees will have no effect on the implementation of this Agreement. In the event that the Courts refuse to approve the fees of Class Counsel set out in Section 18.01, (a) the remainder of the provisions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect and in no way shall be affected, impaired or invalidated, and (b) Section 18.01 shall be modified to reflect such Class Counsel fees as are approved by the Courts, while otherwise effecting the original intent of the Parties as closely as possible.

ARTICLE 3 – ADMINISTRATION

3.01 Designation of Administrator

On the recommendation of the Parties, the Courts shall appoint an Administrator to administer the Claims Process with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are set out in Section 3.02 and such other powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are determined by the Joint Committee and approved by the Courts. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace the Administrator at any time.

3.02 Duties of the Administrator

The Administrator's duties and responsibilities include the following:

(a) developing, installing, and implementing systems, forms, information, guidelines and procedures for processing Claims and making decisions on Claims in accordance with this Agreement;

(b) developing, installing, and implementing systems and procedures for making payments of compensation in accordance with this Agreement;

(c) receiving funds from the Safe Drinking Water Trust and the Trustee to make payments to Class Members in accordance with this Agreement;

(d) providing personnel in such reasonable numbers as are required for the performance of its duties under this Agreement, and training and instructing those personnel;

(e) retaining community liaisons in Impacted First Nations and liaisons at tribal councils to facilitate the implementation of the Notice Plan and the Claims Process;

(f) keeping or causing to be kept accurate accounts of its activities and its administration and preparing such financial statements, reports, and records as are required by the Courts;

(g) reporting to the Settlement Implementation Committee on a monthly basis respecting:

(i) Claims received and determined;

(ii) Claims deemed ineligible and the reason(s) for that determination; and

(iii) appeals from the Administrator's decisions and the outcomes of those appeals;

(h) responding to inquiries respecting Claims and Claims Forms,

(i) reviewing Claims Forms and Band Council Confirmations, and determining, subject to Section 7.02(2) in the case of a Band Council Confirmation:

(i) a Claimant's membership in the Class;

(ii) the dates and places a Claimant was Ordinarily Resident;

(iii) a Claimant's entitlement to Individual Damages, if any; and

(iv) a Claimant's entitlement to Specified Injuries Compensation, if any;

(j) reviewing Acceptances and determining whether a First Nation submitting an Acceptance is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member and each First Nation Class Member's entitlement to First Nation Damages, if any;

(k) giving notice of decisions made in accordance with this Agreement;

(l) communicating with Claimants in either English or French, as the Claimant elects, and if a Claimant expresses the desire to communicate in a language other than English or French, making best efforts to accommodate such Claimant; and

(m) such other duties and responsibilities as the Courts or the Parties may from time to time direct.

3.03 Appointment of the Third-Party Assessor

On the recommendation of the Parties, the Courts shall appoint one or more Third-Party Assessors. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace a Third-Party Assessor at any time. The Third-Party Assessor shall perform the duties of the Third-Party Assessor set out in this Agreement.

3.04 Responsibility for Costs

Canada shall pay:

(a) the costs of giving notice in accordance with the Notice Plan and any additional notice ordered by the Courts;

(b) the costs and reasonable disbursements of the Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, the Trustee, the Auditors, and the Settlement Implementation Committee (except Joint Committee Members), up to a maximum of fifty million dollars in the aggregate ($50,000,000), and thereafter the Administrator shall pay such costs out of the Trust Fund on approval by the Courts;

(c) the costs of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water in accordance with Section 9.04;

(d) the costs of the Water Governance Fund in accordance with Section 9.05;

(e) the costs of technical advice relating to the Commitment in accordance with Section 9.06(3); and

(f) the costs of the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process in accordance with Section 9.08.

ARTICLE 4 – TRUST FUND

4.01 Establishment of the Trust Fund

(1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the Trust Fund (the "Trust Account").

(2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date, and in accordance with the terms of Article 16 , Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying one billion four-hundred and thirty-eight million dollars ($1,438,000,000) into the Trust Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "Trust Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

4.02 Distribution of the Trust Fund

The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, distribute the Trust Fund for the benefit of the Class Members in accordance with this Agreement, including by paying Individual Damages in accordance with Section 8.01(2)(a).

4.03 Trust Fund Surplus

(1) On the advice of an actuary or a similar advisor, the Joint Committee may determine at any time or from time to time that it is more likely than not that there are unallocated or surplus funds in the Trust Fund (a "Trust Fund Surplus").

(2) The Joint Committee shall propose a distribution of any Trust Fund Surplus for the direct or indirect benefit of the Class Members in accordance with this Section 4.03.

(3) A distribution of a Trust Fund Surplus shall include distributions to effect one or more of the following, in descending order of priority, and such other uses as the Joint Committee may determine in consultation with the FNAC:

(a) transferring up to four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) to the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, as needed;

(b) paying Specified Injuries Compensation if the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund is insufficient to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount;

(c) paying Individual Damages or First Nation Damages to Claimants who filed valid Claims during a specified period after the Claims Deadline, if any (a "Late Claims Period"), as the Joint Committee considers appropriate;

(d) paying increased Individual Damages or First Nation Damages, as the Joint Committee considers appropriate; and

(e) funding programming to promote education, cultural or spiritual practices, study, or healing in connection with Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories, as the Joint Committee considers appropriate.

(4) The Joint Committee shall propose any distribution of Trust Fund Surplus and bring motions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of any Trust Fund Surplus.

(5) An allocation of a Trust Fund Surplus shall require approval of both Courts, and it shall be effective on the later of:

(a) the day following the last day on which a Class Member may appeal or seek leave to appeal either of the approval orders in respect of such allocation; and

(b) the date on which the last of any appeals of either of the approval orders in respect of such allocation is finally determined.

(6) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the Trust Fund, including any Trust Fund Surplus, revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any Trust Fund Surplus.

ARTICLE 5 – SPECIFIED INJURIES COMPENSATION FUND

5.01 Establishment of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

(1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Account").

(2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date, and in accordance with the terms of Article 16 , Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying fifty million dollars ($50,000,000) into the Specified Injuries Compensation Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

5.02 Distribution of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

(1) The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, pay Specified Injuries Compensation from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in accordance with Section 8.02.

(2) If, following the Ultimate Claims Deadline and the payment of the Specified Injuries Compensation as set out in Section 8.02, any funds remain in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, the Trustee shall transfer such remaining funds into the Trust Fund.

(3) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any amount from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund.

ARTICLE 6 – FIRST NATIONS ECONOMIC AND CULTURAL RESTORATION FUND

6.01 Establishment of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

(1) As soon as practicable after its appointment and after the settlement of the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with Section 16.01, the Trustee shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank for purposes of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund (the "Restoration Fund Account").

(2) No later than sixty (60) days following the Implementation Date, and in accordance with the terms of Article 16 , Canada shall make a contribution to the Safe Drinking Water Trust by paying four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) into the Restoration Fund Account, with such payment being a distinct fund (the "First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund") within the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

(3) The purpose of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund is to provide First Nation Class Members with funds to use on projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities. The Parties respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which funds distributed from the Restoration Fund Account are directed.

6.02 Distribution of the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

(1) The Trustee shall authorize the Administrator to, and the Administrator shall, pay First Nation Damages from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund in accordance with Section 8.03(1).

(2) If, following the Ultimate Claims Deadline and the payment of the First Nations Damages set out in Section 8.03(1), any funds remain in the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, the Trustee shall transfer such remaining funds into the Trust Fund.

(3) For greater certainty, in no event shall any amount from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund revert to Canada, and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of any amount from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund.

ARTICLE 7 – CLAIMS PROCESS

7.01 Principles Governing Claims Administration

(1) The Claims Process is intended to be expeditious, cost-effective, user-friendly, culturally sensitive, trauma-informed, and non-traumatizing to participants. The Administrator shall identify and implement service times for the Claims Process no later than sixty (60) days after the Implementation Date.

(2) The Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, and the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members shall, in the absence of reasonable grounds to the contrary, assume that a Claimant is acting honestly and in good faith with respect to any Claim.

(3) In considering a Claims Form or a Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator, the Third-Party Assessor, and the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members shall draw all reasonable and favourable inferences that can be drawn in favour of the Claimant.

7.02 Eligibility Decisions and Specified Injuries Decisions

(1) The Administrator shall review each Claims Form, Band Council Confirmation, and/or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant to determine, subject to Section 7.02(2) in the case of a Band Council Confirmation, whether each Claimant is an Individual Class Member and the period of time that they were Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory (an "Eligibility Decision") and, if applicable, the validity of a Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation (a "Specified Injuries Decision"). For greater certainty, the Administrator may provide a Claimant with an Eligibility Decision or a Specified Injuries Decision before the Administrator has calculated the Claimant's entitlement, if any, to Individual Damages or Specified Injuries Compensation.

(2) A Band Council Confirmation is intended to be optional. Where provided, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a Band Council Confirmation shall constitute sufficient evidence of the Individual Class Members identified therein being Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory for the purpose of an Eligibility Decision and shall be sufficient to make Claims for Individual Damages on behalf of such Individual Class Members without such Individual Class Members being required to submit Claims Forms. Notwithstanding the foregoing, an Individual Class Member identified in a Band Council Confirmation, or an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant or Personal Representative on their behalf, shall be entitled to submit a Claims Form, and a Band Council Confirmation is not intended to override any Claims Form submitted by or on behalf of an Individual Class Member, whether or not such Individual Class Member is identified in a Band Council Confirmation. In the event of a conflict between a Band Council Confirmation and a Claims Form, the Claims Form shall prevail. Any Claimant who desires to make a Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation shall be required to submit a Claims Form in respect of their Specified Injuries.

(3) The Administrator shall give written notice to each Claimant setting out the results of its Eligibility Decision and, if applicable, Specified Injuries Decision. If the Administrator determines that the Claimant is an Individual Class Member, the Eligibility Decision will state the period of time that such Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, what kind of Drinking Water Advisory applied, and whether the Reserve was in a Remote First Nation.

(4) The Administrator shall provide written reasons to a Claimant in any case of:

(a) an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is not an Individual Class Member, or that the Claimant was not Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve for the entire period claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form; or

(b) a Specified Injuries Decision that a Claimant is not eligible for the Specified Injuries Compensation claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form.

(5) Only a Claimant confirmed by an Eligibility Decision (including, for greater certainty, by being identified as an Individual Class Member in a Band Council Confirmation) to be an Individual Class Member (a "Confirmed Individual Class Member") may be entitled to compensation pursuant to Section 8.01 and, if applicable, Section 8.02.

(6) A Claimant shall have sixty (60) days to commence an appeal to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with the Claims Process after receiving:

(a) an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is not an Individual Class Member or that the Claimant was not Ordinarily Resident on an applicable Reserve for the entire period claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form or a Band Council Confirmation; or

(b) a Specified Injuries Decision that a Claimant is not entitled to the Specified Injuries Compensation claimed in the Claimant's Claims Form.

(7) The Third-Party Assessor's decision on an appeal pursuant to Section 7.02(6) will be final and not subject to appeal or review.

(8) Class Counsel shall assist Claimants or their representatives, as reasonably requested, in making Claims for Specified Injuries Compensation or in appealing a Specified Injuries Decision at no cost to Canada or the Claimant other than, for certainty, Class Counsel's fees as separately negotiated or as approved by the Courts and payable in accordance with Section 18.02.

7.03 First Nation Damages Decisions

Within thirty (30) days following receipt by a First Nation Class Member of the Administrator's determination of its eligibility for a Base Payment or the Administrator's calculation of its First Nation Damages in accordance with the Claims Process, the First Nation Class Member may appeal such decision(s) in accordance with the Claims Process. The decision of the Third-Party Assessor on such an appeal will be final and not subject to appeal or review.

7.04 Referrals to Settlement Implementation Committee

(1) The Administrator shall refer a Claims Form to the Settlement Implementation Committee where the harms described in the Claims Form are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, and where the Settlement Implementation Committee has not already declined to extend Specified Injuries Compensation in substantially similar circumstances.

(2) The decision of the Settlement Implementation Committee on a Claims Form referred under this Section 7.04 will be final and not subject to appeal or review.

7.05 Finality of Decisions

Except as set out in this Article 7 and in the Claims Process, all decisions of the Administrator are final and binding upon a Claimant and not subject to appeal or review.

ARTICLE 8 – RETROSPECTIVE COMPENSATION

8.01 Individual Damages

(1) In determining where a Claimant was Ordinarily Resident for the purpose of this Agreement, the Administrator shall consider each year during the Class Period that a Reserve was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, beginning on the date that the advisory was imposed (each such year, an "Advisory Year"), and a Claimant shall have been "Ordinarily Resident" on an affected Reserve, for the purposes of this Agreement, if:

(a) the Claimant lived on the affected Reserve for a greater portion of an Advisory Year (or, after the first Advisory Year, the applicable portion of such subsequent Advisory Year that a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect if the Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory terminated before the end of the Advisory Year) than the Claimant lived elsewhere; and

(b) notwithstanding the foregoing, in the case of any Claimant who was eighteen (18) years of age or younger at the applicable time, such Claimant habitually lived on an affected Reserve but lived elsewhere for a portion of the Advisory Year to attend an educational facility.

(2) The Administrator shall calculate damages for each Confirmed Individual Class Member ("Individual Damages") in accordance with the following formula (the "Individual Damages Formula"):

(a) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had not yet reached the age of eighteen (18) years on November 20, 2013, for:

(i) every Advisory Year; and

(ii) after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4), during the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect;

(b) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had reached the age of eighteen (18) years before November 20, 2013, but was incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their Claim because of their physical, mental or psychological condition, for:

(i) every Advisory Year (and, after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4)) prior to November 20, 2019, for which the Confirmed Individual Class Member had reached the age of eighteen (18) years and had been capable of commencing a proceeding in respect of that Advisory Year (or portion thereof) for a cumulative period of less than six (6) years as of November 20, 2019; and

(ii) every Advisory Year (and, after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4)) subsequent to November 20, 2019, during the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect; or

(c) in the case of a Confirmed Individual Class Member who had reached the age of eighteen (18) years before November 20, 2013, other than a person described in Section 8.01(2)(b), for:

(i) every Advisory Year; and

(ii) after the first Advisory Year, every portion of an Advisory Year in accordance with Section 8.01(4), between November 20, 2013, and the end of the Class Period that such Confirmed Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve where a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect.

(3) The Joint Committee, acting on the advice of an actuary or a similar advisor, shall determine the rates at which Individual Damages will be paid. Subject to (a) the availability of sufficient funds in the Trust Fund and (b) the availability of sufficient funds in the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund to pay First Nation Damages in an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages, Individual Damages shall be paid at the rates set out in Schedule G, or as close to those rates as the sufficiency of the Trust Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund allows.

(4) Individual Damages for any partial Advisory Years after the first Advisory Year shall be calculated for each Confirmed Individual Class Member by multiplying:

(a) the Individual Damages such Confirmed Individual Class Member would have been entitled to for a full Advisory Year, calculated in accordance with Section 8.01(2); by

(b) a fraction, the numerator of which is the number of days in the applicable partial Advisory Year after the first Advisory Year during which a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory remained in effect on a Reserve where the Class Member was Ordinarily Resident and the denominator of which is three hundred and sixty-five (365).

(5) Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, within one hundred and twenty (120) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall pay Individual Damages in Accordance with this Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

8.02 Specified Injuries Compensation

(1) In addition to Individual Damages, an Individual Class Member may indicate on their Claims Form that they claim damages for one or more of the specified medical conditions listed on Schedule H that were caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident ("Specified Injuries"). For greater certainty, medical conditions caused by using water in a manner that is contrary to an applicable Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory or using Source Water will not constitute Specified Injuries.

(2) Confirmed Individual Class Members will be entitled to compensation for Specified Injuries in the amount set out in Schedule H (the "Specified Injuries Compensation"), provided that the Claimant establishes that the injury was caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in accordance with the Claims Process and Schedule H.

(3) Confirmed Individual Class Members must establish a Specified Injury by the means set out in Schedule H and the Claims Process, unless the Settlement Implementation Committee directs otherwise. Each amount set out in in Schedule H will be paid only once to a particular Claimant, even if the Claimant suffered multiple Specified Injuries of the same nature or kind.

(4) Within one hundred and twenty (120) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall determine whether there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation for each valid and established Claim for Specified Injuries Compensation (the "Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount") established in accordance with the Claims Process, and:

(a) if there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount, the Administrator shall pay Specified Injuries Compensation in accordance with this Agreement; or

(b) if there are insufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount, the Administrator shall pay each Confirmed Individual Class Member in accordance with this Agreement their pro rata share of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in proportion to the Specified Injuries Compensation to which such Confirmed Individual Class Member would be entitled if the Aggregate Specified Injuries Compensation Amount was equal to the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund; and

(c) in either case, the Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

8.03 First Nation Class Member Damages

(1) The Administrator shall calculate First Nation Class Members' damages in accordance with the following entitlement of each First Nation Class Member:

(a) a base payment of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) (the "Base Payment"); and

(b) an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages paid to Confirmed Individual Class Members who were Ordinarily Resident on such First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on such First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves ("First Nation Damages").

(2) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment to each First Nation Class Member from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund within ninety (90) days following the later of (a) the Implementation Date, and (b) the date on which such First Nation Class Member gives written notice of Acceptance to Class Counsel. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

(3) Every six (6) months after the Base Payment is made pursuant to Section 8.03(2), the Administrator shall pay each First Nation Class Member from the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, without duplication, any accrued but unpaid First Nation Damages to date for such First Nation Class Member. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall provide such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with this Agreement.

ARTICLE 9 – PROSPECTIVE RELIEF

9.01 Action Plan for First Nation Class Members

(1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that affect Class Members, including by taking the steps set out in the Action Plan within the project timeframes set out therein.

(2) Canada shall update the Action Plan regularly, and no less than quarterly, so as to reflect progress against the Action Plan.

(3) The Action Plan shall be amended to reflect additional commitments made by Canada, including commitments in Remediation Plans.

(4) Within thirty (30) Business Days following any update or amendment to the Action Plan, Canada shall provide the Joint Committee with a copy of the updated or amended Action Plan.

(5) For greater certainty, nothing in this Agreement limits Canada to taking the measures set out in the Action Plan or prevents Canada from taking additional measures not contemplated in the Action Plan for the benefit of Class Members.

9.02 Commitment to Additional Measures

(1) In addition to the measures set out in the Action Plan, Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to ensure that Individual Class Members living on Reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes, whether from a public water system or a private water system approved by a band council resolution substantially in the form set out in Schedule P, or another form acceptable to Canada and Class Counsel, including on-site systems, that meets the stricter of the federal requirements or provincial standards governing residential water quality (the "Commitment"). For greater certainty:

(a) such "regular access" shall be of a nature and quantity sufficient to permit all usual and necessary uses of water in a similarly situated Canadian home, including but not limited to drinking water, bathing and personal hygiene, food preparation and dishwashing, sanitation, and laundry;

(b) the Commitment is limited to Canada's reasonable efforts, including the provision of actual cost funding, training, planning, and technical assistance;

(c) if, despite Canada making all reasonable efforts, such regular access cannot be achieved, Canada is not required to warranty such regular access in an Individual Class Member's home; and,

(d) factors that may be considered in any determination of reasonable efforts include, but are not limited to:

(i) the views of the particular First Nation;

(ii) any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;

(iii) whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and

(iv) the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.

(2) Canada shall spend at least six billion dollars ($6,000,000,000) between June 20, 2021, and March 31, 2030, to meet the Commitment, at a rate of at least four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) per fiscal year ending March 31, by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on Reserves for First Nations ("Commitment Expenditures").

(3) Canada shall provide the Joint Committee with an annual statement of all Commitment Expenditures actually made each fiscal year through March 31, 2030, which statement shall be provided no later than ninety (90) days after the end of the applicable fiscal year.

(4) Upon request, Canada shall promptly provide any First Nation Class Member with a statement of the Commitment Expenditures in respect of such First Nation Class Member's Reserves.

9.03 Repeal and Replacement of *Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act

(1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to:

(a) introduce legislation repealing the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 (the "SDWFNA") on or before March 31, 2022;

(b) develop and introduce replacement legislation for the SDWFNA ("Replacement Legislation"), in consultation with First Nations; and

(c) introduce the Replacement Legislation by December 31, 2022.

(2) The objectives of the Replacement Legislation shall be to:

(a) ensure sustainable First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, premised upon:

(i) defining minimum standards of water quality for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems, with reference to standards that are directly applicable to First Nation communities; and

(ii) defining minimum capacity standards for the delivery of water to First Nation communities, in terms of volume per individual community member;

(b) create a transparent approach to building, improving, and providing drinking water and wastewater services for First Nations;

(c) confirm adequate and sustainable funding for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems; and

(d) support the voluntary assumption of water and wastewater infrastructure by First Nations.

(3) Notwithstanding Canada's commitment to introduce the Replacement Legislation, Canada shall support the development of First Nations governance initiatives as described in Section 9.05, below.

9.04 First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water

(1) Canada shall provide twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) in funding through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026, for the creation of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water (the "FNAC").

(2) The FNAC's membership shall reflect Canada's diversity of First Nation Class Member communities, languages, genders, geographies, skills, expertise, and experience with water insecurity.

(3) The members of the FNAC shall be appointed by agreement of the Parties, on the recommendation of the Joint Committee, and failing agreement, the members shall be appointed by the Courts. The Parties may agree to remove any member of the FNAC, and such removal will be effective upon approval of the Courts.

(4) The primary functions of the FNAC shall be to:

(a) work with First Nation Class Members to provide oversight, guidance, and recommendations to Indigenous Services Canada to support the development and implementation of forward-looking policy initiatives, including:

(i) the development of Indigenous Services Canada's Long Term Strategy for Water and Wastewater on First Nation Class Members' Reserves; and

(ii) the development of the Replacement Legislation;

(b) contribute strategic advice and perspectives to Indigenous Services Canada in order to advance the long-term sustainability of safe drinking water in First Nation communities; and

(c) support the identification and prioritization of funding for water and wastewater in First Nations communities.

(5) The terms of reference for the FNAC shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

9.05 First Nations Governance Initiatives

(1) Canada shall provide nine million dollars ($9,000,000) in funding for First Nations to pursue governance initiatives and by-law development through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026 (the "Water Governance Fund"). Indigenous Services Canada shall administer the Water Governance Fund in accordance with its terms of reference.

(2) The funding for the Water Governance Fund shall continue through the fiscal year ending March 31, 2026, regardless of whether the Replacement Legislation is enacted within the anticipated time frame or at all.

(3) The Water Governance Fund shall assist First Nation Class Members that wish to develop their own water-related governance initiatives, including by funding:

(a) research;

(b) technical advice;

(c) by-law drafting; and

(d) the implementation of pilot projects on Reserves.

(4) The terms of reference for the Water Governance Fund shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

9.06 Agreement on Required Measures

(1) If a First Nation determines that the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met on its Reserve or Reserves or if a First Nation determines that Canada is not complying with a Remediation Plan (each such First Nation is an "Underserviced First Nation"), it shall give written notice to Canada, directed to the Deputy Minister of Indigenous Services, describing the way in which the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met or the way in which Canada is not complying with a Remediation Plan.

(2) Canada shall promptly consult with each Underserviced First Nation, with a view to meeting the Commitment as soon as possible.

(3) Canada shall pay the reasonable cost of an Underserviced First Nation obtaining technical advice to determine what steps are required to meet the Commitment on the Underserviced First Nation's Reserve or Reserves.

(4) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the Underserviced First Nation detailing the steps that are required to meet the Commitment (a "Remediation Plan").

(5) Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall each comply with the Remediation Plan.

9.07 Dispute Resolution for Required Measures

If Canada does not comply with an existing Remediation Plan or Canada and an Underserviced First Nation fail to agree upon a Remediation Plan within three (3) months following the Underserviced First Nation delivering notice as set out in Section 9.06 or such other time period as the Parties may agree, the Underserviced First Nation may invoke the dispute resolution process set out on Schedule K (the "Commitment Dispute Resolution Process"), in which case Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall submit the existing Remediation Plan or their respective proposed forms of Remediation Plan to the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process.

9.08 Costs of Commitment Dispute Resolution Process

(1) Canada shall pay fifty percent (50%) of the reasonable costs and disbursements of any Underserviced First Nation Class Member's participation in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, including reasonable legal fees and disbursements, provided that Canada shall pay one hundred percent (100%) of the reasonable costs of convening collaborative negotiations, mediations, and arbitrations in accordance with the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, together with the reasonable fees and disbursements of any mediator or arbitrator appointed in accordance with the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process; and

(2) For greater certainty, the costs and disbursements set out in Section 9.08(1) are separate and distinct from the fees and disbursements payable to Class Counsel and the Joint Committee pursuant to Article 18 .

ARTICLE 10 – EFFECT OF AGREEMENT

10.01 No Provision for Continued Damages

This Agreement makes no provision for any damages that may accrue to Class Members in respect of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that begin or continue after June 20, 2021, and Class Members shall not release any claims to any such damages.

10.02 Canada's Liability

The Parties specifically agree that once Canada has complied with the terms of this Agreement, it shall have no further liability to Class Members for damages that they incurred prior to June 20, 2021 in respect of or arising from Canada's failure to provide, or fund the provision of, safe drinking water on the Reserve or Reserves of such First Nation Class Members, or on which such Individual Class Members were Ordinarily Resident during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

10.03 Releases

(1) The Settlement Approval Orders issued by the Courts will declare that, except as set forth in Section 10.01 and Section 10.04, and in consideration for Canada's obligations and liabilities under this Agreement, each Individual Class Member or their Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, or Personal Representative on behalf of such Individual Class Member or their estate and each First Nation Class Member (hereinafter collectively the "Releasors") has fully, finally and forever released Canada and its servants, agents, officers and employees, predecessors, successors, and assigns (hereinafter collectively the "Releasees"), from any and all actions, causes of action, claims, and demands of every nature or kind available, whether or not known or anticipated, which the Releasors had, now have or may in the future have against the Releasees in respect of or arising from Canada's failure to provide, or fund the provision of, safe drinking water on the Reserve or Reserves of such First Nation Class Member, or on which such Individual Class Member was Ordinarily Resident during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in each case prior to the conclusion of the Class Period.

(2) The Releasors are deemed to agree that if they make any claim or demand or take any actions or proceedings against another person or persons in which any claim arises against the Releasees for contribution or indemnity or other relief over, whether by statute, common law, or Quebec civil law, in relation to the claims released in Section 10.03(1), above, the Releasors shall expressly limit their claims so as to exclude any portion of Canada's liability.

(3) Upon a final determination of a Claim made under and in accordance with the Claims Process, the Releasors are also deemed to fully and finally release:

(a) the Parties, Class Counsel, counsel for Canada, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the FNAC and its members, the Joint Committee and its members, the Administrator, and the Third-Party Assessor with respect to any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the application of the Claims Process, including any claims relating to the calculation of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages, the sufficiency of the compensation received, and the allocation and distribution of Trust Fund Surplus;

(b) any band council that submitted a Band Council Confirmation in respect of any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the Band Council Confirmation, including any claims in respect of the completeness or accuracy thereof; and

(c) any band council that adopts a band council resolution approving private water systems, substantially in the form set out in Schedule P or in another form acceptable to Canada and Class Counsel, in respect of any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise out of the band council resolution approving private water systems, including any claims in respect of the completeness or accuracy thereof, and the adoption or failure to adopt a band council resolution approving private water systems shall not have the effect of making a First Nation or its band council responsible or liable for any water system described therein.

(4) The Parties, Class Counsel, counsel for Canada, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the FNAC and its members, the Joint Committee and its members, the Administrator, and the Third-Party Assessor shall have no liability to a Missing Eligible Class Member with respect to any claims that have arisen, arise, or could arise in respect of the payment or non-payment of any amount in accordance with this Agreement once the Administrator has complied with the Eligible Class Member Address Search Plan set out in Schedule Q.

(5) For greater certainty:

(a) any living Individual Class Member who does not submit a valid Claims Form to the Administrator, or on whose behalf a valid Claim is not made in the form of a Band Council Confirmation, or, in the case of a Class Member who is a Person Under Disability, on whose behalf a valid Claims Form is not submitted by such Class Member's Personal Representative; and

(b) any Deceased Individual Class Member who did not submit a valid Claims Form prior to their death, or whose Estate Executor or Estate Claimant does not submit a valid Claims Form on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member, together with any other information required by this Agreement, in each case on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline shall have no right to Individual Damages or Specified Injuries Compensation under this Agreement, and the Administrator shall reject any Claim submitted following the Ultimate Claims Deadline. Each Individual Class Member shall continue to be bound by the release set out in this Section 10.03 notwithstanding their failure to submit a valid Claims Form on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline.

(6) For greater certainty any Impacted First Nation that does not give notice of Acceptance by the Acceptance Deadline shall forfeit any right to any benefit under this Agreement, including First Nation Damages, and the Administrator shall reject any notice of Acceptance submitted following the Acceptance Deadline.

10.04 Continuing Remedies

(1) The Parties acknowledge and agree that, notwithstanding Section 10.03 or any other provision of this Agreement, Class Members do not release, and specifically retain, their claims or causes of action for any breach by Canada of this Agreement.

(2) The Parties acknowledge and agree that irreparable harm would occur for which money damages would not be an adequate remedy at law in the event Canada failed to perform its obligations under Section 3.04, Article 4 Article 5 Article 6 or Article 9 . It is accordingly agreed that, subject to the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50, the Parties shall be entitled to injunctive and other equitable relief to prevent breaches or threatened breaches of this Agreement, and to enforce compliance with the terms of this Agreement, without any requirement for the securing or posting of any bond in connection with the obtaining of any such injunctive or other equitable relief, this being in addition to damages and any other remedy to which the Parties may be entitled at law or in equity.

10.05 Canadian Income Tax and Social Benefits

(1) Canada shall make best efforts to ensure that any Class Member's entitlement to federal social benefits or social assistance benefits will not be negatively affected by receipt of any payment in accordance with this Agreement, and no such payment will be considered taxable income within the meaning of the Income Tax Act.

(2) Canada shall make best efforts to obtain agreement with provincial and territorial governments to the effect that the receipt of any payment in accordance with this Agreement will not affect the amount, nature, or duration of any social benefits or social assistance benefits available or payable to any Class Member.

ARTICLE 11 – IMPLEMENTATION OF THIS AGREEMENT

11.01 Settlement Approval Orders

(1) The Parties agree that the Settlement Approval Orders will be sought from the Courts substantially in the form attached as Schedule O.

(2) The Parties shall consent to the entry of the Settlement Approval Orders.

(3) The Parties shall take all reasonable measures to cooperate in requesting that the Courts issue the Settlement Approval Orders.

(4) The Parties shall schedule the Settlement Approval Hearing as soon as practicable considering the requirements of the Notice Plan and the Courts' availability.

11.02 Notice Plan

(1) The Parties agree that they shall jointly seek approval from the Courts of the Notice Plan as the means by which Class Members will be provided with notice of settlement and settlement approval, as well as the Late Opt-Out, as applicable.

(2) Canada agrees to fund the implementation of the Notice Plan and any subsequent notice ordered by the Courts.

ARTICLE 12 – OPTING OUT

12.01 Opting Out

No Individual Class Member may Opt Out of the Actions without leave of the Courts, and each Individual Class Member shall be bound by this Agreement if it is approved by the Courts.

12.02 Late Opt-Out

Notwithstanding Section 12.01, Individual Class Members who are Ordinarily Resident in Mitaanjigaming First Nation, North Caribou Lake, Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation, Oneida of the Thames, and Deer Lake First Nation shall have a right to Opt Out by providing the Administrator with written notice within forty-five (45) days of the date on which notice of settlement is first published. The First Nations named in this Section 12.02 first experienced a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory after the commencement of the Opt-Out Period. Save and except for the Late Opt-Out in this Section 12.02, Individual Class Members shall have no right to Opt Out under this Agreement and may only exclude themselves from the Actions with leave of the Courts in accordance with Section 12.01.

12.03 Automatic Exclusion for Individual Claims

Any Individual Class Member who does not, before the expiry of the time to Opt Out, discontinue a proceeding that raises questions of law or fact that are common to the Actions, is deemed to have Opted Out.

ARTICLE 13 – PAYMENTS FOR DECEASED INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBERS AND PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY

13.01 Compensation if Deceased: Grant of Authority or the Like

(1) If an Individual Class Member died or dies on or after November 20, 2017 (any such Individual Class Member, a "Deceased Individual Class Member"), and:

(a) the Deceased Individual Class Member has been identified in a Band Council Confirmation;

(b) a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by such Deceased Individual Class Member or their Personal Representative prior to their death; or

(c) a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by their Estate Executor after their death, and the Estate Executor of such Deceased Individual Class Member has submitted the evidence required by Section 13.01(2) to the Administrator, the Administrator shall pay such Deceased Individual Class Member's Estate Executor the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member was entitled under the Claims Process, with such payment made payable to "the estate of" such Deceased Individual Class Member.

(2) In support of a Claim made pursuant to Section 13.01(1), the Estate Executor for the Deceased Individual Class Member shall submit to the Administrator, in each case in a form acceptable to the Administrator:

(a) a Claims Form (if a Claims Form was not submitted by such Deceased Individual Class Member or their Personal Representative prior to their death and such Deceased Individual Class Member was not identified in a Band Council Confirmation);

(b) evidence that such Deceased Individual Class Member is deceased and of the date on which such Deceased Individual Class Member died; and

(c) evidence in the following form identifying such representative as having the legal authority to receive compensation on behalf of the estate of the Deceased Individual Class Member:

(i) if the claim is based on a will or other testamentary instrument or on intestacy, a copy of a grant of probate or a grant and letters testamentary or other document of like import or a grant of letters of administration or other document of like import, purporting to be issued by any court or authority in Canada; or

(ii) if the claim is based on a Quebec notarial will, an authenticated copy thereof.

13.02 Compensation if Deceased: No Grant of Authority or the Like

(1) If a Claims Form has been submitted to the Administrator by a Deceased Individual Class Member or by their Personal Representative prior to their death, or by their Estate Executor or another representative of such Deceased Individual Class Member (an "Estate Claimant") after their death, but the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member has not submitted all of the evidence required by Section 13.01(2) to the Administrator, the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant must submit the evidence required by Section 13.01(2)(a) and Section 13.01(2)(b) to the Administrator, together with evidence identifying the basis on which the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant represents the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(3) (in totality, an "Estate Representation Claim"), by the date that is the later of the Claims Deadline and the end of any Late Claims Period (the "Ultimate Claims Deadline") and otherwise in accordance with this Agreement, and:

(a) if only one Estate Representation Claim has been submitted in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall pay the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled to the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant identified in the Estate Representation Claim on behalf of the estate; or

(b) if more than one Estate Representation Claim has been submitted in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member on or prior to the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall:

(i) if the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in all such Estate Representation Claims submit to the Administrator a signed agreement directing the payment of the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled and provide a release in a form acceptable to the Administrator, pay such compensation to the estate in accordance with such agreement; or

(ii) if the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in all such Estate Representation Claims do not submit to the Administrator an agreement in accordance with Section 13.02(1)(b)(i), require one of the Estate Executors or Estate Claimants identified in one of the Estate Representation Claims to submit to the Administrator the evidence set out in Section 13.01(2)(c) and pay such person on behalf of the estate the compensation to which such Deceased Individual Class Member is entitled, provided that if no person submits to the Administrator the evidence set out in Section 13.01(2)(c) within two (2) years of the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claim on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate will be extinguished, the Administrator will have no further obligation to make any payment in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member or to their estate, and all Claims by or on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate shall be deemed to be released and discharged in accordance with Section 10.03.

(2) If a Claims Form is submitted to the Administrator by, or on behalf of, a Deceased Individual Class Member but no Estate Representation Claim is submitted to the Administrator in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.01(1) within ninety (90) days of the Administrator receiving the Claims Form, the Administrator shall make reasonable efforts to send a notice to the last known address of the Deceased Individual Class Member or the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant of such Deceased Individual Class Member, as applicable, requiring the submission of an Estate Representation Claim. If no person submits to the Administrator an Estate Representation Claim in respect of a given Deceased Individual Class Member within two (2) years of the Ultimate Claims Deadline, the Claim on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate will be extinguished, the Administrator will have no further obligation to make any payment in respect of such Deceased Individual Class Member or to their estate, and any Claim by or on behalf of such Deceased Individual Class Member and their estate shall be deemed to be released and discharged in accordance with Section 10.03.

(3) In support of an Estate Representation Claim made pursuant to Section 13.02(1), the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant for the Deceased Individual Class Member, as applicable, shall submit to the Administrator the following evidence that they represent the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member, in each case in a form acceptable to the Administrator:

(a) if the Deceased Individual Class Member had a will:

(i) a copy of the will appointing the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to represent the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member; and

(ii) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally, confirming that they believe the will to be valid, do not know the will to have been revoked, know of no later will of the Deceased Individual Class Member, and know of no executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator that has been appointed by a court; or

(b) if the Deceased Individual Class Member did not have a will:

(i) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally, confirming that they do not know such Deceased Individual Class Member to have had a will and that no executor, administrator, trustee, or liquidator has been appointed by a court;

(ii) proof of the relationship of such Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to the Deceased Individual Class Member in a form reasonably acceptable to the Administrator;

(iii) an attestation or declaration signed by the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, together with one other person who knew the Deceased Individual Class Member personally:

A. confirming that they know of no higher priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4); and

B. either:

(I) confirming that they know of no equal priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4), or

(II) if there is any equal priority heir of such Deceased Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 13.02(4), listing the persons at the same priority level; and

(iv) if there are heirs of such Deceased Individual Class Member of equal priority to the Estate Executor or Estate Claimant in accordance with Section 13.02(4), all such persons' signed consent for such Estate Executor or Estate Claimant, as applicable, to act for the estate of such Deceased Individual Class Member.

(4) For purposes of Section 13.02(3)(b), the priority level of heirs shall follow the provisions of the Indian Act in respect of distribution of property on intestacy, and such priority level of heirs from highest to lowest priority is as follows:

(a) surviving spouse or common-law partner;

(b) children;

(c) grandchildren;

(d) parents;

(e) siblings; and

(f) children of siblings.

All terms in this Section 13.02(4) used but not defined in this Agreement have the definitions set out in the Indian Act.

13.03 Person Under Disability

If an Individual Class Member who submitted a Claims Form to the Administrator prior to the Claims Deadline, or was identified in a Band Council Confirmation, is or becomes a Person Under Disability prior to their receipt of compensation, and the Administrator is advised that such Individual Class Member is a Person Under Disability prior to paying compensation, the Administrator shall pay the Personal Representative of such Individual Class Member the compensation to which the Individual Class Member would have been entitled under the Claims Process, and if the Administrator is not so advised, the Administrator shall make such payment payable to such Individual Class Member. If an Individual Class Member is or becomes a Person Under Disability prior to submitting a Claims Form to the Administrator, the Personal Representative of the Individual Class Member may submit a Claims Form on behalf of such Individual Class Member prior to the Claims Deadline and the Personal Representative of the Individual Class Member shall be paid the compensation to which the Individual Class Member would have been entitled under the Claims Process.

13.04 Canada, Administrator, Class Counsel, Joint Committee, Third-Party Assessor, Settlement Implementation Committee, and FNAC Held Harmless

Canada and its counsel, the Administrator, Class Counsel, the Joint Committee and its members, the Third-Party Assessor, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, and the FNAC shall be held harmless from any and all claims, counterclaims, suits, actions, causes of action, demands, damages, penalties, injuries, setoffs, judgments, debts, costs, expenses (including legal fees and expenses) or other liabilities of every character whatsoever by reason of or resulting from a payment or non-payment to or on behalf of a Deceased Individual Class Member or a Person Under Disability, or to an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, estate, or Personal Representative pursuant to this Agreement, and this Agreement shall be a complete defence.

ARTICLE 14 – SETTLEMENT IMPLEMENTATION COMMITTEE

14.01 Settlement Implementation Committee

(1) There shall be a Settlement Implementation Committee appointed by the Courts consisting of two (2) members of the Joint Committee, two (2) representatives of Canada, and two (2) members of the FNAC, each of whom is herein defined as a "Member" for the purposes of this Agreement. One of the members of the Joint Committee will be appointed as President of the Settlement Implementation Committee.

(2) The Settlement Implementation Committee shall endeavour to reach consensus. If consensus is not possible, the Settlement Implementation Committee shall decide by majority. If majority cannot be reached, the President shall cast the deciding vote.

(3) Any of the Members of the Settlement Implementation Committee may be substituted by the Courts or by agreement of the Parties so long as the composition of the Settlement Implementation Committee remains as set out in Section 14.01(1) above.

(4) The Settlement Implementation Committee is a monitoring body established under this Agreement with the following responsibilities:

(a) monitoring the work of the Administrator and the Claims Process;

(b) receiving and considering reports from the Administrator, including on administrative costs;

(c) giving such directions to the Administrator or the Third-Party Assessor as may, from time to time, be necessary in accordance with the mandate of the Settlement Implementation Committee;

(d) receiving and deciding requests for an extension to the Claims Deadline, which extension shall require an order of the Courts;

(e) proposing for the Courts' approval such protocols as may be necessary for the implementation of this Agreement;

(f) considering Claims Forms referred to it by the Administrator; and

(g) addressing any other matter referred to the Settlement Implementation Committee by the Courts or any one of them.

(5) For greater certainty, the Settlement Implementation Committee has no jurisdiction to consider appeals or applications or similar process from a Claimant or Class Member. No Class Member or other person may apply to the Settlement Implementation Committee for relief of any sort and the Settlement Implementation Committee shall not entertain any such applications or similar process.

14.02 Decisions Are Final and Binding

The decisions of the Settlement Implementation Committee shall be final and binding and shall not be subject to appeal or review.

14.03 Costs of Settlement Implementation Committee

In accordance with Section 3.04(b), Canada shall pay the costs of participation in the Settlement Implementation Committee of Members who are not also members of the Joint Committee. The costs of members of the Joint Committee shall be paid in accordance with Section 15.01(8). Canada shall pay the reasonable disbursements that all Members incur to participate in the Settlement Implementation Committee.

ARTICLE 15 – JOINT COMMITTEE

15.01 Joint Committee

(1) There shall be a Joint Committee of three (3) members recommended by Class Counsel and appointed by the Courts, with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as are required to perform its obligations under this Agreement. The Joint Committee shall consist of one (1) Class Counsel representative from Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP and two (2) Class Counsel representatives from McCarthy Tétrault LLP.

(2) Subject to Section 15.01(1), on the recommendation of the Joint Committee, or of their own motion, the Courts may substitute any member of the Joint Committee in the best interests of the Class.

(3) The Joint Committee shall make reasonable efforts to reach consensus. If consensus is not possible, the Joint Committee shall decide by majority.

(4) The Joint Committee shall represent the Class Members and act in the best interests of the Class Members as a whole in performing the functions set out in this Agreement.

(5) The Joint Committee shall consult with the FNAC and Class Members, or a subset of them, as required by this Agreement or as the Joint Committee considers appropriate.

(6) The Joint Committee may bring or respond to whatever motions or institute whatever proceedings it considers necessary to advance the interests of Class Members.

(7) The Joint Committee may divide its work among its members and their law firms, or retain other counsel, in which case the fees and disbursements of such other counsel, together with applicable taxes, shall be a disbursement of the Joint Committee.

(8) The Joint Committee's fees and reasonable disbursements shall be paid in accordance with Section 18.02, unless there are insufficient Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees, in which case the Administrator shall pay the Joint Committee's fees and reasonable disbursements from the Trust Fund on approval by the Courts.

(9) If any member of the Joint Committee believes that the majority of the Joint Committee has taken a decision that is not in the best interest of the Class, that member may refer the decision to confidential and binding arbitration to determine, on a balance of probabilities, whether the majority's decision is not in the best interest of the Class, with a determination to be rendered expeditiously and summarily, and without a right of appeal. If the members of the Joint Committee cannot agree on an arbitrator, they may ask the Courts to appoint one. The costs of the arbitration shall be a disbursement of the Joint Committee.

(10) The Joint Committee shall meet quarterly, or more frequently as required.

ARTICLE 16 – TRUSTEE AND TRUST

16.01 Trust

No later than thirty (30) days following the appointment by the Courts of the Trustee, Canada will settle a single trust (the "Safe Drinking Water Trust") with ten dollars ($10), to be held by the Trustee in accordance with the terms of this Agreement.

16.02 Trustee

On the recommendation of the Joint Committee, the Courts will appoint the Trustee to act as the trustee of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as the Courts direct. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the duties and responsibilities of the Trustee will include:

(a) to hold each of the Trust Fund, the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund (each, a "Fund") in the Safe Drinking Water Trust;

(b) if the Trustee determines that it is in the best interests of Class Members, to invest the funds of each Fund (or any of them) with a view to achieving a maximum rate of return without material risk of loss, having regard to the ability of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund to meet its financial obligations;

(c) to provide such amounts from the Safe Drinking Water Trust to the Administrator and any other person described in Section 3.04 and Section 15.01(8), as required from time to time in order to give effect to any provision of this Agreement, including the payment of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages;

(d) to engage the services of professionals to assist in fulfilling the Trustee's duties;

(e) to exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances;

(f) to keep such books, records and accounts as are necessary or appropriate to document the assets held in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund, and each transaction of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund;

(g) to take all reasonable steps and actions required under the Income Tax Act as set out in the Agreement;

(h) to report to the Administrator and Canada and the Joint Committee on a quarterly basis the assets held in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund at the end of each such quarter, or on an interim basis if so requested; and

(i) to do such other acts and things as are incidental to the foregoing, and to exercise all powers that are necessary or useful to carry on the activities of the Safe Drinking Water Trust or to carry out the provisions of this Agreement.

16.03 Trustee Fees

Canada shall pay the fees, disbursements and other costs of the Trustee in accordance with Section 3.04(b).

16.04 Nature of the Safe Drinking Water Trust

The Safe Drinking Water Trust will be established for the following purposes:

(a) to acquire the applicable funds payable by Canada;

(b) to hold the Trust Fund, the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund and the First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, as separate funds in the Safe Drinking Water Trust;

(c) to make any necessary disbursements;

(d) to invest cash in investments in the best interests of Class Members, as provided in this Agreement; and

(e) to do such other acts and things as are incidental to the foregoing, and to exercise all powers that are necessary or useful to carry out the provisions of this Agreement.

16.05 Legal Entitlements

The legal ownership of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including each Fund, and the right to conduct the activities of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including the activities with respect to each Fund, will be, subject to the specific limitations and other terms contained herein, vested exclusively in the Trustee, and the Class Members and other beneficiaries of the Safe Drinking Water Trust have no right to compel or call for any partition, division or distribution of any of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust except in an action to enforce the provisions of this Agreement. No Class Member or any other beneficiary of the Safe Drinking Water Trust will have or is deemed to have any right of ownership in any of the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.06 Records

The Trustee shall keep such books, records and accounts as are necessary or appropriate to document the assets of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each transaction of the Safe Drinking Water Trust. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Trustee shall keep, at its principal office, records of all transactions of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and a list of the assets held in trust, including each Fund, and a record of each Fund's account balance from time to time.

16.07 Quarterly Reporting

The Trustee shall deliver to the Administrator, Canada and the Joint Committee, within thirty (30) days after the end of each calendar quarter, a quarterly report setting forth the assets held as at the end of such quarter in the Safe Drinking Water Trust and each Fund (including the term, interest rate or yield and maturity date thereof) and a record of the Safe Drinking Water Trust's account balance during such quarter.

16.08 Annual Reporting

The Auditors shall deliver to the Administrator, the Trustee, Canada, the Joint Committee, and the Courts, within sixty (60) days after the end of each anniversary of the date that the Safe Drinking Water Trust was funded, which date shall be the fiscal year-end for the Safe Drinking Water Trust:

(a) the audited financial statements of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, segmented by each Fund, for the most recently completed fiscal year, together with the report of the Auditors thereon; and

(b) a report setting forth a summary of the assets held in trust as at the end of the fiscal year for each Fund and the disbursements made by the Safe Drinking Water Trust during the preceding fiscal year.

16.09 Method of Payment

The Trustee shall have sole discretion to determine whether any amount paid or payable out of the Safe Drinking Water Trust is paid or payable out of the income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust or the capital of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.10 Additions to Capital

Any income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust not paid out in a fiscal year will at the end of such fiscal year be added to the capital of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

16.11 Tax Elections

For each taxation year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, the Trustee shall file any available elections and designations under the Income Tax Act and equivalent provisions of the income tax act of any province or territory and take any other reasonable steps such that the Safe Drinking Water Trust and no other person is liable to taxation on the income of the Safe Drinking Water Trust, including the filing of an election under subsection 104(13.1) of the Income Tax Act and equivalent provisions of the income tax act of any province or territory for each taxation year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust and the amount to be specified under such election will be the maximum allowable under the Income Tax Act or the income tax act of any province or territory, as the case may be.

16.12 Canadian Income Tax

(1) Canada shall make best efforts to exempt any income earned by the Safe Drinking Water Trust from federal taxation, and Canada shall have regard to the measures that it took in similar circumstances for the class action settlements addressed in section 81(g.3) of the Income Tax Act.

(2) The Parties agree that the payments to Class Members are in the nature of personal injury damages and are not taxable income and Canada shall make best efforts to obtain an advance ruling to this effect, or failing that a technical interpretation to the same effect, in either case from the Income Tax Rulings Directorate of the Canada Revenue Agency.

16.13 Investment Advisors

On request of the Trustee, the Joint Committee may ask the Courts to appoint investment advisors to provide the Trustee with advice on the investment of the funds held in each Fund of the Safe Drinking Water Trust. The Trustee shall pay the reasonable fees of any investment advisors out of the applicable Fund of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

ARTICLE 17 – AUDITORS

17.01 Appointment of Auditors

On the recommendation of the Joint Committee, the Courts shall appoint Auditors with such powers, rights, duties and responsibilities as the Courts direct. On the recommendation of the Parties, or of their own motion, the Courts may replace the Auditors at any time. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the duties and responsibilities of the Auditors will include:

(a) to audit the accounts for the Safe Drinking Water Trust in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards on an annual basis;

(b) to provide the reporting set out in Section 16.08; and

(c) to file the financial statements of the Safe Drinking Water Trust together with the Auditors' report thereon with the Courts and deliver a copy thereof to Canada, the Joint Committee, the Administrator, and the Trustee within sixty (60) days after the end of each financial year of the Safe Drinking Water Trust.

17.02 Payment of Auditors

Canada shall pay the reasonable fees, disbursements and other costs of the Auditors in accordance with Section 3.04(b).

ARTICLE 18 – LEGAL FEES

18.01 Class Counsel Fees

Subject to approval by the Courts, and within sixty (60) days of the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay Class Counsel the amount of fifty-three million dollars ($53,000,000), plus applicable taxes, in respect of their legal fees and disbursements for the prosecution of the Actions to the date of the Settlement Approval Hearing, together with advice to Class Members regarding the Agreement and Acceptance.

18.02 Ongoing Fees

(1) Subject to approval by the Courts, within sixty (60) days after the Implementation Date, Canada shall pay to Class Counsel the additional sum of five million dollars ($5 million), plus applicable taxes, in trust ("Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees") for fees and disbursements for services to be rendered by Class Counsel and the Joint Committee in accordance with this Agreement, including the implementation and administration of this Agreement, for a period of four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing ("Ongoing Fees").

(2) Class Counsel shall maintain appropriate records and seek Court approval for payment of the Ongoing Fees from the Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees.

(3) Class Counsel shall report the balance of the Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees to the Courts and Canada on a semi-annual basis.

(4) Class Counsel shall apply to the Courts for orders directing the payment of any Funds Held in Trust for Ongoing Fees that remain in trust four (4) years after the Settlement Approval Hearing.

18.03 Ongoing Legal Services

(1) Class Counsel shall divide the work of providing ongoing legal services to Class Members among themselves, or otherwise as directed by the Joint Committee.

(2) To the extent that Class Counsel's fees, disbursements, and applicable taxes are paid pursuant to Section 18.01 or Section 18.02, they shall not charge Class Members any additional amounts for legal services rendered in accordance with this Agreement.

(3) Following the Implementation Date, responsibility for representing the interests of the Class as a whole (as distinct from assisting a particular Class Member or Class Members, as reasonably requested) will pass from Class Counsel to the Joint Committee, and Class Counsel shall have no further obligations in that regard.

(4) For greater certainty, the Joint Committee and its members, and counsel appointed by the Joint Committee, shall be paid their fees, applicable taxes, and disbursements in accordance with Section 15.01(8).

(5) Neither Class Counsel nor the Joint Committee will be responsible for representing First Nation Class Members in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process unless they are separately retained for that purpose, in which case they may represent First Nation Class Members in the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process, but their fees will not be paid pursuant to Section 18.01 or Section 18.02.

18.04 Choice of Counsel

Nothing in this Agreement prevents a Class Member from retaining separate counsel, other than Class Counsel, at their own cost. However, no such separate counsel shall be entitled to any payment under this Article 18 . Furthermore, no such separate counsel shall be entitled to receive any payment of any kind from any Class Member in connection with this Agreement, whether direct or indirect, unless the payment is approved by the Courts.

ARTICLE 19 – GENERAL DISPUTE RESOLUTION

19.01 Initial Referral to Third-Party Assessor

(1) Subject to Section 19.03, where a dispute arises regarding any right or obligation under this Agreement except a dispute regarding the Claims Process or a dispute to which

Section 9.07 applies (each such dispute other than a dispute regarding the Claims Process or a dispute to which Section 9.07 applies, a "Dispute"), the parties to the Dispute shall meet and make reasonable, good-faith efforts to resolve the Dispute within thirty (30) days.

(2) If a Dispute cannot be resolved within thirty (30) days, Canada, the Joint Committee, or any Class Member may refer the Dispute to the Third-Party Assessor.

(3) The Third-Party Assessor shall decide the referred Dispute summarily and issue written reasons.

19.02 Subsequent Referral to the Courts

(1) Canada and the Joint Committee may appeal a decision rendered under Section 19.01(3) to the Courts, and the Courts shall review the decision of the Third-Party Assessor on a standard of reasonableness.

(2) A decision of the Courts may be appealed in accordance with the rules of each Court.

19.03 Claims Process Decisions and Remediation Plans Excluded

For greater certainty, Article 19 shall not apply to disputes regarding the Claims Process, including eligibility for membership in the Class and the compensation due to any Class Member, or in respect of a Remediation Plan, including its content or Canada's compliance, and any such disputes shall be resolved in accordance with this Agreement.

ARTICLE 20 – TERMINATION AND OTHER CONDITIONS

20.01 Termination of Agreement

(1) Except as set forth in Section 20.01(2), this Agreement shall continue in full force and effect until all obligations under this Agreement are fulfilled.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision in the Agreement:

(a) the Commitment shall survive the termination of this Agreement and shall continue in force, together with Section 9.06, Section 9.07, and Section 9.08 and the Commitment Dispute Resolution Process; and

(b) Section 10.02 and Section 10.03 shall survive the termination of this Agreement; and

(c) Article 21 shall survive the termination of this Agreement.

20.02 Amendments

Except as expressly provided in this Agreement, no amendment may be made to this Agreement unless agreed to by the Parties in writing, and if the Courts have issued the Settlement Approval Orders, then any amendment shall only be effective once approved by the Courts.

20.03 No Assignment

(1) No amount payable under this Agreement can be assigned and any such assignment is null and void except as expressly provided for in this Agreement.

(2) Subject to Section 20.03(3) and Section 18.04, any payment to which a Claimant is entitled will be made to such Claimant in accordance with the direction that such Claimant provides to the Administrator unless a court of competent jurisdiction has ordered otherwise.

(3) Any payments in respect of a Deceased Individual Class Member or a Person Under Disability will be made in accordance with Article 13 .

ARTICLE 21 – CONFIDENTIALITY

21.01 Confidentiality

Any information provided, created or obtained in the course of implementing this Agreement will be kept confidential and will not be used for any purpose other than this Agreement unless otherwise agreed by the Parties.

21.02 Destruction of Class Member Information and Records

Two (2) years after completing the payment of Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, and First Nation Damages, the Administrator shall destroy all Class Member information and documentation in its possession, unless a Class Member or their Estate Executor or Estate Claimant specifically requests the return of such information within the two (2)-year period. Upon receipt of such request, the Administrator shall forward the Class Member information as directed. Before destroying any information or documentation in accordance with this Section, the Administrator shall prepare an anonymized statistical analysis of the Class in accordance with Section 39 of the Claims Process.

21.03 Confidentiality of Negotiations

Save as may otherwise be agreed between the Parties, the undertaking of confidentiality as to the discussions and all communications, whether written or oral, made in and surrounding the negotiations leading to the Agreement in Principle and this Agreement continues in force.

ARTICLE 22 – COOPERATION

22.01 Cooperation on Settlement Approval and Implementation

Upon execution of this Agreement, the Representative Plaintiffs in the Actions, Class Counsel and Canada shall make best efforts to obtain approval of this Agreement by the Courts and to support and facilitate participation of Class Members in all aspects of this Agreement. If this Agreement is not approved by the Courts, the Parties shall negotiate in good faith to cure any defects identified by the Courts.

22.02 Public Announcements

Upon the issuance of the Settlement Approval Orders, the Parties shall release a joint public statement announcing the settlement in a form to be agreed by the Parties and, at a mutually agreed time, will make public announcements in support of this Agreement. The Parties will continue to speak publicly in favour of the Agreement as reasonably requested by any Party.

Class Proceeding commenced under Part 5.1 of the Federal Court Rules, SOR/98-106

AGREEMENT IN PRINCIPLE (the "AGREEMENT")

WHEREAS the Plaintiffs commenced the action styled as Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. T-1673-19 in the Federal Court on October 11, 2019 (the "Curve Lake Action") and the action styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. CI 19-01-24661 in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on November 20, 2019 (the "Tataskweyak Action", and with the Curve Lake Action, the "Actions");

AND WHEREAS the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified the Tataskweyak Action as a class proceeding on July 14, 2020 and the Federal Court certified the Curve Lake Action as a class proceeding on October 8, 2020;

AND WHEREAS the "Class" in the Actions is defined as follows:

(a) All persons who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to June 20, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity;

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

AND WHEREAS the Class has suffered considerable hardships as a result of being deprived of clean drinking water and these hardships have seriously harmed both individuals and their communities;

AND WHEREAS the Class has moved for summary judgment on the first common issue concerning the existence and scope of Canada's obligation to provide Class Members with clean drinking water;

AND WHEREAS none of the Individual Class Members have opted out of the Actions and some one-hundred-and-twenty-two (122) First Nation Class Members have opted into the Actions;

AND WHEREAS the Defendant ("Canada") acknowledges the hardships faced by Class members and wishes to support them in securing regular access to clean drinking water;

AND WHEREAS Canada is prepared to settle the Actions on the terms set out below, subject to negotiating a definitive settlement agreement (the "Settlement Agreement");

AND WHEREAS Chief Doreen Spence, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Curve Lake First Nation, Former Chief Christopher Moonias, and Neskantaga First Nation (together, the "Representative Plaintiffs") are prepared to settle the Actions on the terms set out below, subject to incorporating them into the Settlement Agreement, and recommend that First Nation Class Members accept these terms;

NOW THEREFORE Canada and the Plaintiffs shall negotiate in good faith and make all reasonable efforts to execute the Settlement Agreement no later than August 27, 2021, subject to the Parties' agreement to any extension.

(b) Class Counsel shall bring motions for directions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of the Surplus.

(5) For greater certainty, there shall be no reversion to Canada from the Trust Fund and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of the Surplus.

1.04 First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund

(1) The Parties acknowledge the importance of providing First Nations with funds for use on projects related to water and wastewater, economic development, and cultural activities. The Parties respect the autonomy of First Nations to choose the use to which funds are directed.

(2) As soon as practicable after its appointment, the Administrator shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank (the "Restoration Fund Account").

(3) Canada shall fund the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund by paying four-hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) into the Restoration Fund Account within sixty (60) days of the date on which the orders approving the Settlement Agreement become final, including any appeals.

(4) If funds remain in the Restoration Fund Account after the Claims Deadline has passed and the Administrator has paid all of the First Nation Damages (the "Excess Funds"), those funds shall be distributed for the direct or indirect benefit of the Class.

(5) Class Counsel, with the guidance of Class Members, shall propose an allocation of the Excess Funds, which may include the following:

(i) Enhanced Individual Damages or First Nation Damages;

(ii) Individual Damages or First Nation Damages for late claimants who filed valid claims after the Claims Deadline;

(iii) Specified Injuries Compensation if the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund was insufficient to pay the Specified Injuries Compensation for all valid claims; or

(iv) Programming to promote education, cultural or spiritual practices, study, or healing in connection with Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories.

(b) Class Counsel shall bring motions for directions in the Courts for approval of the proposed distribution of the Excess Funds.

(6) There shall be no reversion to Canada from the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund and Canada shall not be an eligible recipient of the Excess Funds.

1.05 Eligibility

(1) The Administrator shall review each Claim Form,Band Council Confirmation, or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant, to identify eligible Individual Class Members (the "Eligibility Decision"). The Administrator shall issue written reasons when it determines that a claimant is not a Class Member.

(2) Within thirty (30) days of the receipt of an Eligibility Decision denying membership in the Class, the claimant and any Party may appeal the Eligibility Decision.

(3) The procedure for an appeal from an Eligibility Decision shall be decided by the Parties.

ARTICLE 2 RETROSPECTIVE COMPENSATION

2.01 Calculation of Individual Class Member damages

(1) The Administrator shall calculate Individual Class Members' damages in accordance with the information set out in a valid Claim Form, Band Council Confirmation, or such other information as the Administrator considers relevant, pursuant to the formula set out below (the "Individual Damages Formula").

(2) Individual Class Members shall be paid damages ("Individual Damages") for:

(a) If the Individual Class Member had not yet reached the age of 18 on November 20, 2013, every year during the Class Period that they were ordinarily resident on a Reserve while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect; or

(b) If the Individual Class Member had reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, every year from November 20, 2013 to the end of the Class Period that they were ordinarily resident on a Reserve while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect.

(3) Individual Damages shall be paid at approximately the following rates, with the actual rates to be determined by Class Counsel on the advice of an expert actuary:

(a) One-thousand three-hundred dollars ($1,300) per year for a Boil Water Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation;

(b) One-thousand six-hundred and fifty ($1,650) per year for a Do Not Consume Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation;

(c) Two-thousand dollars ($2,000) per year for a Do Not Use Advisory that is not in a Remote First Nation; and

(d) Two-thousand dollars ($2,000) per year for any Drinking Water Advisory in a Remote First Nation.

(4) Individual Damages shall be paid pro rata for any portion of a year for which they are due.

2.02 Payment of Individual Class Member Damages

(1) Within a reasonable period to be determined by the Parties in consultation with the Administrator, the Administrator shall pay each Individual Class Member the Individual Damages from the Trust Fund in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula.

2.03 Specified Injuries Compensation Fund

(1) In addition to Individual Damages, Individual Class Members may indicate on their Claim Form that they claims damages for specified medical conditions that were caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve where they were ordinarily resident ("Specified Injuries"). For greater certainty, the claimant must establish that the injury was caused by using water, other than source water, in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory or by a lack of clean water during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

(2) The Parties shall determine the list of Specified Injuries, together with the compensation for each Specified Injury (the "Specified Injuries Compensation") .

(3) The Administrator shall establish an interest-bearing trust account at a Schedule I Canadian Bank (the "Specified Injuries Compensation Account").

(4) Canada shall settle the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund by paying fifty million dollars ($50,000,000) into the Specified Injuries Compensation Account within sixty (60) days of the date on which the orders approving the Settlement Agreement become final, including any appeals.

(5) The Parties shall agree upon:

(a) The means of proving a Specified Injury in a non-adversarial, culturally sensitive manner that is designed so as not to re-traumatize claimants;

(b) Appropriate timelines for the Administrator to determine the validity of a Specified Injuries Compensation claim (a "Specified Injuries Decision"); and

(c) An appropriate appeal mechanism and timeline;

(6) Class Counsel shall assist Individual Class Members or their representatives, as requested, in making a claim for Specified Injuries Compensation or in appealing a Specified Injuries Decision at no cost to Canada or the Individual Class Member.

(7) Within ninety (90) days following the Claims Deadline, the Administrator shall determine whether there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund to pay the Specified Injuries Compensation for each valid claim.

(a) If there are sufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, the Administrator shall pay Individual Class Members their Specified Injuries Compensation; or

(b) If there are insufficient funds in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, the Administrator shall pay Individual Class Members their pro rata share of the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund, in proportion to the Specified Injuries Compensation that they would be due.

(8) There shall be no reversion to Canada from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund.

(9) If any funds remain in the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund after paying all of the claims for Specified Injuries Compensation, the Administrator shall pay such funds into the Trust Fund.

2.04 Calculation of First Nation Class Member Damages

(1) The Administrator shall calculate First Nation Class Members' damages pursuant to the formula set out below (the "First Nation Damages Formula").

(2) Each First Nation Class Member shall be paid a base payment of five-hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) (the "Base Payment").

(3) In addition to the Base Payment, First Nations shall be paid an amount equal to fifty percent (50%) of the Individual Damages paid to Individual Class Members in respect of Drinking Water Advisories on the First Nation Class Member's Reserve or Reserves ("First Nation Damages").

2.05 Payment of First Nation Class Member Damages

(1) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment and the First Nation Damages from the First Nation Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund.

(2) The Administrator shall pay the Base Payment to every First Nation Class Member within ninety (90) days of the later of the approval of the Settlement Agreement by the Courts, including all appeals, and a First Nation Class Member giving notice of Acceptance to Class Counsel.

(3) Every six (6) months after the Base Payment is made pursuant to Section 2.05(2) the Administrator shall pay the First Nation Class Member the First Nation Damages that have accrued to date.

2.06 No provision for continued damages

(1) The Agreement makes no provision for any damages that may accrue to Class Members in respect of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that begin or continue after June 20, 2021, and Class Members shall not release any claims to any such future damages.

2.07 Canada's Liability

(1) The Parties specifically agree that upon making the payments contemplated in the Settlement Agreement, Canada's liability to Individual Class Members and First Nation Class Members that have accepted the Settlement Agreement for damages to June 20, 2021, arising from Canada's failure to provide clean drinking water is at an end.

(2) The Parties shall agree on specific release language for the Settlement Agreement.

ARTICLE 3 PROSPECTIVE RELIEF

3.01 Action Plan for First Nation Class Members to be implemented

(1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories that affect Class Members, including by taking the steps set out in the Action Plan, within the Project timeframes set out therein.

(2) The Action Plan may be amended on consent of the Parties, in addition to being regularly updated by Canada as progress is made.

(3) Nothing in the Agreement bars Canada from taking additional measures to benefit Class Members, which measures are not contemplated in the Action Plan.

3.02 Commitment to additional measures

(1) In addition to the Action Plan, the Defendant shall make all reasonable efforts to ensure that Individual Class Members living on Reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes, whether from a public water system or a private water system approved by a Band Council Resolution, including on-site systems, that meets the stricter of the federal requirements or provincial standards governing residential water quality (the "Commitment"). For the sake of greater certainty:

(a) regular access shall permit all usual and necessary uses of water in a similarly situated Canadian home, including but not limited to drinking water, bathing and personal hygiene, food preparation and dish washing, sanitation, and laundry;

(b) the Commitment is limited to Canada's reasonable efforts, including the provision of actual cost funding, training, planning, and technical assistance;

(c) if, despite Canada's reasonable efforts, regular access cannot be achieved, Canada is not required to warranty regular access in an Individual Class Member's home; and,

(d) Factors that may be considered in any determination of reasonable efforts include, but are not limited to:

(i) the views of the First Nation;

(ii) any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;

(iii) whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and

(iv) the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.

(2) Canada shall spend at least six billion dollars ($6,000,000,000) through 2030 as contemplated by Indigenous Services Canada's Main Estimates, at a rate of at least four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) per year, to meet the Commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserve for First Nations ("Commitment Expenditures").

(a) Canada shall provide Class Counsel with an annual statement of all Commitment Expenditures through 2030.

(b) Upon request, Canada shall provide any First Nation Class Member with a statement of the Commitment Expenditures that it has received.

3.03 Repeal and replacement of *Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act

(1) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to introduce legislation repealing the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 (the "SDWFNA") on or before March 31, 2022.

(2) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to develop and introduce replacement legislation for the SDWFNA ("Replacement Legislation"), in consultation with First Nations, and to introduce this legislation by December 31, 2022.

(3) The objectives of the Replacement Legislation shall be:

(a) Ensure sustainable First Nation Water Systems, premised upon:

(i) Defining minimum standards of water quality for First Nation Water Systems, with reference to standards that are directly applicable to First Nation communities, and;

(ii) Defining minimum capacity standards for the delivery of water to First Nation communities, in terms of volume per individual community member;

(b) Create a transparent approach to building, improving, and providing drinking water and wastewater services for First Nations;

(c) Confirm adequate and sustainable funding for First Nation Water and Wastewater Systems; and,

(d) Support the voluntary assumption of water and wastewater infrastructure by First Nations.

(4) Notwithstanding Canada's commitment to introduce the Replacement Legislation, Canada shall support the development of First Nations governance initiatives as described in Article 3.04, below.

3.04 First Nations Advisory Committee

(1) Canada shall provide twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) in funding through the 2025/2026 Fiscal Year for the creation of the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water ("FNAC").

(2) The FNAC's membership shall reflect Canada's diversity of First Nation Class Member communities, languages, genders, geographies, skills, expertise, and experience with water insecurity.

(3) The primary functions of the FNAC shall be to:

(a) Work with First Nation Class Members to provide oversight, guidance, and recommendations to Indigenous Services Canada to support the development and implementation of forward-looking policy initiatives, including, without limitation:

(i) The development of Indigenous Services Canada's Long Term Strategy for Water and Wastewater on First Nation Class Member's Reserves;

(ii) The development of the Replacement Legislation.

(b) Contribute strategic advice and perspectives to Indigenous Services Canada in order to advance the long-term sustainability of safe drinking water in First Nation communities; and,

(c) Support the identification and prioritization of funding for water and wastewater in First Nations communities.

(4) The terms of reference for the FNAC shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

3.05 First Nations governance initiatives

(1) Canada shall make available nine million dollars ($9,000,000) in funding for First Nations to pursue governance initiatives and by-law development through the 2025/2026 Fiscal Year (the "Water Governance Fund").

(2) The funding for the Water Governance Fund shall continue through the stated period, regardless of whether the Replacement Legislation is enacted within the anticipated time frame or at all.

(3) The Water Governance Fund shall assist First Nation Class Members that wish to develop their own water-related governance initiatives, including for research, technical advice, by-law drafting, and the implementation of pilot projects in First Nation communities.

(4) The terms of reference for the Water Governance Fund shall be developed jointly by the Parties.

3.06 Agreement on required measures

(1) Canada shall promptly consult with each First Nation Class Member that gives notice to Canada that the Commitment is not met or ceases to be met (each an "Underserviced First Nation") with a view to meeting the Commitment.

(2) Canada shall make all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement with the Underserviced First Nation detailing the steps that are required to meet the Commitment (a "Remediation Agreement").

(3) Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall comply with the Remediation Agreement.

3.07 Dispute resolution for required measures

(1) If Canada fails to reach a Remediation Agreement with an Underserviced First Nation after six (6) months, Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall each submit their proposed form of Remediation Agreement to a dispute resolution process (the "Commitment Dispute Resolution Process").

(2) The Commitment Dispute Resolution Process shall be developed jointly by the Parties, and it shall incorporate Indigenous dispute resolution practices.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

(a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group:

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Emily Whetung, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, and Neskantaga First Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsel").

9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.

10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:

(a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in ¼ of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;

(c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and the Assembly of First Nations;

(d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;

(e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;

(f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.

12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.

13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering a signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.

14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.

16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.

17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (30) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.

19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix 1 is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.

20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your First Nation. Please Read this Carefully.

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800) 538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Band Members Excluded: Members of the Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy are excluded from this class action.

Individuals: What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community-based agencies that are funded by any government.

Get out of the Class: If you do not want to participate in this class action litigation, you need to remove yourself by opting out. If you opt out, you cannot get money or benefits from this litigation. To opt out, please visit [NTD: Insert Administrator's website for this action] to obtain an opt out coupon, or write to CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 requesting to be removed from this class action. Please include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. Your request to opt out must be sent by [NTD: 90 days from the date of the first publication of notice].

First Nations: What are your options?

Elect to join the Class: First Nations that wish to join the Class and assert claims on behalf of their community must take action to opt in. To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator at 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free:1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille ((416) 598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Your request to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

Getting Information To People Who Need It

The representative Plaintiffs and Class Counsel ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nations community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator. Please show this notice to people who may be impacted by this lawsuit or their caregivers.

Schedule B

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

If YES, A Class Action May Affect Your Rights and the Rights of First Nations

A court authorized this notice

- You could be affected by a class action involving access to clean drinking water in your First Nation Communities.
- The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada has decided that class actions on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
- The Courts have not decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and there still has to be a Court case about whether Canada did anything wrong. There is no money available now and no guarantee there will ever be any money. However, your rights are affected, and you have a choice to make now. This notice is to help you and your First Nation make that choice.

INDIVIDUAL BAND MEMBERS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
DO NOTHING: KEEP YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	Stay in these lawsuits and wait for the outcome. Share in possible benefits from the outcome but give up certain individual rights. By doing nothing, you keep the possibility of receiving money or other benefits that may come from a trial or settlement. But, you give up any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
REMOVE YOURSELF (OPT OUT)	Get out of these lawsuits and get no benefits from it. Keep rights. If you ask to opt out and money or benefits are later awarded to Class members, you won't get a share. But, you keep any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
FIRST NATIONS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
CHOOSE TO JOIN THE CLASS (OPT IN)	Join the Class. If you join, your First Nations might share in money and benefits from the outcome. By joining the Class (opting in), First Nations might receive money or other benefits, including water infrastructure, that may come from a trial or settlement in the Class Action. Opting in is an easy process, and there is no cost to opt in.

QUESTIONS? CALL TOLL-FREE 1-800-538-0009 OR VISIT HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

DO NOTHING: LOSE YOUR FIRST NATION'S RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	By doing nothing, your First Nation will lose the possibility of receiving money and other benefits if the Class Action succeeds. If First Nations do not join the Class (opt in) and money or benefits are later awarded, your First Nation won't share in those. By not opting-in, your First Nation may keep any rights to sue Canada about the same legal claims in this litigation.

- Lawyers must prove the claims against Canada at a trial or a settlement must be reached. If money or benefits are obtained you will be notified about how to ask for your share.

- Your options are explained in this notice. To be removed from the litigation, individual band members must ask to be removed by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice.]. To join the Class Action, First Nations must send their opt in notice no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are to be determined.

WHAT THIS NOTICE CONTAINS

BASIC INFORMATION

1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions. This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here: https://www.mccarthy.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinking-water-advisories-first-nations-0

2. What is this litigation about?

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action, you can call 1 (800) 538-0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members", as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action. The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they want to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at all? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You will be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take action after notice to you to receive any benefits.
First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself – this is referred to as "opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action. You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466. Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [insert Administrator web link]. You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 90 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com.

Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join – this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694. Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING YOU

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement. The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How to I get information to people who need it?

You can get more information at https://classaction2.com/ by calling toll free at 1(800)538-0009, by writing to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2, or by emailing: info@classaction2.com.

First Nations and Individual Band Members may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca or 66 Wellington Street West, Toronto, Ontario, M5K 1E6) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694 or 250 University Avenue, 8th floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 3E5.

Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, and Class Counsel kindly ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nation community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class Members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator or Class Counsel. Proceeding under Federal Courts Rules, 334.16 and 334.17

LITIGATION PLAN

FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consent timetable. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgement.

2. If the motion for summary judgement is successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.

3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.

4. The Plaintiffs seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole ("Stage 1 Common Issue"):

   (a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion.

6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification.

7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 2 Common Issues"):

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;

(c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.

(d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;

(e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

(a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.

14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

(a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.

9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt-out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues.

11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.

12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.

13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:

(a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;

(c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.

(d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;

(e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

(a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.

14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

(a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

19. The Parties may also retain an actuary to assist with the determination of Class size and the demographics of the Class.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

20. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution.

Funds not Distributed

21. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-près as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-près to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

22. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLAN

Funding

23. Class Counsel have entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

24. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval.

Claims Administration

25. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved. The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Class Action Website

26. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

27. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

28. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Federal Courts Act, R.S.C., 1985 c. F-7 as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Canada.

Coordination of proceedings

29. On July 14, 2020 the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench certified a related class proceeding in the matter styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada, Court File No. 19-01¬24661 (the "Tataskweyak Action"). The representative plaintiffs in the Tataskweyak Action have pledged to work collaboratively with the Plaintiffs to advance their common interests. Pursuant to the Canadian Judicial Protocol for the Management of Multi-jurisdictional Class Actions and the Provision of Class Action Notice, the Plaintiffs will ask the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench to convene joint case management conferences, as appropriate, to ensure coordination between the two proceedings and to promote efficiency. In order to ensure consistent results, the Plaintiffs may ask that the Federal Court and the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench sit together to hear any motion for summary judgement or any trial of the Tataskweyak Action and this action.

Proceeding under The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

ORDER

THIS MOTION for certification, brought by the Plaintiffs was heard on July 14, 2020 at 408 York Ave in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

ON READING the motion record of the Plaintiffs and the consent of the Defendant.

AND ON BEING ADVISED that the parties consent to this order.

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that this action be and is hereby certified as a class proceeding pursuant to The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

   (a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

      (i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group:

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Doreen Spence and Tataskweyak Cree Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsel").

9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.

10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:

(a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in ¼ of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;

(c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations;

(d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;

(e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;

(f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.

12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.

13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering a signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and- twenty-days (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.

14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.

16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.

17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.

19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix 1 is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.

20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your First Nation. Please Read this Carefully.

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800) 538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Band Members Excluded: Members of the Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy are excluded from this class action.

Individuals: What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community-based agencies that are funded by any government.

Get out of the Class: If you do not want to participate in this class action litigation, you need to remove yourself by opting out. If you opt out, you cannot get money or benefits from this litigation. To opt out, please visit [NTD: Insert Administrator's website for this action] to obtain an opt out coupon, or write to CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 requesting to be removed from this class action. Please include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. Your request to opt out must be sent by [NTD: 120 days from the date of the first publication of notice].

First Nations: What are your options?

Elect to join the Class: First Nations that wish to join the Class and assert claims on behalf of their community must take action to opt in. To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator at 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free:1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille ((416) 598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Your request to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

How Can I Get More Information?

Getting Information To People Who Need It

The representative Plaintiffs and Class Counsel ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nations community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator. Please show this notice to people who may be impacted by this lawsuit or their caregivers.

Schedule B

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

If YES, A Class Action May Affect Your Rights and the Rights of First Nations

A court authorized this notice

- You could be affected by a class action involving access to clean drinking water in your First Nation Communities.
- The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada has decided that class actions on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
- The Courts have not decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and there still has to be a Court case about whether Canada did anything wrong. There is no money available now and no guarantee there will ever be any money. However, your rights are affected, and you have a choice to make now. This notice is to help you and your First Nation make that choice.

INDIVIDUAL BAND MEMBERS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
DO NOTHING: KEEP YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	Stay in these lawsuits and wait for the outcome. Share in possible benefits from the outcome but give up certain individual rights. By doing nothing, you keep the possibility of receiving money or other benefits that may come from a trial or settlement. But, you give up any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
REMOVE YOURSELF (OPT OUT)	Get out of these lawsuits and get no benefits from it. Keep rights. If you ask to opt out and money or benefits are later awarded to Class members, you won't get a share. But, you keep any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
FIRST NATIONS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
CHOOSE TO JOIN THE CLASS (OPT IN)	Join the Class. If you join, your First Nations might share in money and benefits from the outcome. By joining the Class (opting in), First Nations might receive money or other benefits, including water infrastructure, that may come from a trial or settlement in the Class Action. Opting in is an easy process, and there is no cost to opt in.

QUESTIONS? CALL TOLL-FREE 1-800-538-0009 OR VISIT HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

DO NOTHING: LOSE YOUR FIRST NATION'S RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	By doing nothing, your First Nation will lose the possibility of receiving money and other benefits if the Class Action succeeds. If First Nations do not join the Class (opt in) and money or benefits are later awarded, your First Nation won't share in those. By not opting-in, your First Nation may keep any rights to sue Canada about the same legal claims in this litigation.

- Lawyers must prove the claims against Canada at a trial or a settlement must be reached. If money or benefits are obtained you will be notified about how to ask for your share.
- Your options are explained in this notice. To be removed from the litigation, individual band members must ask to be removed by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice.]. To join the Class Action, First Nations must send their opt in notice no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are to be determined.

WHAT THIS NOTICE CONTAINS

BASIC INFORMATION

1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions. This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here: https://www.mccarthy.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinking-water-advisories-first-nations-0

2. What is this litigation about?

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action, you can call 1 (800) 538-0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members", as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action. The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they w ant to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at all? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You will be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take action after notice to you to receive any benefits.
First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself – this is referred to as "opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action. You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in C urve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher M oonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466. Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [insert Administrator web link]. You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com.

Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join – this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694. Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING YOU

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement. The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How to I get information to people who need it?

You can get more information at https://classaction2.com/ by calling toll free at 1(800)538-0009, by writing to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2, or by emailing: info@classaction2.com.

First Nations and Individual Band Members may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca or 66 Wellington Street West, Toronto, Ontario, M5K 1E6) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694 or 250 University Avenue, 8th floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 3E5.

Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, and Class Counsel kindly ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nation community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class Members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator or Class Counsel. Please show this notice to people who may be impacted by this lawsuit or their caregivers.

Proceeding under The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

LITIGATION PLAN

FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consent timetable, as ordered by the Court. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgement.

2. If the motions are successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.

3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.

4. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole ("Stage 1 Common Issue"):

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion.

6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification.

7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 2 Common Issues"):

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.

9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt-out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues.

11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.

12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.

13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:

(a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;

(c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.

(d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;

(e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

(a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.

14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

(a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

19. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution.

Funds not Distributed

20. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-près as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-près to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

21. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLAN

Funding

22. Class Counsel has entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

23. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval under the Class Proceedings Act.

Claims Administration

24. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved. The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Class Action Website

25. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

26. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

27. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M. c. C130, as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Manitoba.

Proceeding under The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

ORDER

THIS MOTION for certification, brought by the Plaintiffs was heard on July 14, 2020 at 408 York Ave in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

ON READING the motion record of the Plaintiffs and the consent of the Defendant.

AND ON BEING ADVISED that the parties consent to this order.

1. THIS COURT ORDERS that this action be and is hereby certified as a class proceeding pursuant to The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130.

2. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Class is defined as:

   (a) All persons other than Excluded Persons who:

      (i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) had not died before November 20, 2017; and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(b) Tataskweyak Cree Nation and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, and the Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that until the claims asserted in this class proceeding are fully and finally decided, settled, discontinued, or abandoned, including the exhaustion of all rights of appeal, leave of the Court is required to commence any other proceeding on behalf of any member of the Class in respect of the claims asserted in this action, save and except for proceedings commenced on behalf of those members of the Class who opt out of this class proceeding in the manner prescribed below.

4. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of the Class as a whole:

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that a sub-group be and is hereby recognized for the members of each Impacted First Nation, and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating Nation;

6. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the following common issues be and are hereby certified for resolution on behalf of each sub-group:

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 6(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 6(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

7. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Chief Doreen Spence and Tataskweyak Cree Nation are hereby appointed as Representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

8. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend are hereby appointed as class counsel ("Class Counsel").

9. THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall make reasonable efforts to agree on the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of giving notice of the certification of this class proceeding (the "Administrator"). The Parties shall advise the Court of the appointment of the Administrator within sixty (60) days of the date of this Order, failing which the Court shall appoint an appropriately qualified Administrator.

10. THIS COURT ORDERS that class members shall be notified that this action has been certified as a class proceeding as follows, which shall be and is hereby deemed adequate notice:

(a) by posting the Short Form Notice set out in Schedule "A" and Long Form Notice set out in Schedule "B", and the French language translations of these documents, as agreed upon by the parties, on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) by the Administrator publishing the Short Form Notice in the newspapers set out in Schedule "C" attached hereto, in ¼ of a page size in the weekend edition of each newspaper, if possible;

(c) by the Administrator distributing the Short Form Notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations;

(d) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to any Class member who requests them;

(e) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the Chiefs of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons;

(f) by the Administrator forwarding the Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice to the band office or similar office of every Impacted First Nation identified in accordance with paragraph 12, below, except for Excluded Persons, together with a request that they be posted in a prominent place;

(g) by the Administrator establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

11. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Defendant shall be responsible for the cost of giving notice of the certification of a class proceeding as set out in paragraph 10, above.

12. THIS COURT ORDERS that within 30 days of the date of this Order, the Plaintiffs and the Defendant shall exchange a list setting out their best information on the names of the First Nations that are eligible to opt into the Class, and taken together these lists shall constitute the means of identifying the First Nations that are entitled to direct notice for the purpose of paragraphs 10(e) and 10(f), above.

13. THIS COURT ORDERS that a class member may opt out of this class proceeding by delivering a signed opt-out coupon, a form of which is attached as Schedule "D", or some other legible signed request to opt out, within one-hundred-and- twenty-days (120) days of the date on which notice is first published in accordance with paragraph 10(b), above (the "Opt Out Deadline"), to the Administrator. The Short Form Notice and Long Form Notice shall state the Opt Out Deadline and the address of the Administrator for the purpose of receiving opt-out coupons.

14. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class Member may opt out of this class proceeding after the Opt Out Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Administrator shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt Out Deadline, an affidavit listing all persons who have opted out of the class proceeding, if any.

16. THIS COURT ORDERS that any Impacted First Nation may opt into this class proceeding by retaining Class Counsel no fewer than one-hundred-and-twenty (120) days before the disposition of any of the common issues (the "Opt In Deadline"), to Class Counsel, at the address set out in paragraph 11, above.

17. THIS COURT ORDERS that no Class member may opt into this class proceeding after the Opt In Deadline, except with leave of the Court.

18. THIS COURT ORDERS that Class Counsel shall serve on the parties and file with the Court, within sixty (60) days of the expiry of the Opt In Deadline, a list of all the Impacted First Nations that have opted into the class proceeding.

19. THIS COURT DECLARES that the Litigation Plan attached hereto as Appendix 1 is a workable method of advancing the class proceeding on behalf of the Class.

20. THIS COURT ORDERS that each party shall bear its own costs of the within motion for certification of this class proceeding.

Legal Notice

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A Lawsuit May Affect You and Your First Nation. Please Read this Carefully.

You could be affected by class action litigation regarding the lack of access to clean drinking water on First Nations reserves.

The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada decided that a class action on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. There is no money available now and no guarantee that the class action will succeed.

The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.

What is this case about?

This class action asserts that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The class action asserts that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The class action asserts that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Court has not decided whether any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you have questions about this class action, you can contact Eric Khan 1(800) 538-0009 or info@classaction2.com.

Who represents the class?

The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent the Class as "Class Counsel". You do not have to pay Class Counsel, or anyone else, to participate. If Class Counsel obtains money or benefits for the Class they may ask for lawyers' fees and costs, which would be deducted from any money or benefits recovered for Class members.

Individuals Class Members: Who is included and who is excluded?

Band Members Included: The Class includes band members (as defined by the Indian Act): (a) whose reserve was subject to a drinking water advisory (such as a boil water advisory, etc.) that lasted at least one year at any time from November 20, 1995 to the present; (b) had not died before November 20, 2017; and (c) ordinarily lived on their reserve.

Band Members Excluded: Members of the Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Michael Darryl Isnardy are excluded from this class action.

Individuals: What are your options?

Stay in the Class: To stay in the Class, you do not have to do anything. If the Class obtains money or benefits, Class Counsel will give notice about how to ask for your share. You will be legally bound by all orders and judgments, and you will not be able to sue Canada about the legal claims in this case.

Staying in the Class will not impact the supports received from community-based agencies that are funded by any government.

Get out of the Class: If you do not want to participate in this class action litigation, you need to remove yourself by opting out. If you opt out, you cannot get money or benefits from this litigation. To opt out, please visit [NTD: Insert Administrator's website for this action] to obtain an opt out coupon, or write to CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 requesting to be removed from this class action. Please include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. Your request to opt out must be sent by [NTD: 120 days from the date of the first publication of notice].

First Nations: What are your options?

Elect to join the Class: First Nations that wish to join the Class and assert claims on behalf of their community must take action to opt in. To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator at 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free:1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille ((416) 598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Your request to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

Schedule B

Are You a Member of a First Nation That Has Been Subject To A Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

If YES, A Class Action May Affect Your Rights and the Rights of First Nations

A court authorized this notice

- You could be affected by a class action involving access to clean drinking water in your First Nation Communities.
- The Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench and the Federal Court of Canada has decided that class actions on behalf of a "Class" of both First Nations and band members may proceed. Band members can choose whether to stay in the Class. First Nations can choose whether to join the Class. The Courts appointed Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias to act as representative Plaintiffs for the Class.
- The Courts have not decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and there still has to be a Court case about whether Canada did anything wrong. There is no money available now and no guarantee there will ever be any money. However, your rights are affected, and you have a choice to make now. This notice is to help you and your First Nation make that choice.

INDIVIDUAL BAND MEMBERS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
DO NOTHING: KEEP YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	Stay in these lawsuits and wait for the outcome. Share in possible benefits from the outcome but give up certain individual rights. By doing nothing, you keep the possibility of receiving money or other benefits that may come from a trial or settlement. But, you give up any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
REMOVE YOURSELF (OPT OUT)	Get out of these lawsuits and get no benefits from it. Keep rights. If you ask to opt out and money or benefits are later awarded to Class members, you won't get a share. But, you keep any rights to sue Canada on your own about the same legal claims in this lawsuit.
FIRST NATIONS: YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS AND OPTIONS AT THIS STAGE
CHOOSE TO JOIN THE CLASS (OPT IN)	Join the Class. If you join, your First Nations might share in money and benefits from the outcome. By joining the Class (opting in), First Nations might receive money or other benefits, including water infrastructure, that may come from a trial or settlement in the Class Action. Opting in is an easy process, and there is no cost to opt in.

QUESTIONS? CALL TOLL-FREE 1-800-538-0009 OR VISIT HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

DO NOTHING: LOSE YOUR FIRST NATION'S RIGHTS UNDER THE CLASS ACTION	By doing nothing, your First Nation will lose the possibility of receiving money and other benefits if the Class Action succeeds. If First Nations do not join the Class (opt in) and money or benefits are later awarded, your First Nation won't share in those. By not opting-in, your First Nation may keep any rights to sue Canada about the same legal claims in this litigation.

- Lawyers must prove the claims against Canada at a trial or a settlement must be reached. If money or benefits are obtained you will be notified about how to ask for your share.
- Your options are explained in this notice. To be removed from the litigation, individual band members must ask to be removed by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice.]. To join the Class Action, First Nations must send their opt in notice no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are to be determined.

WHAT THIS NOTICE CONTAINS

BASIC INFORMATION

1. Why is there a notice?

The Courts have "certified" Class Actions. This means that the lawsuits meets the requirements for class actions and may proceed to trial. If you are included, you may have legal rights and options before the Courts decide whether the claims being made against Canada on your behalf are correct. This notice attempts to explain all of these things.

Chief Justice Joyal of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench is currently overseeing the case known as Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Justice Favel of the Federal Court of Canada is currently overseeing the case known as Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. The persons who sued are called the Plaintiffs. Canada is the Defendant. A link to the latest version of the Statement of Claim (the legal document that makes the allegations against Canada) can be found here: https://www.mccarthy.ca/en/class-action-litigation-drinking-water-advisories-first-nations-0

2. What is this litigation about?

These Class Actions assert that Canada breached its obligations by failing to ensure that First Nations communities had adequate access to clean drinking water. The Class Actions also assert that members of these communities and the communities themselves were harmed emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually. The Class Actions assert that Canada has breached its fiduciary duties, its duty of care, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Courts have not decided (and Canada has not admitted) that any of these assertions are true. If there is no settlement with Canada, the Plaintiffs will have to prove their claims in Court.

If you are having a difficult time dealing with these issues, or have questions about the Class Action, you can call 1 (800) 538-0009 for assistance.

3. Why is this a class action?

In a class action, the "representative plaintiffs" (in this case, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias) sued on behalf of individual band members and First Nations who have similar claims. All of these individual band members are part of the "Class" or "Class Members", as are First Nations who choose to join the Class Action. The Court resolves the issues for all Class Members in one case, except (in the case of individual band members) for those who remove themselves from (opt out of) the Class and (in the case of First Nations) for those that do not join (opt into) the Class Action.

4. Who is a member of the Class?

The Class includes and excludes the following:

All persons, other than "Excluded Persons" who:

(i) are members of a band, as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5 ("First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act or the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24 ("First Nations Lands"), and whose First Nations Lands were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year from November 20, 1995 to present ("Impacted First Nations");

(ii) were not dead two years prior to the commencement of this action (that is, by November 20, 2017); and

(iii) ordinarily resided in an Impacted First Nation while it was subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year; and

(iv) Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Curve Lake First Nation, Neskantaga First Nation, and any other Impacted First Nation that elects to join this action in a representative capacity ("Participating Nations").

"Excluded Persons" are members of Tsuu T'ina Nation, Sucker Creek First Nation, Ermineskin Cree Nation, the Blood Tribe, Okanagan Indian Band, and Okanagan Indian Band and Michael Darryl Isnardy.

5. What are the Plaintiffs asking for?

The Plaintiffs are asking for money and other benefits for the Class, including water infrastructure. The Plaintiffs are also asking for legal fees and costs, plus interest.

6. Is there any money available to Class Members now?

No money or benefits are available now because the Court has not yet decided whether Canada did anything wrong, and the two sides have not settled the case. There is no guarantee that money or benefits will ever be obtained. If money or other benefits become available, notice will be provided about how to ask for your share.

YOUR RIGHTS AND OPTIONS

Individual band members must decide whether to stay in the Class, and you have to decide this by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice]. First Nations must decide whether they want to join the class by no later than 120 days before the Class members' claims are determined.

7. What happens if I do nothing at all? What happens if the First Nation does nothing at all?

Individuals Band Members: if you do nothing, you will automatically remain in the Class Action. You will be bound by all Court orders, good or bad. If any money or other benefits are awarded, you may need to take action after notice to you to receive any benefits.
First Nations: First Nations must chose to join the Class Action to receive the potential benefits and to be bound by all Court orders, good or bad.

8. What if I don't want to be in the Lawsuit? What if a First Nation wants to join the Lawsuit?

Individual Band Members: If you do not want to be in the lawsuit, you must remove yourself – this is referred to as "opting out." If you remove yourself, you will not receive any benefit that may be obtained from the Class Action. You will not be bound by any Court orders and you keep your right to sue Canada as an individual regarding the issues in this case.

To remove yourself, send a communication that says you want to be removed from the Class in C urve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher M oonias v. Canada Court File No. CI-19-01-2466. Include your name, address, telephone number, and signature. You can also get an Opt Out Form at [insert Administrator web link]. You must deliver your removal request by [NTD: 120 days from the first publication of notice] to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2 or info@classaction2.com.

Call 1 (800) 538-0009 if you have any questions about how to get out of the Class Action.

First Nations: First Nations that wish to join the Class Action and assert claims on behalf of their band or community must take action to join – this is referred to as "opting in." To opt in, or to seek more information, please contact the Administrator 1(800)538-0009 or info@classaction2.com. First Nations may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca) or Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694. Requests by First Nations to opt in must be sent no later than 120 days before Class members' claims are determined.

THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING YOU

10. Do Individual Band Members have a lawyer in the case?

Yes. The Court has appointed McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP to represent you and other Class Members as "Class Counsel." You will not be charged legal or other fees or expenses for these lawyers. If you want to be represented by another lawyer, you may hire one to appear in Court for you at your own expense.

11. How will the lawyers be paid?

Class Counsel will only be paid if they win judgement or if there is a settlement. The Court has to also approve their request to be paid. The fees and expenses could be deducted from any money obtained for the Class, or paid separately by the Defendant.

A TRIAL

12. How and when will the Court decide who is right?

If the Class Action is not dismissed or settled, the Plaintiffs must prove their claims at a motion for summary judgement or a trial that will take place in Ottawa, Ontario. During the motion or trial, the Court will hear all of the evidence, so that a decision can be reached about whether the Plaintiffs or Canada is right about the claims in the Class Action. There is no guarantee that the Plaintiffs will win any money or benefits for the Class.

13. Will I get money after the trial?

If the Plaintiffs obtain money or benefits as a result of a trial or settlement, you will be notified about how to ask for a share or what your other options are at that time. These things are not known right now. Important information about the case will be posted on the website [NTD: insert Administrator website] as it becomes available.

GETTING MORE INFORMATION

14. How do I get more information? How to I get information to people who need it?

You can get more information at https://classaction2.com/ by calling toll free at 1(800)538-0009, by writing to: CA2 Inc., 9 Prince Arthur Avenue, Toronto, Ontario M5R 1B2, or by emailing: info@classaction2.com.

First Nations and Individual Band Members may also contact Class Counsel and ask for Class Counsel Stephanie Willsey (toll free: 1-877-244-7711 or swillsey@mccarthy.ca or 66 Wellington Street West, Toronto, Ontario, M5K 1E6) or Class Counsel Kevin Hille at khille@oktlaw.com or (416) 598-3694 or 250 University Avenue, 8th floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 3E5.

Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Christopher Moonias, Tataskweyak Cree Nation, Chief Doreen Spence, and Class Counsel kindly ask for the help of health care workers, social workers, First Nation community leaders, family members, caregivers and friends of Class members in getting information to Class Members who would have trouble reading or understanding this notice. More information about this lawsuit is available at the website or by contacting the Administrator or Class Counsel. Please show this notice to people who may be impacted by this lawsuit or their caregivers.

Proceeding under The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M.c. C. 130

LITIGATION PLAN

FOR COMMON ISSUES, CERTIFICATION AND SUMMARY JUDGMENT MOTIONS

1. Attached as Schedule "A" is the parties' consent timetable, as ordered by the Court. This Litigation Plan is intended to address the Plaintiffs' motions for certification and summary judgement.

2. If the motions are successful, a further plan will be proposed to address any remaining issues, depending on the outcome.

3. Alternatively, if the motion for summary judgement is not successful, the Plaintiffs will propose a further plan for the trial of the common issues.

4. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will seek certification of the following common issue to be resolved on behalf of the class as a whole ("Stage 1 Common Issue"):

(a) From November 20, 1995 to the present, did the Defendant owe a duty or an obligation to Class members to take reasonable measures to provide them with, or ensure they were provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to water that is safe for human use?

5. If the Defendant consents to certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will negotiate with the Defendant to resolve the common issues. If the negotiations fail, the Plaintiffs will require the delivery of a Statement of Defence, following which they will deliver a record in support of a motion for summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule a hearing of their motion.

6. If the Defendant opposes the certification of a class proceeding, the Plaintiffs will require the Defendant to deliver a Statement of Defence. The Plaintiffs will then deliver a record in support of motions for certification and summary judgement on the Stage 1 Common Issue. At a pre-trial conference following the delivery of the Plaintiffs' record, they will ask the Court to determine that this matter is appropriate for summary judgement and schedule the hearing of their motion for summary judgement together with the hearing of their motion for certification.

7. At the certification motion, the Plaintiffs will also seek certification of the following common issues to be resolved on behalf of each Impacted First Nation sub-group, being the members of that First Nation and the First Nation itself, if it is a Participating First Nation ("Stage 2 Common Issues"):

(a) If the answer to common issue 4(a) is "yes", did Canada breach its duties or obligations to members of the sub-group?

(b) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, is any breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") saved by s. 1 of the Charter?

(c) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is yes, did the Defendant's breach cause a substantial and unreasonable interference with Class members' or their First Nations' use and enjoyment of their lands?

(d) If the answer to common issue 7(a) is "yes" and the answer to common issue 7(b) is "no", are damages available to members of the sub-group under s. 24(1) of the Charter?

(e) Can the causation of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group be determined as a common issue?

(f) Can the Court make an aggregate assessment of all or part of any damages suffered by members of the sub-group?

(g) Does the Defendant's conduct justify an award of punitive damages, and if so, in what amount?

(h) Should the Court order that the Defendant take measures to provide or ensure that members of the sub-group are provided with, or refrain from barring, adequate access to clean tap water?

(i) If so, what measures should be ordered?

8. If the Stage 1 Common Issue is determined in favour of the Plaintiffs, the parties will conclude a discovery plan to manage the Defendant's timely production of relevant documents in respect of the Stage 2 Common Issues for each Impacted First Nation sub-group.

9. Upon assessing the Defendant's productions, the Plaintiffs will decide whether to bring motions for summary judgement on the Stage 2 Common Issues for some or all of the Impacted First Nation sub-groups, or alternatively, to schedule a trial of these common issues.

NOTIFICATION OF CERTIFICATION AND OPT OUT PROCEDURE

10. On the motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the certification of this action (the "Notice of Certification"), the timing and manner of providing Notice of Certification ("Notice Program") and set out an opt-out date as being three (3) months following the date of the Certification Order ("Opt-Out Date"), and an opt-in date as being six (6) months prior to the commencement of the determination of the Stage 2 Common Issues.

11. If a motion for summary judgement is being heard together with a motion for certification, the Plaintiffs will ask the court to render its decision on certification first, direct that notice issue if a class proceeding is certified, and then render its decision on the Stage 1 Common Issue following the Opt-Out Date.

12. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to order that the defendant pay the costs of the Notice Program, including the cost of the Administrator.

13. The Plaintiffs will seek an order for the distribution of notice of certification as follows:

(a) posting the notice on the respective websites of Class Counsel, the Defendant, and the Administrator;

(b) publishing the notice in designated newspapers;

(c) distributing the notice to all offices of Tataskweyak Cree Nation and the Assembly of First Nations.

(d) forwarding the notice to any Class member who requests it and the Chiefs of every First Nation that is eligible to opt into the class, as well as each band office;

(e) establishing a national toll-free support line, to provide assistance to Class members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class members.

(a) And by such other notice as the Court directs.

14. The Plaintiffs will ask the Court to approve opt-out and opt-in forms to be used by class members wishing to opt out of, or opt into, the class action, which will require the Class member to provide sufficient information to establish their membership in the Class.

LITIGATION STEPS FOLLOWING THE DETERMINATION OF COMMON ISSUES FAVOURABLE TO THE CLASS

Notice of Resolution of Common Issues

15. The Plaintiffs will ask that the Court settle the form and content for notification of the resolution of the Stage 1 and Stage 2 Common Issues ("Resolution Notice Plan") and the means by which Class members will file claims ("Claim Forms") by a fixed date with the Administrator. The Plaintiffs will also ask that the Court settle an appropriate process to determine any remaining individual issues.

Valuation of Damages

16. If the Common Issues are resolved in favour of the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs propose two (2) methods for assessing and distributing damages for the class members as follows:

(a) Aggregate damages that accrue to individual Class members on a pro rata basis or on a pro rata basis within a sub-group;

(b) Aggregate damages that accrue to Participating First Nations on a community basis; and

17. Following the determination of aggregate damages, including punitive damages, additional damages may be awarded in individual issues proceedings.

Assessment of Number of Claimants

18. After the deadline for submitting Claim Forms has expired, the Administrator shall calculate the total number of claimants for the purpose of any pro rata distribution of aggregate damages.

Global Punitive Damages Distribution

19. Should the Court award aggregate damages to the Class or a sub-group, the total amount of damages will be apportioned to the class in a manner to be determined by the Court within a fixed period of time set by the Court from the Notice of Resolution.

Funds not Distributed

20. Any monies not distributed will be distributed cy-près as the Court directs. The Plaintiffs propose that any residual amounts be distributed cy-près to community organizations that assist with water infrastructure in Impacted First Nations.

Resolution of the Individual Issues

21. Within thirty (30) days of the issuance of the judgment on the common issues, the parties will convene to settle a protocol to resolve any individual issues. If the parties cannot settle such a protocol, the Plaintiffs will move for directions from the Court within sixty (60) days.

MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS OF THE LITIGATION PLAN

Funding

22. Class Counsel has entered into an agreement with the Representative Plaintiffs with respect to legal fees and disbursements. This agreement provides that counsel will not receive payment for their work unless and until the class proceeding is successful or costs are recovered from the Defendant.

23. Class Counsel's legal fees are subject to court approval under the Class Proceedings Act.

Claims Administration

24. The Administrator will provide the claims administration for any settlement or judgement achieved. The Administrator will distribute notice in accordance with the Resolution Notice Plan. If a settlement is achieved and a settlement fund is provided, or if judgement results in an award in favour of Class members, the Administrator will administer payments out of the fund to claimants based on the procedures set out above, after approval and/or modification by the Court.

Class Action Website

25. From time to time, Class Counsel will post relevant pleadings and court filings, the latest documents and summaries of the latest developments, anticipated timelines, frequently asked questions and answers, and contact information for class counsel for the information of class members.

Conflict Management

26. Class Counsel and the Plaintiffs have taken appropriate measures to determine that no conflict of interest exists among the members of the Class, and no such conflict is anticipated. Should a conflict arise, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent one sub-group, and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the other. Should any conflict arise as between First Nations and their members, which is not anticipated given their commonality of interest, McCarthy Tétrault LLP will represent the members and Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP will represent the First Nations.

Applicable Law

27. The applicable law is the Constitution Act, 1982, the Constitution Act, 1867, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1985, c, I-5, the First Nations Land Management Act, S.C. 1999, c. 24, The Class Proceedings Act, C.C.S.M. c. C130, as well as applicable regulations, the common law and the law of Manitoba.

FORM OF BAND COUNCIL ACCEPTANCE RESOLUTION

See attached.

[Name of First Nation]

Band Council Resolution

Regarding the Settlement Agreement for the Class Action Litigation on Drinking Water Advisories on First Nations Lands

WHEREAS certain plaintiffs commenced a court action styled as Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. T-1673-19, in the Federal Court on October 11, 2019 (the "Federal Action");

AND WHEREAS certain plaintiffs commenced a court action styled Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, Court File No. CI-19-01-24661, in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on November 20, 2019 (the "Manitoba Action", and together with the Federal Action, the "Actions");

AND WHEREAS the Actions were certified by the respective courts as class proceedings;

AND WHEREAS the Attorney General of Canada and the plaintiffs in the Actions have negotiated a settlement agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") in respect of the Actions;

AND WHEREAS the Settlement Agreement provides that a First Nation that is a member of the class described in the Actions (the "Class") may provide the administrator appointed by the courts under the Settlement Agreement (the "Administrator") with notice of acceptance by that First Nation of the Settlement Agreement and thereby become entitled to certain compensation and benefits under the Settlement Agreement available to First Nation Class members;

AND WHEREAS [Name of First Nation] is a member of the Class and the [Name of First Nation Council] (the "Council") wishes to confirm and approve the acceptance of the Settlement Agreement by [Name of First Nation] by passing this Band Council Resolution at a properly constituted meeting called for this purpose;

BE IT HEREBY RESOLVED THAT:

1. The Council hereby directs and authorizes Chief [Name of Chief], on behalf of the [Name of First Nation], to approve and accept the Settlement Agreement, a copy of which was reviewed by the signatories below on behalf of the Council, and the Council hereby further directs and authorizes such signing authority to deliver an executed copy of this Band Council Resolution to the Administrator to confirm acceptance of the Settlement Agreement by [Name of First Nation]. The Council hereby acknowledges and confirms that no further actions are required by Council to accept the Settlement Agreement.

2. The Council hereby directs and authorizes the Chief, on behalf of the [Name of First Nation], from time to time, to execute and deliver these resolutions and such further documents and instruments and do all acts and things as may be reasonably necessary to carry out and give effect to the Settlement Agreement, including, if the Chief determines appropriate, a confirmation of the individual class members resident on a [Name of First Nation] reserve while a long-term drinking water advisory was in force on that reserve during the period applicable to the Settlement Agreement.

3. These resolutions may be signed by the Chief and Council members in as many counterparts as may be necessary, in original or electronic form, each of which so signed shall be deemed to be an original, and such counterparts together shall constitute one and the same resolution.

The signatories below hereby certify and warrant that a quorum of Council has signed this Band Council Resolution as evidenced by their signatures below.

FORM OF BAND COUNCIL CONFIRMATION

See attached.

[Name of First Nation]

Band Council Confirmation

Regarding the Settlement Agreement for the Class Action Litigation on Drinking Water Advisories on First Nations Lands

Reference is made to the settlement agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") dated September [•], 2021, between the Attorney General of Canada ("Canada"), Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation; Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias on their own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation, and Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation. Capitalized terms used but not defined in this Band Council Confirmation have the meanings given to them in the Settlement Agreement.

In accordance with the Settlement Agreement, a First Nation Class Member may provide the Administrator with a declaration identifying Individual Class Members who were ordinarily resident on a Reserve of that First Nation Class Member between November 20, 1995, and June 20, 2021 while a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in place on that Reserve (collectively, the "Identified Class Members"). Ordinarily resident means that a person lived on the Reserve more than that person lived anywhere else, or a person who was eighteen (18) years of age or younger at the applicable time and habitually lived on an affected Reserve but lived elsewhere for a portion of the year to attend an educational facility. Identified Class Members must have been ordinarily resident on the Reserve for at least one year during a period in which a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory was in effect.

[Name of First Nation] is a First Nation Class Member. [Name of First Nation Council] (the "Council") hereby declares that attached to this Band Council Confirmation as Appendix "A" is a list of Identified Class Members at [Name of First Nation].

SCHEDULE F

CLAIMS PROCESS

CLAIMS FORMS

1. Upon the appointment of the Administrator, the Parties shall provide to the Administrator a list or lists in electronic spreadsheet format (the "List") identifying, to the best of the Parties' knowledge:

   (a) the First Nations eligible to become First Nations Class Members should they accept the Agreement by the Acceptance Deadline;

   (b) the contact information for the band office or similar office of the First Nations in subsection (a);

   (c) the Reserve(s) affected, and the dates on which Drinking Water Advisories that lasted at least one (1) year were in effect for each First Nation in subsection (a);

   (d) whether each of the Drinking Water Advisories in subsection (c) was a Boil Water Advisory, Do Not Consume Advisory, or Do Not Use Advisory; and

   (e) whether the First Nations in subsection (a) are Remote or Non-Remote First Nations.

2. Promptly after receipt of the List, the Administrator shall send a Claims Form to each band office or similar office identified in subsection 1(b) with a request that a copy of the Claims Form be provided to members of that First Nation. The Administrator shall send the Claims Forms by email or, if no email address is provided, by regular mail if an address is provided. If an email is undelivered or undeliverable, the Administrator shall send the Claims Form by regular mail. If regular mail is undelivered or undeliverable, the Administrator shall have no further obligation to make efforts to provide a copy of the Claims Form to that First Nation.

3. Promptly after receipt of the List, the Administrator shall use all reasonable efforts to retain a community liaison from each First Nation on the List, or an appropriate tribal council, for the purposes of making all reasonable efforts to:

   (a) provide Claims Forms to members of that First Nation;

   (b) encourage eligible members of that First Nation to submit Claims Forms;

   (c) assist members of that First Nation with the completion and submission of their Claims Forms, including by referring them to the Administrator;

   (d) advise First Nation Class Members that they must give notice of Acceptance if they wish to participate in the Agreement; and

(e) advise First Nation Class Members that they can submit a Band Council Confirmation, if they wish.

4. The Administrator shall make the Claims Form available on its website and shall email or mail a Claims Forms to any person who requests one.

5. The Administrator shall include a postage paid return envelope with every Claims Form sent by mail.

6. The Administrator shall maintain a database of all Claims Forms and Band Council Confirmations it receives. If the Parties receive Claims Forms or Band Council Confirmations, they shall immediately forward them to the Administrator.

7. Upon receipt of a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator shall examine the Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation, as applicable, to determine if it is complete, and if it is not complete, the Administrator shall make all reasonable efforts to contact the Claimant or First Nation Class Member, as applicable, to obtain further information to complete the Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation. However, the Administrator will have discretion to accept minor deficiencies and if the Administrator accepts a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation with minor deficiencies, the Administrator need not contact the Claimant or First Nation Class Member for more information. Claimants and First Nation Class Members will have ninety (90) days from the date on which they are contacted to address any identified deficiencies, failing which the Administrator will provide to the Claimant or the First Nation Class Member, as applicable, in writing its refusal to accept the Claims Form or the Band Council Confirmation and the reason for its refusal. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Administrator may accept such part of an incomplete Band Council Confirmation that provides sufficient information to make an Eligibility Decision.

8. Where a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation contains minor omissions or errors, the Administrator shall correct such omissions or errors if the information necessary to correct the error or omission is readily available to the Administrator.

9. Each Claimant may only submit one (1) Claims Form in respect of all such Claimant's Claims, and an Estate Executor, Estate Claimant, or Personal Representative may submit only one (1) Claims Form on behalf of a particular Claimant.

ELIGIBILITY DECISIONS FOR INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBERS

10. Promptly on receipt of a Claims Form, the Administrator shall make an Eligibility Decision in accordance with the Agreement with reference to the Claims Form, the List, any relevant Band Council Confirmation, any other information received from the Parties, and other information the Administrator considers appropriate. Promptly on receipt of a Band Council Confirmation, the Administrator shall make Eligibility Decisions in accordance with the Agreement (including Section 7.02(2)) with respect to the Claimants identified therein, with reference to the Band Council Confirmation, any Claims Forms received in respect of the Claimants listed in the Band Council Confirmation, the List, any other information received from the Parties, and other information the Administrator considers appropriate.

11. If a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation indicates that the Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve that is on the List for at least one (1) year during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, but the Claimant is a member of a First Nation that is not an Impacted First Nation, the Claimant is nevertheless eligible for inclusion in the Class. If a Claims Form or Band Council Confirmation indicates that the Claimant was Ordinarily Resident on a Reserve that is not on the List, and which the Administrator has not previously considered, the Administrator:

    (a) shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the Reserve should be added to the List on the basis that it was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory during the Class Period, and if so, when the Reserve was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; and

    (b) may request further information or evidence before making an Eligibility Decision.

12. If the Administrator determines that that the Claimant is not an Individual Class Member, the Administrator shall promptly inform the Claimant:

    (a) of the Administrator's decision;

    (b) the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the Claimant is not an Individual Class Member; and

    (c) that the Claimant may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

INDIVIDUAL CLASS MEMBER COMPENSATION

13. If the Administrator makes an Eligibility Decision that a Claimant is an Individual Class Member in accordance with the Agreement, the Administrator shall quantify the amount payable to that Individual Class Member from the Trust Fund in accordance with Section 8.01 and Schedule G of the Agreement, the Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.

14. When the Administrator pays compensation in accordance with Section 8.01 of the Agreement and Section 13 of this Schedule F, the Administrator shall also inform the Individual Class Member:

    (a) how the amount paid was calculated; and

    (b) that the Individual Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

SPECIFIED INJURIES COMPENSATION

15. On reasonable request, Class Counsel shall assist a Claimant with their claim for Specified Injuries Compensation or their appeal from a Specified Injuries Decision at no additional cost to the Claimant, and Class Counsel's fees shall be payable in accordance with Section 18.02 of the Agreement.

16. A Confirmed Individual Class Member is eligible for Specified Injuries Compensation if they meet the criteria in Section 8.02 of the Agreement.

17. To support their claim for Specified Injuries Compensation, a Claimant may, at their option, submit some or all of the following to the Administrator with their Claims Form:

    (a) medical records of the injury and its cause;

    (b) other records, including written records, photographs, and videos, of the injury and its cause;

    (c) a written statement; and

    (d) oral testimony.

18. For greater certainty, the process of claiming compensation for Specified Injuries is intended to be non-traumatizing and Section 17 of this Schedule F does not prevent a Claimant from establishing their eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation on the basis of their Claims Form alone.

19. If a Claimant claims Specified Injuries Compensation but the Administrator determines that said Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation for the injuries claimed because the injuries are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, the Administrator shall promptly comply with Section 7.04 of the Agreement.

20. If a Claimant claims Specified Injuries Compensation but the Administrator determines that said Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation for the injuries claimed for any reason other than the fact that the injuries are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid, the Administrator shall promptly inform said Claimant:

    (a) of the Administrator's decision;

    (b) the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the Claimant is not entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation; and

    (c) that the Claimant may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

21. If the Administrator determines that a Confirmed Individual Class Member is entitled to Specified Injuries Compensation, the Administrator shall quantify the amount payable to that Confirmed Individual Class Member from the Specified Injuries Compensation Fund in accordance with Section 8.02 of the Agreement and Schedule H.

22. Payment of Specified Injuries Compensation will be made as provided in Section 8.02 of the Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.

23. When the Administrator pays Specified Injuries Compensation to a Confirmed Individual Class Member in accordance with Section 8.02 of the Agreement and this Schedule F, the Administrator shall also inform the Confirmed Individual Class Member:

    (a) of how the amount paid was calculated; and

    (b) that the Individual Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

FIRST NATIONS CLASS MEMBER DAMAGES

24. Upon receipt of an Acceptance, the Administrator shall determine whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. Inclusion on the List is conclusive proof that the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member. If the First Nation is not on the List, the Administrator:

    (a) shall consult with the Settlement Implementation Committee before determining whether the First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member; and

    (b) may request additional information or evidence before making the determination as to whether a First Nation is eligible to be a First Nation Class Member.

25. If the Administrator determines that that a First Nation is not a First Nation Class Member under Section 24 of this Schedule F, the Administrator shall promptly inform the First Nation:

    (a) of the Administrator's decision;

    (b) of the reasons for the Administrator's decision that the First Nation is not a First Nation Class Member; and

    (c) that the First Nation may appeal the Administrator's decision to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

26. If the Administrator determines that a First Nation that has submitted an Acceptance is a First Nations Class Member, the Administrator shall pay the Base Payment and First Nation Damages in accordance with Section 8.03 of the Agreement. The Administrator shall request such funds from the Trustee, the Trustee shall pay such funds to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall pay such funds in accordance with the Agreement.

27. Whenever the Administrator pays First Nation Damages to a First Nation Class Member, the Administrator shall inform the First Nation Class Member:

    (a) of how it calculated the amount paid; and

(b) that the First Nation Class Member may appeal the Administrator's quantification of the amount payable to the Third-Party Assessor in accordance with this Claims Process and the Agreement.

APPEALS

28. When a Claimant, Individual Class Member, First Nation, or First Nation Class Member, as the case may be (an "Appellant"), wants to appeal a decision of the Administrator, the Appellant shall within sixty (60) days of receiving the Administrator's decision provide to the Administrator a written statement identifying the decision the Appellant wants to appeal and the reasons why the Appellant believes that the Administrator erred.

29. The Administrator shall immediately forward the materials it receives under Section 28 of this Schedule F to the Third-Party Assessor for determination.

30. When considering an appeal, the Third-Party Assessor may consult the Appellant, the Administrator, and the Settlement Implementation Committee. Without limitation, the Third-Party Assessor may request evidence from the Appellant and the Administrator.

31. The Third-Party Assessor shall adjudicate an appeal as soon as practicable.

32. Upon making a decision, the Third-Party Assessor shall promptly inform the Appellant and the Administrator:

(a) of the Third-Party Assessor's decision; and

(b) the reasons for the Third-Party Assessor's decision.

33. A decision of the Third-Party Assessor is final and not subject to appeal or review.

34. For greater certainty, there is no right of appeal to the Third-Party Assessor where an Individual Class Member claims Specified Injuries Compensation for injuries that the Administrator determines are not contemplated in the Specified Injuries Compensation Grid. Instead, Section 7.04 of the Agreement applies.

GENERAL

35. Unless otherwise specified in the Agreement or this Claims Process, the standard of proof in all cases shall be a balance of probabilities in accordance with the Agreement, and the Third-Party Assessor shall apply a standard of review of correctness in accordance with the Agreement. For greater certainty, for the Administrator or Third-Party Assessor to conclude that a Claimant or First Nation is eligible for compensation, in accordance with the Agreement and unless otherwise specified in the Agreement or this Claims Process, the Administrator or Third-Party Assessor must conclude that it is more likely than not that the Claimant or First Nation is eligible for compensation on the information available to the Administrator or Third-Party Assessor.

36. To determine whether (i) a Claimant is an Individual Class Member and eligible for compensation under the Agreement or (ii) a First Nation is a First Nation Class Member, the Administrator and Third-Party Assessor may:

(a) request more information from a Claimant, a First Nation or the Parties; and

(b) interview a Claimant or representative of a First Nation.

37. The Parties may amend this Claims Process on consent to make procedural changes, such as the extension of time, and to adopt protocols and procedures, without obtaining Court approval, so long as such amendments do not substantively affect the rights and remedies set out in the Claims Process. The Parties shall obtain the Courts' approval of substantive changes to this Claims Process.

38. The Administrator shall provide a bilingual (English and French) toll-free support line to assist Claimants, their families, their guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on behalf of Claimants.

39. After the distribution, in accordance with this Agreement, of the:

(a) Trust Fund, including any Trust Fund Surplus;

(b) Specified Injuries Compensation Fund; and

(c) First Nations Economic and Cultural Restoration Fund, the Administrator shall apply to be discharged and shall file with the Courts a report in accordance with Section 21.02 of the Agreement, containing its best information respecting the following:

(d) the total number of Individual Class Members and First Nation Class Members;

(e) the number of Claimants who submitted a Claims Form and the number who were paid Individual Damages;

(f) the number of Claimants who applied for Specified Injuries Compensation and the number who were paid Specified Injuries Compensation;

(g) the number of First Nations Class Members who provided Acceptance of the Agreement;

(h) the amounts distributed to Class Members or on behalf of Class Members, as Individual Damages, Specified Injuries Compensation, or First Nation Damages, and a description of how the amounts were distributed;

(i) the number of Claims by First Nation and the amounts paid by First Nation; and

(j) the costs associated with the Administrator's work.

40. Any Party or the Administrator may move to have any part of the report contemplated by Section 39 of this Schedule F placed under seal.

41. Upon being discharged as Administrator, the Administrator shall retain in hard copy or electronic form all documents relating to a Claim for two (2) years, after which the Administrator shall destroy the documents.

Appendix H-1
Mental Health Exemplar Symptoms

• Major Depressive Disorder	A. Five (or more) of the following symptoms have been present during the same 2-week period and represent a change from previous functioning; at least one of the symptoms is either (1) depressed mood or (2) loss of interest or pleasure. Do not include symptoms that are clearly attributable to another medical condition. 1. Depressed mood most of the day, nearly every day, as indicated by either subjective report (e.g., feels sad, empty, hopeless) or observation made by others (e.g., appears tearful). (Note: In children and adolescents, can be irritable mood.) 2. Markedly diminished interest or pleasure in all, or almost all, activities most of the day, nearly every day (as indicated by either subjective account or observation). 3. Significant weight loss when not dieting or weight gain (e.g., a change of more than 5% of body weight in a month), or decrease or increase in appetite nearly every day. (Note: In children, consider failure to make expected weight gain.) 4. Insomnia or hypersomnia nearly every day. 5. Psychomotor agitation or retardation nearly every day (observable by others, not merely subjective feelings of restlessness or being slowed down). 6. Fatigue or loss of energy nearly every day. 7. Feelings of worthlessness or excessive or inappropriate guilt (which may be delusional) nearly every day (not merely self-reproach or guilt about being sick). 8. Diminished ability to think or concentrate, or indecisiveness, nearly every day (either by subjective account or as observed by others). 9. Recurrent thoughts of death (not just fear of dying), recurrent suicidal ideation without a specific plan, or a suicide attempt or a specific plan for committing suicide. B. The symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. C. The episode is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance or another medical condition.
• Persistent Depressive Disorder (Dysthymia)	This disorder represents a consolidation of DSM-IV-defined chronic major depressive disorder and dysthymic disorder. A. Depressed mood for most of the day, for more days than not, as indicated by either subjective account or observation by others, for at least 2 years. Note: In children and adolescents, mood can be irritable and duration must be at least 1 year. B. Presence, while depressed, of two (or more) of the following: 1. Poor appetite or overeating. 2. Insomnia or hypersomnia. 3. Low energy or fatigue.

	4. Low self-esteem. 5. Poor concentration or difficulty making decisions. 6. Feelings of hopelessness. C. During the 2-year period (1 year for children or adolescents) of the disturbance, the individual has never been without the symptoms in Criteria A and B for more than 2 months at a time. D. Criteria for a major depressive disorder may be continuously present for 2 years. E. There has never been a manic episode or a hypomanic episode, and criteria have never been met for cyclothymic disorder. F. The disturbance is not better explained by a persistent schizoaffective disorder, schizophrenia, delusional disorder, or other specified or unspecified schizophrenia spectrum and other psychotic disorder. G. The symptoms are not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hypothyroidism). H. The symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning.
• Panic Disorder	A. Recurrent unexpected panic attacks. A panic attack is an abrupt surge of intense fear or intense discomfort that reaches a peak within minutes, and during which time four (or more) of the following symptoms occur: Note: The abrupt surge can occur from a calm state or an anxious state. 1. Palpitations, pounding heart, or accelerated heart rate. 2. Sweating. 3. Trembling or shaking. 4. Sensations of shortness of breath or smothering. 5. Feelings of choking. 6. Chest pain or discomfort. 7. Nausea or abdominal distress. 8. Feeling dizzy, unsteady, light-headed, or faint. 9. Chills or heat sensations. 10. Paresthesias (numbness or tingling sensations). 11. Derealization (feelings of unreality) or depersonalization (being detached from oneself). 12. Fear of losing control or "going crazy." 13. Fear of dying. Note: Culture-specific symptoms (e.g., tinnitus, neck soreness, headache, uncontrollable screaming or crying) may be seen. Such symptoms should not count as one of the four required symptoms. B. At least one of the attacks has been followed by 1 month (or more) of one or both of the following: 1. Persistent concern or worry about additional panic attacks or their consequences (e.g., losing control, having a heart attack, "going crazy"). 2. A significant maladaptive change in behavior related to the attacks (e.g., behaviors designed to avoid having panic attacks, such as avoidance of exercise or unfamiliar situations).

	C. The disturbance is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hyperthyroidism, cardiopulmonary disorders). D. The disturbance is not better explained by another mental disorder (e.g., the panic attacks do not occur only in response to feared social situations, as in social anxiety disorder; in response to circumscribed phobic objects or situations, as in specific phobia; in response to obsessions, as in obsessive-compulsive disorder; in response to reminders of traumatic events, as in posttraumatic stress disorder; or in response to separation from attachment figures, as in separation anxiety disorder).
• Alcohol Use Disorder	A. A problematic pattern of alcohol use leading to clinically significant impairment or distress, as manifested by at least two of the following, occurring within a 12-month period: 1. Alcohol is often taken in larger amounts or over a longer period than was intended. 2. There is a persistent desire or unsuccessful efforts to cut down or control alcohol use. 3. Important social, occupational, or recreational activities are given up or reduced because of tobacco use. 8. Recurrent tobacco use in situations in which it is physically hazardous (e.g., smoking in bed). 9. Tobacco use is continued despite knowledge of having a persistent or recurrent physical or psychological problem that is likely to have been caused or exacerbated by tobacco. 10. Tolerance, as defined by either of the following:

	a. A need for markedly increased amounts of tobacco to achieve the desired effect. b. A markedly diminished effect with continued use of the same amount of tobacco. 11. Withdrawal, as manifested by either of the following: a. The characteristic withdrawal syndrome for tobacco (refer to Criteria A and B of the criteria set for tobacco withdrawal). b. Tobacco (or a closely related substance, such as nicotine) is taken to relieve or avoid withdrawal symptoms.
• Sedative, Hypnotic, or Anxiolytic Use Disorder	A. A problematic pattern of sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use leading to clinically significant impairment or distress, as manifested by at least two of the following, occurring within a 12-month period: 1. Sedatives, hypnotics, or anxiolytics are often taken in larger amounts or over a longer period than was intended. 2. There is a persistent desire or unsuccessful efforts to cut down or control sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use. 3. A great deal of time is spent in activities necessary to obtain the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic; use the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic; or recover from its effects. 4. Craving, or a strong desire or urge to use the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic. 5. Recurrent sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use resulting in a failure to fulfill major role obligations at work, school, or home (e.g. - repeated absences from work or poor work performance related to sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use; sedative-, hypnotic-, or anxiolytic-related absences, suspensions, or expulsions from school; neglect of children or household). 6. Continued sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use despite having persistent or recurrent social or interpersonal problems caused or exacerbated by the effects of sedatives, hypnotics, or anxiolytics (e.g. -arguments with a spouse about consequences of intoxication; physical fights). 7. Important social, occupational, or recreational activities are given up or reduced be cause of sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use. 8. Recurrent sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use in situations in which it is physically hazardous (e.g. - driving an automobile or operating a machine when impaired by sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use). 9. Sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic use is continued despite knowledge of having a persistent or recurrent physical or psychological problem that is likely to have been caused or exacerbated by the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic. 10. Tolerance, as defined by either of the following: a. A need for markedly increased amounts of the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic to achieve intoxication or desired effect.

	b. A markedly diminished effect with continued use of the same amount of the sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic. Note: This criterion is not considered to be met for individuals taking sedatives, hypnotics, or anxiolytics under medical supervision. 11. Withdrawal, as manifested by either of the following: a. The characteristic withdrawal syndrome for sedatives, hypnotics, or anxiolytics (refer to Criteria A and B of the criteria set for sedative, hypnotic, or anxiolytic withdrawal). b. Sedatives, hypnotics, or anxiolytics (or a closely related substance, such as alcohol) are taken to relieve or avoid withdrawal symptoms.
• Posttraumatic Stress Disorder	Note: The following criteria apply to adults, adolescents, and children older than 6 years. For children 6 years and younger, see corresponding criteria below. A. Exposure to actual or threatened death, serious injury, or sexual violence in one (or more) of the following ways: 1. Directly experiencing the traumatic event(s). 2. Witnessing, in person, the event(s) as it occurred to others. 3. Learning that the traumatic event(s) occurred to a close family member or close friend. In cases of actual or threatened death of a family member or friend, the event(s) must have been violent or accidental. 4. Experiencing repeated or extreme exposure to aversive details of the traumatic event(s) (e.g., first responders collecting human remains; police officers repeatedly exposed to details of child abuse). Note: Criterion A4 does not apply to exposure through electronic media, television, movies, or pictures, unless this exposure is work related. B. Presence of one (or more) of the following intrusion symptoms associated with the traumatic event(s), beginning after the traumatic event(s) occurred: 1. Recurrent, involuntary, and intrusive distressing memories of the traumatic event(s). Note: In children older than 6 years, repetitive play may occur in which themes or aspects of the traumatic event(s) are expressed. 2. Recurrent distressing dreams in which the content and/or affect of the dream are related to the traumatic event(s). Note: In children, there may be frightening dreams without recognizable content. 3. Dissociative reactions (e.g., flashbacks) in which the individual feels or acts as if the traumatic event(s) were recurring. (Such reactions may occur on a continuum, with the most extreme expression being a complete loss of awareness of present surroundings.) Note: In children, trauma-specific re-enactment may occur in play. 4. Intense or prolonged psychological distress at exposure to internal or external cues that symbolize or resemble an aspect of the traumatic event(s).

	5. Marked physiological reactions to internal or external cues that symbolize or resemble an aspect of the traumatic event(s). C. Persistent avoidance of stimuli associated with the traumatic event(s), beginning after the traumatic event(s) occurred, as evidenced by one or both of the following: 1. Avoidance of or efforts to avoid distressing memories, thoughts, or feelings about or closely associated with the traumatic event(s). 2. Avoidance of or efforts to avoid external reminders (people, places, conversations, activities, objects, situations) that arouse distressing memories, thoughts, or feelings about or closely associated with the traumatic event(s). D. Negative alterations in cognitions and mood associated with the traumatic event(s), beginning or worsening after the traumatic event(s) occurred, as evidenced by two (or more) of the following: 1. Inability to remember an important aspect of the traumatic event(s) (typically due to dissociative amnesia, and not to other factors such as head injury, alcohol, or drugs). 2. Persistent and exaggerated negative beliefs or expectations about oneself, others, or the world (e.g., "I am bad," "No one can be trusted," "The world is completely dangerous," "My whole nervous system is permanently ruined"). 3. Persistent, distorted cognitions about the cause or consequences of the traumatic event(s) that lead the individual to blame themself or others. 4. Persistent negative emotional state (e.g., fear, horror, anger, guilt, or shame). 5. Markedly diminished interest or participation in significant activities. 6. Feelings of detachment or estrangement from others. 7. Persistent inability to experience positive emotions (e.g., inability to experience happiness, satisfaction, or loving feelings). E. Marked alterations in arousal and reactivity associated with the traumatic event(s), beginning or worsening after the traumatic event(s) occurred, as evidenced by two (or more) of the following: 1. Irritable behavior and angry outbursts (with little or no provocation), typically expressed as verbal or physical aggression toward people or objects. 2. Reckless or self-destructive behavior. 3. Hypervigilance. 4. Exaggerated startle response. 5. Problems with concentration. 6. Sleep disturbance (e.g., difficulty falling or staying asleep or restless sleep). F. Duration of the disturbance (Criteria B, C, D and E) is more than 1 month. G. The disturbance causes clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning.

	H. The disturbance is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., medication, alcohol) or another medical condition.
• Specific Phobia	A. Marked fear or anxiety about a specific object or situation (e.g., flying, heights, animals, receiving an injection, seeing blood). Note: In children, the fear or anxiety may be expressed by crying, tantrums, freezing, or clinging. B. The phobic object or situation almost always provokes immediate fear or anxiety. C. The phobic object or situation is actively avoided or endured with intense fear or anxiety. D. The fear or anxiety is out of proportion to the actual danger posed by the specific object or situation and to the sociocultural context. E. The fear, anxiety, or avoidance is persistent, typically lasting for 6 months or more. F. The fear, anxiety, or avoidance causes clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. G. The disturbance is not better explained by the symptoms of another mental disorder, including fear, anxiety, and avoidance of situations associated with panic-like symptoms or other incapacitating symptoms (as in agoraphobia); objects or situations related to obsessions (as in obsessive-compulsive disorder); reminders of traumatic events (as in posttraumatic stress disorder); separation from home or attachment figures (as in separation anxiety disorder); or social situations (as in social anxiety disorder).
• Adjustment Disorder	A. The development of emotional or behavioral symptoms in response to an identifiable stressor(s) occurring within 3 months of the onset of the stressor(s). B. These symptoms or behaviors are clinically significant, as evidenced by one or both of the following: 1. Marked distress that is out of proportion to the severity or intensity of the stressor, taking into account the external context and the cultural factors that might influence symptom severity and presentation. 2. Significant impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. C. The stress-related disturbance does not meet the criteria for another mental disorder and is not merely an exacerbation of a pre-existing mental disorder. D. The symptoms do not represent normal bereavement. E. Once the stressor (or its consequences) has terminated, the symptoms do not persist for more than an additional 6 months.
• Generalized Anxiety Disorder	A. Excessive anxiety and worry (apprehensive expectation), occurring more days than not for at least 6 months, about a number of events or activities (such as work or school performance). B. The person finds it difficult to control the worry. C. The anxiety and worry are associated with three (or more) of the following six symptoms (with at least some symptoms having been present for more days than not for the past 6 months):

	Note: Only one item is required in children. 1. Restlessness or feeling keyed up or on edge. 2. Being easily fatigued. 3. Difficulty concentrating or mind going blank. 4. Irritability. 5. Muscle tension. 6. Sleep disturbance (difficulty falling or staying asleep, or restless unsatisfying sleep). D. The anxiety, worry, or physical symptoms cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning. E. The disturbance is not attributable to the physiological effects of a substance (e.g., a drug of abuse, a medication) or another medical condition (e.g., hyperthyroidism). F. The disturbance is not better explained by another mental disorder (e.g., anxiety or worry about having panic attacks in panic disorder, negative evaluation in social anxiety disorder [social phobia], contamination or other obsessions in obsessive-compulsive disorder, separation from attachment figures in separation anxiety disorder, reminders of traumatic events in posttraumatic stress disorder, gaining weight in anorexia nervosa, physical complaints in somatic symptom disorder, perceived appearance flaws in body dysmorphic disorder, having a serious illness in illness anxiety disorder, or the content of delusional beliefs in schizophrenia or delusional disorder).

Free assistance with the Claims Form is available from the Administrator. Please contact [●].

This is the Claims Form for individuals claiming personal compensation.

First Nations governments that want compensation for the community as a whole must give notice that they accept the Settlement and should not complete this form. Please visit [●URL] or contact [●] for more information.

DRINKING WATER CLASS ACTION CLAIMS FORM

You may be eligible for compensation if:

1. you are a member of a First Nation; and
2. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 20, 2021, you ordinarily resided on First Nation lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory that lasted at least one year while the drinking water advisory was in effect.

Additionally:

1. You may claim compensation on behalf of an eligible family member who died after November 20, 2017.
2. You may be eligible even if your First Nation does not accept the Settlement.

If you meet the above criteria, please complete this Claims Form to the best of your ability.

Free assistance with the Claims Form is available from the Administrator. Please contact [•].

You must submit your Claims Form by [• Date].

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Please

    a. ensure that you complete all sections of the Claims Form that apply to you;

    b. read all questions carefully before answering; and

    c. write clearly and legibly.

2. You may submit additional documents and information with this Claims Form to support your claim. If you need assistance submitting additional documents or information—or want to make an oral statement—please contact the Administrator at [•].

3. If you need to make changes to any information in your Claims Form after you have sent it to the Administrator, please do so as soon as possible. Examples of important changes include a change of address and corrections to any information.

4. Do not send original documents to the Administrator. Clear photocopies will be accepted.

5. If your Claims Form is incomplete or does not contain all of the required information, you will be asked to provide more details. This may delay the processing of your claim. The information you provide in your Claims Form is a very important part of what will be considered when deciding whether to pay you money and if so, how much money.

6. You may submit your Claims Form

    a. online at [• URL]

When did you live on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory?

A temporary absence from your ordinary residence does not end a period of ordinary residence. Your ordinary residence changes only if you spend more time living somewhere else in a given year. If you were 18 years old or younger and ordinarily resided on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, but were away from that Reserve for a portion of the year to attend an educational facility, you can still count that Reserve as your ordinary residence. Complete the dates below for the time that you were ordinarily resident on a Reserve during a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on that Reserve. Use additional rows if you were ordinarily resident on more than one Reserve that was subject to a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

Part 6: Specified Injuries Compensation
This part is optional

Eligibility for Specified Injuries Compensation

You are eligible for additional compensation if you have suffered one of the Specified Injuries on the list below. To receive money for those injuries, you must establish that your Specified Injury caused by:

1. using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory; or
2. by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

List of Specified Injuries:
[•]

You may establish your claim through this Claims Form or through additional documents or records of the Specified Injury or its cause, such as medical records. If you want to provide an oral statement about your Specific Injury and its cause, please contact the Administrator at [•].

You must complete an additional declaration with a witness at the end of this Claims Form to be eligible for Specific Injuries Compensation.

It is optional to claim Specified Injuries Compensation. You may be eligible for compensation just for living through a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory on a Reserve. But if you do not claim Specified Injuries Compensation now, you will not have another chance.

Class Counsel can help you claim Specified Injuries Compensation. There is no charge to you. Please contact [•].

The Specified Injuries eligible for compensation are serious and the symptoms must persist for at least one month. Specified Injuries Compensation is paid in addition to Individual Damages for the ordinary hardships of living through a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory.

Do you want to claim Specified Injuries Compensation?

Check the appropriate box.

ON	Curve Lake First Nation	Curve Lake New Water Treatment Plant	- Curve Lake First Nation does not currently have a drinking water advisory in effect. In June 2019, two (TWAs) on the Curve Lake Band's Administration Building was lifted. - Curve Lake is serviced with groundwater drawn from roughly 500 individual wells for each home, plus the Rehabilitated Subdivision that is serviced with a communal groundwater supply system (the so-called Rehabilitated Water Supply Treatment System – serving 49 homes), this system will be demolished once the new water treatment plant is operational and the existing water distribution system for the Rehabilitated Subdivision will be incorporated into the new system. There are 288 active members currently on-reserve who are also serviced by individual wells. These wells will not be served through the new water treatment and distribution system. - Individual wells in Curve Lake are unsuitable for both domestic and public use, poor quality water, shut-boils and contamination from on-site septic systems. Previous test results show that high levels of calcium, turbidity, iron were present in numerous groundwater supplies. The Manual Assessment Strategic Business Unit, (November 2020) provided four on-site wells and noted water quality issues concerning coliforms, nitrates and nitrites, hardness and total dissolved solids. A hydrogeological report issued November 2019 listed high concentrations of iron, manganese, total dissolved solids (TDS), hardness, and chloride, as well as elevated bacterial counts (HPC) concentrations. - The Administrative Guidelines acknowledge that almost all water frequently and does not have the capacity to meet current demands. The latest Water Solutions Planning Study (WSP) Report (June 2019) (ELGR) recommended major expansion or replacement. A new water treatment and distribution system capable of confirming to Ontario drinking water regulations is needed to ensure that the First Nation is supplied with safe, potable water, for at least the next 20 years. - ISC provided funding to Curve Lake First Nation to update an existing feasibility study. The updated study recommended, and the community prefers, a surface water treatment plant with distributed filtration and extensive distribution system with loop flow. - ISC is committed to funding construction of the Curve lake water treatment system as defined in the Project Approval Request approved by Chief and Council on June 2, 2020 and ISC on June 22, 2020, subject to further ground-truthed to the design study in the First Nations maintenance living on reserve. - ISC received the First Nation's study on May 29, 2020. The design phase of this project was approved on July 13, 2020. The First Nation is working with a Project Manager and a Design Consultant to complete the design by end of March 2021.
ON	Mississaugas	Trust the Tap	- WWB has begun funded the "Trust the Tap" proposal for $240,000 in Mississaugs, which is a community Well-being Planning Plan that focuses on: community training, cultural education, building self-esteem, and developing more community-appropriate wellness strategies. The proposal arose from the need to address psychological and physical impacts of the CTWA which are compounded the ongoing trauma and intense health challenges experienced by this community. - WWB ISC's initial funding will be used mainly for community engagement and capacity support to develop the Community Well-being Plan, as well as direct mental health support for the community engagement and issues that may arise from these sessions. - The initial community engagement approved in February 2021 will be implemented at the First Nations. WWB could not to be available to support the First Nation as they advance the implementation of the project. - WWB ISC is committed to funding the implementation and delivery of the Community Wellness/Healing Plan that is developed through the community engagement process in consultation with WWB.

SCHEDULE K

COMMITMENT DISPUTE RESOLUTION PROCESS (AND APPENDIX)

See attached.

1. Fixing Things Together: Commitment Dispute Resolution Process

1.1. General

1.1.1. This Schedule applies to disagreements that arise between Canada and Underserviced First Nations about whether Canada is meeting its Commitment under the Agreement and about proposed plans for meeting the Commitment (collectively, "Disagreements").

1.1.2. Canada and the Class share the following objectives:

1.1.2.1. to cooperate with each other to ensure that the Commitment is always met;

1.1.2.2. to strive for consensus and harmony;

1.1.2.3. to agree on plans to meet the Commitment in a timely and expeditious fashion ("Remediation Plans");

1.1.2.4. to identify Disagreements quickly and resolve them in the most expeditious and cost-effective manner possible;

1.1.2.5. to resolve Disagreements in a non-adversarial, collaborative and informal atmosphere;

1.1.2.6. to resolve Disagreements in a manner which reflects and incorporates the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation;

1.1.2.7. to locate the process for resolving Disagreements within the communities of the Underserviced First Nations and conduct those processes in a way that is accessible to and respectful of those communities.

1.1.3. Except as otherwise provided, Canada and any Underserviced First Nation may agree to vary a procedural requirement contained in this Schedule, as it applies to a particular Disagreement.

1.1.4. Canada and the Class desire and expect that most Disagreements will be resolved by informal discussions without the necessity of invoking this Schedule.

1.1.5. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, Disagreements not resolved informally will progress, until resolved, through the following stages:

1.1.5.1. Stage One: formal, unassisted efforts to reach agreement on a Remediation Plan between Canada and the Underserviced First Nation, in collaborative negotiations in accordance with Appendix K-1;

1.1.5.2. Stage Two: structured efforts to reach agreement between or among the Canada and the Underserviced First Nation in a mediation in accordance with Appendix K-2; and

1.1.5.3. Stage Three: final adjudication in arbitral proceedings in accordance with Appendix K-3.

1.1.6. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, no one may refer a Disagreement to final adjudication in Stage Three without first proceeding through Stage One and Stage Two as required in this Schedule.

1.1.7. Nothing in this Schedule prevents Canada or an Underserviced First Nation from commencing arbitral proceedings on an urgent basis at any time:

1.1.7.1. to address an urgent loss of regular access to water; and/or

1.1.7.2. to obtain interlocutory or interim relief that is otherwise available pending resolution of the Disagreement under this Schedule, and the Arbitrator shall have the power to hear such hearings on an urgent basis and grant such interlocutory or interim relief.

1.2. Stage One: Collaborative Negotiations

1.2.1. If a Disagreement is not resolved by informal discussion and an Underserviced First Nation wishes to invoke this Schedule, that Underserviced First Nation will deliver a notice to Canada, requiring the commencement of collaborative negotiations.

1.2.2. Upon receiving the notice, Canada and the Underserviced First Nation shall participate in the collaborative negotiations.

1.2.3. Collaborative negotiations must be conducted in a manner which:

1.2.3.1. is in good faith;

1.2.3.2. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserviced First Nation participating;

1.2.3.3. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement, by, among other things, Canada providing sufficient information and sufficiently explaining those issues in a way that is accessible to members of the Underserviced First Nation;

1.2.3.4. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages;

1.2.3.5. is located within the community of the Underserviced First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.2.3.6. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.2.3.6.1. seating arrangements;

1.2.3.6.2. order of speaking;

1.2.3.6.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;

1.2.3.6.4. exchange of gifts;

1.2.3.6.5. the wisdom of elders;

1.2.3.6.6. the importance of traditional teachings;

1.2.3.6.7. the experience of the community;

1.2.3.6.8. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement; and

1.2.3.6.9. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.2.4. Collaborative negotiations terminate in the circumstances described in Appendix K-1.

1.3. Stage Two: Mediation

1.3.1. Within fifteen (15) days of termination of collaborative negotiations that have not resolved the Disagreement, an Underserviced First Nation may require the commencement of a facilitated process by delivering a notice describing the Disagreement and including any Remediation Plans from Canada and the Underserviced First Nation.

1.3.2. Within thirty (30) days after delivery of a notice, the Canada and the Underserviced First Nation engaged in the Disagreement (the "Participating Parties") will use mediation to attempt to resolve the Disagreement.

1.3.3. The Parties shall establish a Roster of Mediators available to facilitate negotiations who have knowledge of:

1.3.3.1. The conditions of life on First Nations reserves; and

1.3.3.2. First Nations languages, customs and legal traditions.

1.3.4. The mediator and the Participating Parties must conduct the facilitated process in a manner which:

1.3.4.1. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserviced First Nation participating;

1.3.4.2. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement, by, among other things, Canada providing sufficient information and sufficiently explaining those issues in a way that is accessible to members of the Underserviced First Nation;

1.3.4.3. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages throughout the process;

1.3.4.4. is located within the community of the Underserviced First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.3.4.5. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.3.4.5.1. seating arrangements;

1.3.4.5.2. order of speaking;

1.3.4.5.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;

1.3.4.5.4. exchange of gifts;

1.3.4.5.5. the wisdom of elders;

1.3.4.5.6. the importance of traditional teachings;

1.3.4.5.7. the experience of the community;

1.3.4.5.8. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement;

1.3.4.5.9. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.3.5. The Underserviced First Nation may designate a representative knowledge keeper or elder to provide guidance to the mediator on legal traditions and protocols.

1.3.6. The Underserviced First Nation may develop guidelines outlining its legal traditions and protocols for use by the mediator and the Parties.

1.3.7. The Participating Parties may or may not request a report from the mediator.

1.3.8. A mediation terminates in the circumstances described in Appendix K-2.

1.4. Stage Three: Adjudication – Arbitration

1.4.1. After the later of termination of collaborative negotiations, or of a required facilitated process, the Disagreement will, on the delivery of a notice to arbitrate in accordance with Appendix K-3, be referred to and finally resolved by arbitration in accordance with that Appendix.

1.4.2. Accompanying the notice to arbitrate shall be:

1.4.2.1. any Remediation Plans prepared by the Participating Parties;

1.4.2.2. any neutral evaluation report;

1.4.2.3. any mediator's report that the Parties have agreed may be provided to the Arbitrator.

1.4.3. The Parties shall establish a Roster of Arbitrators available to hear arbitration of Disagreements.

1.4.4. Arbitrators on the Roster of Arbitrators shall have knowledge of:

1.4.4.1. The conditions of life on First Nations reserves; and

1.4.4.2. First Nations languages, customs and legal traditions.

1.4.5. The Arbitrator shall consider the Remediation Plans proposed and the reasonableness of Canada's efforts to ensure regular access as defined in the Commitment. Relevant factors include:

1.4.5.1. the views of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.4.5.1.1. the physical, social and cultural importance of water;

1.4.5.1.2. the legal traditions of the Underserviced First Nation as they relate to water use, protection and access;

1.4.5.1.3. the historic and ongoing effects of lack of access to water within the Underserviced First Nation;

1.4.5.1.4. the history of Canada's efforts with respect to ensuring regular access to water;

1.4.5.1.5. the urgency of the Underserviced First Nation's water needs.

1.4.5.2. any federal requirements or provincial standards and protocols relating to water;

1.4.5.3. whether monitoring and testing are performed on the water system; and

1.4.5.4. the physical location of the home, including proximity to centralized water systems and remoteness.

1.4.6. The Arbitrator shall conduct the arbitration proceedings in a manner which:

1.4.6.1. creates a safe and respectful space for members of the Underserviced First Nation participating;

1.4.6.2. promotes mutual understanding and transparency about the issues in the Disagreement;

1.4.6.3. enables and promotes the use of Indigenous languages throughout the process;

1.4.6.4. is located within the community of the Underserviced First Nation and is accessible to its members;

1.4.6.5. respects the legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, including:

1.4.6.5.1. seating arrangements;

1.4.6.5.2. order of speaking;

1.4.6.5.3. prayers, speeches and acknowledgments;

1.4.6.5.4. exchange of gifts;

1.4.6.5.5. the admissibility and relevance of evidence, including:

1.4.6.5.5.1. the wisdom of elders;

1.4.6.5.5.2. traditional teachings;

1.4.6.5.5.3. the experience of the community;

1.4.6.5.5.4. the community's understanding of the issues in the Disagreement; and

1.4.6.5.5.5. the community's protocols for decision-making.

1.4.7. The Underserviced First Nation may recommend a representative knowledge keeper or elder, who may, at the discretion of the Arbitrator, sit with the Arbitrator to provide guidance on legal traditions and protocols.

1.4.8. The Underserviced First Nation may develop guidelines outlining its legal traditions and protocols for use by the Arbitrator and the Parties.

1.4.9. After reviewing the Remediation Plans proposed and hearing from the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator shall make an arbitral award as follows:

1.4.9.1. ordering the Underserviced First Nation's Remediation Plan if it is reasonable in all the circumstances;

1.4.9.2. ordering Canada's Remediation Plan if it is reasonable and the Underserviced First Nation's Remediation Plan is not reasonable; or

1.4.9.3. remitting the matter back to the Participating Parties with directions in the event that neither Remediation Plan is reasonable.

1.4.10. An Arbitral Award, as defined in Appendix K-3, is final and binding on all Participating Parties whether or not a Participating Party has participated in the arbitration.

1.4.11. The Parties shall maintain a public registry of arbitral decisions for use by Canada, Underserviced First Nations, and Arbitrators.

Dispute Resolution Procedures

GENERAL

(1) If, in the circumstances set out in Section 9.07 of the Agreement, an Underserviced First Nation wishes to invoke the dispute resolution process set out in this Schedule in respect of an applicable dispute (each a "Disagreement"), the Underserviced First Nation may give Canada a Negotiation Notice, and the Parties shall resolve the Disagreement using the procedure set out in this Schedule.

(2) The "Schedule" means this Schedule K: Dispute Resolution.

APPENDIX K-1
Collaborative Negotiations

GENERAL

(3) Collaborative negotiations commence on the date of delivery of a written notice by an Underserviced First Nation requiring the commencement of collaborative negotiations (a "Negotiation Notice").

NOTICE

(4) A Negotiation Notice will include the following:

(a) the names of the Participating Parties

(b) a summary of the particulars of the Disagreement;

(c) a description of the efforts made to date to resolve the Disagreement;

(d) the names of the individuals involved in those efforts; and

(e) any other information that will help the Participating Parties.

REPRESENTATION

(5) A Participating Party may attend collaborative negotiations with or without legal counsel or other advisors.

(6) At the commencement of the first negotiation meeting, each Participating Party will advise the other Participating Parties of any limitations on the authority of its representatives.

NEGOTIATION PROCESS

(7) The Participating Parties will convene their first negotiation meeting in collaborative negotiations within twenty-one (21) days after the commencement of the collaborative negotiations.

(8) Before the first scheduled negotiation meeting, the Participating Parties will attempt to agree on any procedural issues that will facilitate the collaborative negotiations.

(9) The Participating Parties will make a serious attempt to resolve the Disagreement by:

(a) identifying underlying interests;

(b) isolating points of agreement and disagreement;

(c) exploring alternative solutions;

(d) considering compromises or accommodations; and

(e) taking any other measures that will assist in resolution of the Disagreement.

(10) No transcript or recording will be kept of collaborative negotiations, but this does not prevent an individual from keeping notes of the negotiations.

CONFIDENTIALITY

(11) In order to assist in the resolution of a Disagreement, collaborative negotiations will not be open to the public, but this paragraph does not prevent leadership of the Underserviced First Nation and their representatives from attending.

(12) The Participating Parties, and all persons, will keep confidential:

(a) all oral and written information disclosed in the collaborative negotiations; and

(b) the fact that the information has been disclosed.

(13) The collaborative negotiations will be without prejudice to the rights of the Participating Parties, and nothing disclosed in the collaborative negotiations may be used outside of the collaborative negotiations.

RIGHT TO WITHDRAW

(14) A Participating Party may withdraw from collaborative negotiations at any time.

TERMINATION OF COLLABORATIVE NEGOTIATIONS

(15) Collaborative negotiations are terminated when any of the following occurs:

(a) the expiration of sixty (60) days;

(b) a Participating Party withdraws from the collaborative negotiations under paragraph (14);

(c) the Participating Parties agree in writing to terminate the collaborative negotiations; or

(d) the Participating Parties sign a written agreement resolving the Disagreement.

COSTS

(16) Canada shall pay the reasonable costs of collaborative negotiations conducted under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

APPENDIX K-2
Mediation

GENERAL

(17) A mediation may commence at any time after the conclusion of collaborative negotiations, in accordance with Appendix K-1, when an Underserviced First Nation delivers written notice requiring the commencement of mediation (a "Mediation Notice").

(18) A mediation begins on the date the Participating Parties directly engaged in the Disagreement have agreed in writing to commence mediation in accordance with 1.3.2 of the Schedule.

NOTICE

(19) A Mediation Notice will include the following:

(a) the names of the Participating Parties

(b) a summary of the particulars of the Disagreement;

(c) a description of the efforts made to date to resolve the Disagreement;

(d) the names of the individuals involved in those efforts; and

(e) any other information that will help the Participating Parties.

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

(20) A mediation will be conducted by one mediator selected by the Underserved First Nation from the Roster of Mediators established in accordance with the Schedule.

(21) Subject to any limitations agreed to by the Participating Parties, a mediator may employ reasonable and necessary administrative or other support services.

REQUIREMENT TO WITHDRAW

(22) At any time a Participating Party may give the mediator and the other Participating Parties a written notice, with or without reasons, requiring the mediator to withdraw from the mediation on the grounds that the Participating Party has justifiable doubts as to the mediator's independence or impartiality.

(23) On receipt of a written notice in accordance with paragraph (22), the mediator will immediately withdraw from the mediation.

END OF APPOINTMENT

(24) A mediator's appointment terminates if:

(a) the mediator is required to withdraw in accordance with paragraph (23);

(b) the mediator withdraws from office for any reason; or

(c) the Participating Parties agree to the termination.

(25) If a mediator's appointment terminates, a replacement mediator will be appointed in accordance with paragraph (20).

REPRESENTATION

(26) A Participating Party may attend a mediation with or without legal counsel or other advisor.

(27) If a mediator is a lawyer, the mediator will not act as legal counsel for any Participating Party.

(28) At the commencement of the first meeting of a mediation, each Participating Party will advise the mediator and the other Participating Parties of any limitations on the authority of its representatives.

CONDUCT OF MEDIATION

(29) The Participating Parties will:

(a) make a serious attempt to resolve the Disagreement by:

(i) identifying underlying interests;

(ii) isolating points of agreement and disagreement;

(iii) exploring alternative solutions; and

(iv) considering compromises or accommodations; and

(b) cooperate fully with the mediator and give prompt attention to, and respond to, all communications from the mediator.

(30) A mediator shall conduct a mediation with reference to Indigenous legal traditions and protocols, as set out in the Schedule, and may otherwise take any steps the mediator considers necessary and appropriate to assist the Participating Parties to resolve the Disagreement in a fair, efficient and cost-effective manner.

(31) Within seven (7) days of appointment of a mediator, each Participating Party may deliver a written summary to the mediator of the relevant facts, the issues in the Disagreement, and its viewpoint in respect of them and the mediator will deliver copies of the summaries to each Participating Party at the end of the seven-day period.

(32) A mediator may conduct a mediation in joint meetings or private caucus convened at locations the mediator designates after consulting the Participating Parties.

(33) Disclosures made by any Participating Party to a mediator in private caucus will not be disclosed by the mediator to any other Participating Party without the consent of the disclosing Participating Party.

(34) No transcript or recording will be kept of a mediation meeting but this does not prevent a person from keeping notes of the negotiations.

CONFIDENTIALITY

(35) In order to assist in the resolution of a Disagreement, mediations will not be open to the public, but this paragraph does not prevent leadership of the Underserviced First Nation and their representatives from attending.

(36) The Parties, and all persons, will keep confidential:

(a) all oral and written information disclosed in the mediation; and

(b) the fact that this information has been disclosed.

(37) The Participating Parties will not rely on or introduce as evidence in any proceeding, whether or not that proceeding relates to the subject matter of the mediation, any oral or written information disclosed in or arising from the mediation, including:

(a) any documents of other Participating Parties produced in the course of the mediation that are not otherwise produced or producible in that proceeding;

(b) any views expressed, or suggestions, or proposals made in respect of a possible settlement of the Disagreement;

(c) any admissions made by any Participating Party in the course of the mediation, unless otherwise stipulated by the admitting Participating Party;

(d) any recommendations for settlement made by the mediator; and

(e) the fact that any Participating Party has indicated a willingness to make or accept a proposal or recommendation for settlement.

(38) A mediator, or anyone retained or employed by the mediator, is not compellable in any proceeding to give evidence about any oral and written information acquired or opinion formed by that person as a result of the mediation, and all Participating Parties will oppose any effort to have that person or that information subpoenaed.

(39) A mediator, or anyone retained or employed by the mediator, is disqualified as a consultant or expert in any proceeding relating to the Disagreement, including any proceeding that involves persons not a Participating Party to the mediation.

REFERRAL OF ISSUES TO OTHER PROCESSES

(40) During a mediation the Participating Parties may agree to refer particular issues in the Disagreement to independent fact-finders, expert panels or other processes for opinions or findings that may assist them in the resolution of the Disagreement, and in that event, the Participating Parties will specify:

(a) the terms of reference for the process;

(b) the time within which the process will be concluded; and

(c) how the costs of the process are to be allocated to the Participating Parties.

(41) The time specified for concluding a mediation will be extended for fifteen (15) days following receipt of the findings or opinions rendered in a process described in paragraph (40).

RIGHT TO WITHDRAW

(42) A Participating Party may withdraw from a mediation at any time by giving notice of its intent to the mediator.

(43) Before a withdrawal is effective, the withdrawing Participating Party will:

(a) speak with the mediator;

(b) disclose its reasons for withdrawing; and

(c) give the mediator the opportunity to discuss the consequences of withdrawal.

TERMINATION OF MEDIATION

(44) A mediation is terminated when any of the following occurs:

(a) subject to paragraph (41), the expiration of sixty (60) days after the appointment of the last mediator appointed to assist the Parties in resolving the Disagreement, or any longer period agreed by the Participating Parties;

(b) the Participating Parties have agreed in writing to terminate the mediation or not to appoint a replacement mediator in accordance with paragraph (25);

(c) a Participating Party withdraws from the mediation in accordance with paragraph (42); or

(d) the Participating Parties sign a written agreement resolving the Disagreement.

MEDIATOR RECOMMENDATION

(45) If a mediation is terminated without an agreement between the Participating Parties, they may jointly request that the mediator give a written non-binding recommendation for settlement, but the mediator may decline the request without reasons.

(46) Within fifteen (15) days after delivery of a mediator's recommendation in accordance with paragraph (45), the Participating Parties will meet with the mediator to attempt to resolve the Disagreement.

COSTS

(47) Subject to paragraph (40), Canada shall pay for the reasonable costs of mediations conducted under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

APPENDIX K-3
Arbitration

DEFINITIONS

(48) In this Appendix:

(a) "Court" means the superior court of the province where the Reserve of the Underserviced First Nation underlying the Disagreement is located;

(b) "Applicant" means the Participating Party that delivered the notice of arbitration;

(c) "Arbitral Award" means any decision of the Arbitrator on the substance of the Disagreement submitted to it, and includes:

(i) an interim award; and

(ii) an award of interest;

(d) "Arbitral Agreement" includes

(i) the requirement to refer to arbitration Disagreements in accordance with this Schedule; and

(ii) an agreement of the Participating Parties to arbitrate a Disagreement;

(e) "Arbitrator" means a single arbitrator appointed in accordance with this Appendix;

(f) "Respondent" means a Participating Party other than the Applicant;

(49) A reference in this Appendix, other than in paragraph (96) or (118)(a), to a claim, applies to a counterclaim, and a reference in this Appendix to a defence, applies to a defence to a counterclaim.

(50) Notwithstanding any other provision in the Schedule, the Participating Parties may not vary paragraphs (63) or (108) of this Appendix.

COMMUNICATIONS

(51) Except in respect of administrative details, the Participating Parties will not communicate with the Arbitrator:

(a) orally, except in the presence of all other Participating Parties; or

(b) in writing, without immediately sending a copy of that communication to all other Participating Parties.

EXTENT OF JUDICIAL INTERVENTION

(52) In matters governed by this Appendix:

(a) no court will intervene except as provided in this Appendix or the Schedule; and

(b) no arbitral proceeding of an Arbitrator, or an order, ruling or Arbitral Award made by an Arbitrator will be appealed, questioned, reviewed, or restrained by a proceeding under any law except to the extent provided in this Appendix.

(c) the Participating Parties, to the greatest extent permitted by law, waive any right to appeal, question, review, or restrain arbitral proceeding of an Arbitrator, or an order, ruling or Arbitral Award made by an Arbitrator.

COMMENCEMENT OF ARBITRAL PROCEEDINGS

(53) The arbitral proceedings in respect of a Disagreement commences on delivery of the notice of arbitration by the Applicant to the Respondents ("Arbitration Notice").

NOTICE OF ARBITRATION

(54) An Arbitration Notice will be in writing and contain the following information:

(a) a statement of the subject matter or issues of the Disagreement;

(b) a requirement that the Disagreement be referred to arbitration;

(c) the remedy sought; and

(d) any preferred qualifications of the arbitrators.

(55) An Arbitration Notice may contain the names of any proposed arbitrators, including the information specified in paragraph (58).

ARBITRATOR

(56) In each arbitration, there will be one arbitrator.

APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATORS

(57) The Participating Parties will make good faith efforts to agree on the Arbitrator from the Roster of Arbitrators. If the Participating Parties fail to agree on the Arbitrator within fifteen (15) days after the commencement of the arbitration, the Participating Parties will ask the Courts or any one of them to appoint an arbitrator form the Roster of Arbitrators.

(58) In appointing an Arbitrator, the Courts will have due regard to:

(a) any qualifications required of the Arbitrator as set out in the Arbitration Notice or as otherwise agreed in writing by the Participating Parties; and

(b) any other considerations that are likely to secure the appointment of an independent and impartial Arbitrator.

TERMINATION OF MANDATE AND SUBSTITUTION OF ARBITRATOR

(59) The mandate of an Arbitrator terminates:

(a) if the Arbitrator withdraws from office for any reason; or

(b) by, or pursuant to, agreement of the Participating Parties.

(60) If the mandate of an Arbitrator terminates, a replacement arbitrator will be appointed in accordance with paragraph (57).

INTERIM MEASURES ORDERED BY ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL

(61) Unless otherwise agreed by the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator may, at the request of a Participating Party, order a Participating Party to take any interim measure of protection as the Arbitrator may consider necessary in respect of the subject matter of the Disagreement.

EQUAL TREATMENT OF PARTIES

(62) The Participating Parties will be treated with equality and each Participating Party will be given a full opportunity to present its case.

DETERMINATION OF RULES OF PROCEDURE

(63) Subject to the Schedule and this Appendix, the Participating Parties may agree on the procedure to be followed by the Arbitrator in conducting the proceedings.

(64) Failing any agreement in accordance with paragraph (63), the Arbitrator, subject to the Schedule and this Appendix, may conduct the arbitration in the manner they consider appropriate with due regard to the Indigenous legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation.

(65) The Arbitrator is not required to apply the legal rules of evidence, and may determine the admissibility, relevance, materiality and weight of any evidence. In accordance with the Schedule, the Arbitrator shall have due regard to the Indigenous legal traditions and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation in determining the presentation and admission of evidence.

(66) Subject only to the Schedule and the Indigenous laws and protocols of the Underserviced First Nation, the Arbitrator will make all reasonable efforts to conduct the arbitral proceedings in the most efficient, expeditious and cost effective manner as is appropriate in all the circumstances of the case.

(67) The Arbitrator may extend or abridge a period of time:

(a) set in this Appendix, except the period specified in paragraph (109); or

(b) established by the Arbitrator.

PRE-HEARING MEETING

(68) Within ten (10) days after the Arbitrator is appointed, the Arbitrator will convene a pre-hearing meeting of the Participating Parties to reach agreement and to make any necessary orders on

(a) any procedural issues arising in accordance with this Appendix;

(b) the procedure and community protocols to be followed in the arbitration;

(c) any elders or knowledge keepers who will sit with and advise the Arbitrator on community protocol and Indigenous law;

(d) the time periods for taking steps in the arbitration;

(e) the scheduling of hearings or meetings, if any;

(f) any preliminary applications or objections; and

(g) any other matter which will assist the arbitration to proceed in an efficient and expeditious manner.

(69) The Arbitrator will prepare and distribute promptly to the Participating Parties a written record of all the business transacted, and decisions and orders made, at the pre-hearing meeting.

(70) The pre-hearing meeting may be conducted by conference or videoconference call.

PLACE OF ARBITRATION

(71) As far as practicable the place of the arbitration shall be on or near the reserve of the Underserviced First Nation.

(72) An Arbitrator may

(a) with the consent of the Participating Parties, may meet at any other place it considers, for hearing witnesses, experts or the Participating Parties; and

(b) attend any place for inspection of documents, goods or other personal property, or for viewing physical locations.

LANGUAGE

(73) As far as practicable the conduct of the arbitration will promote the use of the Indigenous language of the Underserviced First Nation.

(74) Canada shall bear the costs of translation of oral presentations and proceedings, and of such documents as the Arbitrator may direct in the circumstances of a particular Disagreement.

STATEMENTS OF CLAIM AND DEFENCE

(75) Within twenty-one (21) days after the Arbitrator is appointed, the Underserviced First Nation, as Applicant will deliver its Remediation Plan and a written statement to Canada, the Respondent, stating the facts supporting its claim or position, the points at issue and the relief or remedy sought.

(76) Within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Applicant's statement, the Respondent will deliver a written statement to all the Participating Parties stating its defence or position in respect of those particulars.

(77) Each Participating Party will attach to its statement a list of documents:

(a) upon which the Participating Party intends to rely; and

(b) which describes each document by kind, date, author, addressee and subject matter.

(78) The Participating Parties may amend or supplement their statements, including the list of documents, unless the Arbitrator considers it inappropriate to allow the amendment, supplement or additional pleadings having regard to:

(a) the delay in making it; and

(b) any prejudice suffered by the other Participating Parties.

(79) The Participating Parties will deliver copies of all amended, supplemented or new documents delivered in accordance with paragraph (78) to all the Participating Parties.

DISCLOSURE

(80) The Arbitrator may order a Participating Party to produce, within a specified time, any documents that:

(a) have not been listed in accordance with paragraph (77);

(b) the Participating Party has in its care, custody or control; and

(c) the Arbitrator considers to be relevant.

(81) Each Participating Party will allow the other Participating Parties the necessary access at reasonable times to inspect and take copies of all documents that the Participating Party has listed in accordance with paragraph (77), or that the Arbitrator has ordered to be produced in accordance with paragraph (80).

(82) The Participating Parties will prepare and send to the Arbitrator an agreed statement of facts within the time specified by the Arbitrator, failing which the Parties will identify their differences and ask the arbitrator to decide the facts.

(83) Not later than twenty-one (21) days before a hearing commences, each Participating Party will give the other Participating Party:

(a) the name and address of any witness and a written summary or statement of the witness's evidence; and

(b) in the case of an expert witness, a written statement or report prepared by the expert witness.

(84) Not later than fifteen (15) days before a hearing commences, each Participating Party will give to the other Participating Party and the Arbitrator an assembly of all documents to be introduced at the hearing.

HEARINGS AND WRITTEN PROCEEDINGS

(85) Unless the Participating Parties have agreed that no hearings will be held, the Arbitrator will convene a hearing if so requested by a Participating Party.

(86) The Arbitrator will give the Participating Parties sufficient advance notice of any hearing and of any meeting of the Arbitrator for the purpose of inspection of documents, goods or other property or viewing any physical location.

(87) All statements, documents or other information supplied to, or applications made to, the Arbitrator by one Participating Party will be communicated to the other Participating Parties, and any expert report, evidentiary document or case law on which the Arbitrator may rely in making its decision will be communicated to the Participating Parties.

(88) Unless ordered by the Arbitrator, all hearings and meetings in arbitral proceedings, other than the Arbitrator's meetings, are open to the public.

(89) The Arbitrator will schedule hearings to be held on consecutive days until completion.

(90) All oral evidence will be taken in the presence of the Arbitrator and all the Participating Parties unless a Participating Party is absent by default or has waived the right to be present.

(91) The Arbitrator may order any individual to be examined by the Arbitrator under oath or on affirmation in relation to the Disagreement and to produce before the Arbitrator all relevant documents within the individual's care, custody or control.

(92) The document assemblies delivered in accordance with paragraph (84) will be deemed to have been entered into evidence at the hearing without further proof and without being read out at the hearing, but a Participating Party may challenge the admissibility of any document so introduced.

(93) If the Arbitrator considers it just and reasonable to do so, the Arbitrator may permit a document that was not previously listed in accordance with paragraph (77), or produced in accordance with paragraph (80) or (84), to be introduced at the hearing.

(94) If the Arbitrator permits the evidence of a witness to be presented as a written statement, the other Participating Party may require that witness to be made available for cross examination at the hearing.

(95) The Arbitrator may order a witness to appear and give evidence, and, in that event, the Participating Parties may cross examine that witness and call evidence in rebuttal.

DEFAULT OF A PARTY

(96) If, without explanation, the Applicant fails to communicate its statement of claim in accordance with paragraph (75), the Arbitrator may terminate the proceedings. If, without explanation, a Respondent fails to communicate its statement of defence in accordance with paragraph (76), the Arbitrator will continue the proceedings without treating that failure in itself as an admission of the Applicant's allegations.

(97) If, without showing sufficient cause, a Participating Party fails to appear at the hearing or to produce documentary evidence, the Arbitrator may continue the proceedings and make the Arbitral Award on the evidence before it.

(98) Before terminating the proceedings contemplated by paragraph (96), the Arbitrator will give all Parties written notice providing an opportunity to provide an explanation and to file a statement of claim in respect of the Disagreement within a specified period of time.

(99) For greater clarity, termination under paragraph (96) is without prejudice to the Applicant's ability to initiate new arbitration proceedings, without first returning to Stage 1 and 2 processes.

EXPERT APPOINTED BY ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL

(100) After consulting the Participating Parties, the Arbitrator may:

(a) appoint one or more experts to report to it on specific issues to be determined by the Arbitrator; and

(b) for that purpose, require a Participating Party to give the expert any relevant information or to produce, or to provide access to, any relevant documents, goods or other personal property or land for inspection or viewing.

(101) The Arbitrator will give a copy of the expert's report to the Participating Parties who will have an opportunity to reply to it.

(102) If a Participating Party so requests, or if the Arbitrator considers it necessary, the expert will, after delivery of a written or oral report, participate in a hearing where the Participating Parties will have the opportunity to cross-examine the expert and to call any evidence in rebuttal.

(103) The expert will, on the request of a Participating Party:

(a) make available to that Participating Party for examination all documents, goods or other property in the expert's possession, and provided to the expert in order to prepare a report; and

(b) provide that Participating Party with a list of all documents, goods or other personal property or land not in the expert's possession but which were provided to or given access to the expert, and a description of the location of those documents, goods or other personal property or lands.

LAW APPLICABLE TO SUBSTANCE OF DISPUTE

(104) An Arbitrator will decide the Disagreement in accordance with the law, including Indigenous law, and the Schedule.

(105) If the Participating Parties have expressly authorized it to do so, an Arbitrator may decide the Disagreement based upon equitable considerations.

(106) In all cases, an Arbitrator will make its decisions in accordance with the spirit and intent of the Agreement.

SETTLEMENT

(107) If, during arbitral proceedings, the Participating Parties settle the Disagreement, the Arbitrator will terminate the proceedings and, if requested by those Participating Parties, will record the settlement in the form of an Arbitral Award on agreed terms.

(108) An Arbitral Award on agreed terms:

(a) will be made in accordance with paragraphs (110) to (112);

(b) will state that it is an Arbitral Award; and

(c) has the same status and effect as any other Arbitral Award on the substance of the Disagreement.

FORM AND CONTENT OF ARBITRAL AWARD

(109) An Arbitrator will make its final Arbitral Award as soon as possible and, in any event, not later than sixty (60) days after:

(a) the hearings have been closed; or

(b) the final submission has been made, whichever is the later date.

(110) An Arbitral Award will be made in writing, and be signed by the Arbitrator.

(111) An Arbitral Award will state the reasons upon which it is based, unless:

(a) the Participating Parties have agreed that no reasons are to be given; or

(b) the award is an Arbitral Award on agreed terms contemplated by paragraphs (107) and(108).

(112) A signed copy of an Arbitral Award will be delivered to all the Participating Parties and the Joint Committee by the Arbitrator.

(113) At any time during the arbitral proceedings, an Arbitrator may make an interim Arbitral Award on any matter with respect to which it may make a final Arbitral Award.

(114) An Arbitrator may award interest.

(115) Unless an Arbitrator orders otherwise, Canada shall pay for the costs of an arbitration under this Appendix in accordance with Section 9.08 of the Agreement.

TERMINATION OF PROCEEDINGS

(116) An Arbitrator will close any hearings if:

(a) the Participating Parties advise they have no further evidence to give or submissions to make; or

(b) the Arbitrator considers further hearings to be unnecessary or inappropriate.

(117) A final Arbitral Award, or an order of the Arbitrator in accordance with paragraph (118), terminates arbitral proceedings.

(118) An Arbitrator will issue an order for the termination of the arbitral proceedings if:

(a) the Applicant withdraws its claim, unless the Respondent objects to the order and the Arbitrator recognizes a legitimate interest in obtaining a final settlement of the Disagreement;

(b) the Participating Parties agree on the termination of the proceedings; or

(c) the Arbitrator finds that the continuation of the proceedings has for any other reason become unnecessary or impossible.

(119) Subject to paragraphs (120) to (125), the mandate of an Arbitrator terminates with the termination of the arbitral proceedings.

CORRECTION AND INTERPRETATION OF AWARD; ADDITIONAL AWARD

(120) Within thirty (30) days after receipt of an Arbitral Award:

(a) a Participating Party may request the Arbitrator to correct in the Arbitral Award any computation errors, any clerical or typographical errors or any other errors of a similar nature; and

(b) a Participating Party may, if agreed by all the Participating Parties, request the Arbitrator to give an interpretation of a specific point or part of the Arbitral Award.

(121) If an Arbitrator considers a request made in accordance with paragraph (120) to be justified, it will make the correction or give the interpretation within thirty (30) days after receipt of the request and the interpretation will form part of the Arbitral Award.

(122) An Arbitrator, on its own initiative, may correct any error of the type referred to in sub-paragraph (120)(a) within thirty (30) days after the date of the Arbitral Award.

(123) A Participating Party may request, within thirty (30) days after receipt of an Arbitral Award, the Arbitrator to make an additional Arbitral Award respecting claims presented in the arbitral proceedings but omitted from the Arbitral Award.

(124) If the Arbitrator considers a request made in accordance with paragraph (123) to be justified, it will make an additional Arbitral Award within thirty (30) days.

(125) Paragraphs (110) to (112), and paragraphs (114) to (115), apply to a correction or interpretation of an Arbitral Award made in accordance with paragraph (121) or(122), or to an additional Arbitral Award made in accordance with paragraph (124).

NO APPEAL

(126) An Arbitral Award shall be final and binding on the Participating Parties and not subject to any appeal or review.

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT

(127) An Arbitral Award will be recognized as binding and, upon application to the Court, will be recognized and enforced.

(128) Unless the Court orders otherwise, the Participating Party relying on an Arbitral Award or applying for its enforcement will supply the duly authenticated original Arbitral Award or a duly certified copy of it.

- First Nation Class Members, consisting of First Nations that are members of the Class and provide the Administrator with notice of Acceptance. There are up to a total of 258 Impacted First Nations that could deliver notices of Acceptance and become First Nation Class Members.

Known Factors:

Known factors considered in designing this Notice Plan include:

1. The Reserves subject to Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories during the Class Period include Reserves in remote areas, posing additional communication challenges (for example, delays or limitations in delivery of mailed notice materials).

2. Education levels of Class Members vary widely, from members who have not completed high school to members with graduate-level university education.

3. Class Members speak a variety of languages, including English, French, and a number of Indigenous languages.

4. Impacted First Nations are geographically dispersed across Canada's provinces, with particular concentration in Ontario, British Columbia, and Manitoba.

5. 2016 census data indicates that approximately two thirds of First Nation people do not reside on Reserves.[1] Class Members who lived on impacted Reserves during the Class

[1] Aboriginal Identity (9), Residence by Aboriginal Geography (10), Registered or Treaty Indian Status (3), Age (20) and Sex (3) for the Population in Private Households of Canada, Provinces and Territories, 2016 Census - 25% Sample Data (table), Statistics Canada, 2016 Census- of Population, Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 98-400-X2016154. Ottawa. Released October 25, 2017.

Period may no longer reside on the Reserve with which their Claim is associated or in the same province or territory. Some Class Members may reside outside of Canada.

Strategies:

1. CA2 will give the "Settlement Notice" using the same notice plan that it used to give Certification Notice, as particularized further below. The form of the Settlement Notice will be substantially as set out in Schedule M, with such reasonable modifications as CA2 may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. CA2 will disseminate the Settlement Notice in a manner that is substantially similar to the way in which it disseminated the notice of certification of the Actions.

2. The Administrator will give the "Settlement Approval Notice" substantially in the form set out in Schedule N, with such reasonable amendments as the Administrator may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. The Settlement Approval Notice will advise Individual Class Members of the Claims Deadline and First Nation Class Members of the need to accept the settlement agreement. The Settlement Approval Notice will be disseminated by the following methods, as particularized further below:

    a. Direct mailed notice to Class member First Nations;

    b. A national press release;

    c. Live in-person and virtual community meetings for interested First Nation Class Members;

    d. Creation of an informational website providing access to copies of the Settlement Agreement, Claims Form, FAQs, and other informational resources, to be referenced in all notice materials and advertisements;

    e. Establishment of a national toll-free support line for Class Members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class Members to call for further information and support with Claims, to be cited in all notice materials and advertisements.

    f. Publication in newspapers and First Nation publications across the country

    g. Placement of 30- and 60-second television advertisements on APTN;

    h. Placement of 30- and 60-second radio advertisements on leading First Nation radio stations in all relevant regions;

    i. Social media/online advertisements to run on popular platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube;

    j. Translation of the notice into French, and all reasonable efforts to translate notice into Indigenous languages, as requested by Class Members; and

    k. Toll-free support line to assist members in making Claims.

3. The Administrator will give a "Reminder Notice" eight months after first publication of Settlement Approval Notice, using the same notice plan. The Reminder Notice will be in a form to be agreed by the Parties, acting reasonably, on the advice of the Administrator, and approved by the Courts.

4. The Administrator will give a "Late Claims Notice" in the event that late claims are permitted. The Late Claims Notice, if any, will use the same notice plan as the Settlement Approval Notice and the Reminder Notice, modified as the Administrator advises and the Courts approve to target those First Nations where participation has fallen below expectations.

5. Canada will be responsible for the cost of giving notice in accordance with this Notice Plan.

II. SETTLEMENT NOTICE PLAN

Short Form Notice of Settlement

Affected by Drinking Water Advisories on a Reserve?

A proposed settlement may affect you. Please read this notice carefully.
Pour lire cet avis en français: [•Settlement Website URL]

The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved this notice. This is not a solicitation from a lawyer.

First Nations and their members affected by drinking water advisories since November 20, 1995 sued Canada for compensation in two class actions. The representative plaintiff First Nations and their members and Canada have reached a proposed settlement.

If approved by the courts, the proposed settlement would compensate eligible First Nations and their members. Eligible individuals may receive a payment for the years they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory. It is expected that the per-year amount will vary from approximately $1,300 to $2,000 for eligible years. Additional amounts may be available to eligible individuals who suffered certain specified injuries as a result of using treated or tap water in accordance with a long-term drinking water advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a long-term drinking water advisory.

Each eligible First Nation that accepts the settlement will receive $500,000 plus half the amount paid to eligible individuals who ordinarily resided on that First Nation's reserve during a long-term drinking water advisory. Additionally, Canada will commit to make reasonable efforts to help ensure that eligible individuals have regular access to safe drinking water in their homes, and Canada will spend at least $6 billion on water and wastewater infrastructure on reserves.

If the settlement is approved by the courts, individuals and First Nations will give up their right to sue Canada for failing to provide safe drinking water on their reserves. Subject to court approval, the lawyers will be paid by Canada from a separately negotiated fund and not the money available for compensation.

The courts must approve the proposed settlement before there is any money or any other benefit available.

If you are eligible for compensation, your legal rights will be affected even if you do nothing.

You have three options:

1. Object in writing: Write to the courts if you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees and do not want them approved. If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits under the settlement.

2. Object in person: Ask to speak in court about why you do not like the proposed settlement or the lawyers' fees on [•date] by [•videoconference]. If the settlement is not approved, no one will get any benefits.

3. Do Nothing: Give up any right you have to object to the proposed settlement.

If you want to object or go to a hearing, you must act by [•date].

If you are a resident of the following First Nations: Oneida of the Thames; Deer Lake; Mitaanjigaming First Nation; North Caribou Lake; and Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation you my be able to exclude yourself from these class actions by writing to the Settlement Administrator by [●date].

To learn more about your options and determine if you or your First Nation is included, please visit: [●Settlement Website URL] or call [●Administrator phone number]

Additional Information for First Nations:

Eligible First Nations will not receive compensation unless they accept the proposed settlement by [●date]. First Nations who do not accept the proposed settlement by [●date] are not eligible for any benefits under the settlement agreement.

For more information about how to a First Nation can accept the settlement agreement, please visit [●Settlement Website URL] or call [●Administrator phone number].

This notice explains your rights and options and how to exercise them.

BASIC INFORMATION

WHY DID I GET NOTICE OF THIS PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

The Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba and the Federal Court of Canada approved this notice to let you know about the proposed settlement and your options before the courts decide whether to approve the settlement. Notice was provided to First Nations and their members who may be affected by the proposed settlement.

WHAT IS A CLASS ACTION?

In a class action, one or more people called "Plaintiffs" or "Representative Plaintiffs" sue on behalf of people who have similar claims. All of those people are called a "Class" or "Class Members". The courts resolve the issues for everyone affected.

The Representative Plaintiffs in the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba are Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence.

The Representative Plaintiffs in the Federal Court of Canada are (i) Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung and (ii) Neskantaga First Nation, Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias.

Canada is the defendant in both class actions. Canada is represented by the Attorney General of Canada.

WHAT ARE DRINKING WATER ADVISORIES?

Drinking water advisories mean that something is unsafe about drinking water. Drinking water advisories include boil water advisories, do not consume advisories, and do not use advisories.

WHAT ARE THE CLASS ACTIONS ABOUT?

The representative plaintiffs allege that Canada failed to address long-term drinking water advisories on First Nations reserves across Canada. The key allegation is that Canada breached its obligations to First Nations and their members by failing to ensure that reserve communities have safe water.

WHY IS THERE A PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

The Representative Plaintiffs and Canada have agreed to a proposed settlement. By agreeing to a proposed settlement, the parties avoid the costs and uncertainties of a trial and delays in obtaining judgment and Class members receive the benefits described in this notice (if the courts approve the proposed settlement).

The Representative Plaintiffs and their lawyers believe that the proposed settlement is in the best interests of all Class Members.

WHO IS INCLUDED IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

WHICH INDIVIDUALS ARE INCLUDED?

Individuals are included in the Class if:

1. they were alive on November 20, 2017;

2. they are members of a band, as defined in the Indian Act, or aboriginal peoples of Canada, other than the Inuit or Métis aboriginal peoples of Canada, who are parties to a modern treaty (a "First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act, the First Nations Land Management Act, or a modern treaty ("First Nations Lands"); and

3. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021, they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations") while such a drinking water advisory of at least one year was in effect.

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

WHO SHOULD INDIVIDUALS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [•Administrator email] or [•Administrator phone].

WHICH FIRST NATIONS ARE INCLUDED?

Impacted First Nations are eligible for compensation only if they accept the proposed settlement. Every Impacted First Nation that wants to participate must approve the settlement in a band council acceptance resolution and provide a copy of that resolution to the Settlement Administrator at [•Administrator email] or [•Administrator mailing address].

First Nations must accept the proposed settlement by [•date for Acceptance Deadline] to participate. The Settlement Administrator can provide you with the form of band council acceptance resolution that is required to accept the proposed settlement.

WHO SHOULD FIRST NATIONS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [•Administrator email] or [•Administrator phone].

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF THE SETTLEMENT?

WHAT COMPENSATION WILL BE PAID UNDER THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT IF THE COURTS APPROVE IT?

Individuals may receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a drinking water advisory. The per-year amount is expected to vary from $1,300 to $2,000 depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods: individuals who reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, are eligible for compensation only back to November 20, 2013, unless they were incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their claim before November 20, 2013, because of their physical, mental or psychological condition.

Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [●URL].

WHAT ARE THE OTHER BENEFITS FOR FIRST NATIONS AND THEIR MEMBERS IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

1. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of long-term drinking water advisories that affect the Class.

2. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to ensure that class members living on reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion by March 31, 2030 to implement that commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves.

3. Canada has agreed to an alternative dispute resolution framework to decide what additional measures are reasonably required to help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes.

4. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 by March 31, 2022 and replace it with legislation that improves drinking water on First Nations reserves.

5. Canada has agreed to provide $20 million to create the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water.

6. Canada has agreed to make available $9 million to fund First Nations governance initiatives and by-law developments.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [●URL].

WHEN WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Nothing will be paid unless the courts approve the proposed settlement. Payment of the base payment to First Nations will be made within 90 days of the settlement approval order becoming final. The remaining payments to individuals and First Nations will begin to be paid one year after the settlement approval order becomes final.

HOW WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals and First Nations eligible for compensation must submit their claims to the Settlement Administrator to receive payment. No claims forms will be available until the courts approve the proposed settlement.

HOW WILL THE LAWYERS BE PAID?

The lawyers who represent the plaintiffs will ask the courts to agree that Canada can pay them from a separately-negotiated fund that will not be deducted from the money available to pay individuals or First Nations. The amount of the fund is $53 million for fees and disbursements, inclusive of taxes, plus $5 million for ongoing legal services.

The lawyers will not be paid until the courts decide that the fees requested are fair and reasonable. The courts will decide how much the lawyers should be paid.

WHAT AM I GIVING UP IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

If the courts approve the settlement, you will give up your right to sue Canada for the claims resolved by the proposed settlement. That means you will not be able to sue Canada for damages incurred before June 20, 2021 that arise from Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water on your reserve.

First Nations who do not accept the proposed settlement are not bound by it (though their Members will be).

CAN I REMOVE MYSELF FROM THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Individuals cannot remove themselves from the settlement without court approval. Class counsel will not help individuals opt out. Individuals who want to opt out should consult a different lawyer.

However, if you are a resident of the following First Nations: Oneida of the Thames; Deer Lake; Mitaanjigaming First Nation; North Caribou Lake; and Ministikwan Lake Cree Nation you may be able to exclude yourself from these class actions by writing to the Settlement Administrator by [•date].

First Nations do not need to agree to the proposed settlement. If a First Nation does not accept the proposed settlement, the proposed settlement will not affect that First Nation.

WHO REPRESENTS ME?

WHO ARE THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING ME?

The Representative Plaintiffs and the Class are represented by McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP ("Class Counsel"). You may contact class counsel at [• contact address].

DO I HAVE TO PAY CLASS COUNSEL?

No. Class counsel will ask the courts to approve their fees.

WHAT IF I WANT MY OWN LAWYER?

If you want to hire your own lawyer, you may do so at your own expense.

HOW DO I OBJECT TO THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

HOW DO I TELL THE COURTS I DO NOT LIKE THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

If you do not like some part of the proposed settlement, including the lawyers' fees, you may object. The courts will consider your views. To object, your must submit an objection form that includes the following:

1. your name, address, phone number, and email address;
2. a statement saying you object to the proposed settlement;
3. the reasons you object to the proposed settlement;
4. the First Nation you are a member of and the reserve on which you ordinarily reside; and
5. your signature.

You must mail or email your objection by [•date] to [•Administrator email address] or [•Administrator mailing address].

WHEN AND WHERE WILL THE COURTS DECIDE WHETHER TO APPROVE THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

The courts will hold a joint hearing on [•date] at [•time]. You may attend by [•videoconference or teleconference].

DO I HAVE TO ATTEND COURT TO OBJECT?

No. If you send an objection you do not have to talk about it in court. The courts will consider objections received in time even if you do not attend the hearing. You or your lawyer may attend by [•videoconference or teleconference] at your own expense.

MAY I SPEAK AT THE HEARING?

You may ask the courts for permission to speak at the approval hearings. To do so, you must file a notice of objection and indicate you wish to speak.

WHAT IF I DO NOTHING?

Individuals who are eligible for the proposed settlement who do nothing will be bound by the settlement if the courts approve it. Those individuals will be eligible for compensation but will give up their right to object to the settlement.

First Nations who are eligible for the proposed settlement who do nothing will not be bound by the proposed settlement if the courts approve it. Those First Nations will not be eligible for compensation and will give up their right to object to the settlement.

If the settlement is approved, individuals, together with First Nations that accept the settlement, will give up their right to sue Canada for failing to provide safe drinking water on their reserves.

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Short Form Notice of Settlement Approval

Settlement of First Nation Drinking Water Advisory Class Actions

You may be eligible for compensation. Please read this notice carefully.
Pour lire cet avis en français: [•Settlement Website URL]

The courts have approved a settlement between Canada and certain First Nations and their members who were subjected to long-term drinking water advisories from 1995 to 2021.

Who is included?

Individuals are included in the Class if:

1. they were alive on November 20, 2017;

2. they are members of a band, as defined in the Indian Act, or aboriginal peoples of Canada, other than the Inuit or Métis aboriginal peoples of Canada, who are parties to a modern treaty (a "First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act, the First Nations Land Management Act, or a modern treaty ("First Nations Lands"); and

3. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021, they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations") while such a drinking water advisory of at least one year was in effect.

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

Impacted First Nations are included if they accept the settlement by [•date]. Impacted First Nations who do not accept the settlement by then will not be compensated.

What does the settlement provide?

Individuals will receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a drinking water advisory. The per-year amount is expected to vary from $1,300 to $2,000 for eligible years, depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods. Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

Canada must also take other steps to lift long-term drinking water advisories and help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion on water and wastewater infrastructure on reserves. There is an alternative dispute resolution process available where individuals are unhappy with Canada's efforts.

How do I claim money?

Individuals must submit a claims form, or their band council can submit a resolution, confirming that they were ordinarily resident on that First Nation's First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory. First Nations must accept the settlement and inform the Settlement Administrator. To view and submit claims forms please visit [●URL].

1. they were alive on November 20, 2017;

2. they are members of a band, as defined in the Indian Act, or aboriginal peoples of Canada, other than the Inuit or Métis aboriginal peoples of Canada, who are parties to a modern treaty (a "First Nation"), the disposition of whose lands is subject to that Act, the First Nations Land Management Act or a modern treaty ("First Nations Lands"); and

3. for at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021, they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands that were subject to a drinking water advisory (whether a boil water, do not consume, or do not use advisory, or the like) that lasted at least one year between November 20, 1995, and June 30, 2021 ("Impacted First Nations") while such a drinking water advisory of at least one year was in effect.

Individuals who are included are eligible for compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement.

WHO SHOULD INDIVIDUALS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

The Settlement Administrator at [●Administrator email] or [●Administrator phone].

WHICH FIRST NATIONS ARE INCLUDED?

Impacted First Nations are eligible for compensation only if they accept the proposed settlement. Every Impacted First Nation that wants to participate must accept the settlement in a Band Council Acceptance Resolution and provide a copy of that resolution to the Settlement Administrator at [●Administrator email] or [●Administrator mailing address].

Impacted First Nations must accept the proposed settlement by [●date] to participate. The Settlement Administrator can provide you with the form of Band Council Acceptance Resolution that is required to accept the proposed settlement.

WHO SHOULD FIRST NATIONS WITH QUESTIONS CONTACT?

Class Counsel at [● contact address].

HOW DO I GET COMPENSATION?

WHAT CAN CLASS MEMBERS GET?

Individuals may receive a payment for each year they ordinarily resided on First Nations Lands while under a long-term drinking water advisory. It is expected that the amount will vary from approximately $1,300 to $2,000 for each eligible year, depending on the type of advisory and the remoteness of the First Nation Lands. These amounts are subject to limitation periods: individuals who reached the age of 18 before November 20, 2013, are only eligible for compensation going back to November 20, 2013, unless they were incapable of commencing a proceeding in respect of their claim before November 20, 2013, because of their physical, mental or psychological condition.

Individuals with specific injuries may be eligible for additional compensation.

Impacted First Nations who accept the proposed settlement will receive $500,000 plus 50% of the amounts paid to individuals for drinking water advisories on their reserves.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [●URL].

WHAT ARE THE OTHER BENEFITS FOR FIRST NATIONS AND THEIR MEMBERS IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

1. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to support the removal of long-term drinking water advisories that affect the Class.

2. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to ensure that class members living on reserves have regular access to drinking water in their homes. Canada will spend at least $6 billion by March 31, 2030 to implement that commitment by funding the actual cost of construction, upgrading, operation, and maintenance of water infrastructure on reserves.

3. Canada has agreed to an alternative dispute resolution framework to decide what additional measures are reasonably required to help individuals get regular access to safe drinking water in their homes.

4. Canada has agreed to make all reasonable efforts to repeal the Safe Drinking Water for First Nations Act, S.C. 2013, c. 21 by March 31, 2022 and replace it with legislation that improves drinking water on First Nations reserves.

5. Canada has agreed to provide $20 million to create the First Nations Advisory Committee on Safe Drinking Water.

6. Canada has agreed to make available $9 million to fund First Nations governance initiatives and by-law developments.

For more details, please consult the proposed settlement available here: [•URL].

WHEN WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals can submit claims forms until [• date]. After the claims period ends, the Settlement Administrator will pay valid claims for compensation.

First Nations will be paid the $500,000 base payment within 90 days of their acceptance or the Courts' approval of the settlement agreement, whichever comes first. Every six months, each First Nation will receive an installment of 50% of the amounts paid to eligible individuals who ordinarily resided on that First Nation's reserve during a long-term drinking water advisory.

HOW WILL INDIVIDUALS AND FIRST NATIONS RECEIVE COMPENSATION?

Individuals must submit a claims form, or their band council can submit a resolution, confirming that they were ordinarily resident on that First Nation's First Nations Lands during a long-term drinking water advisory.

First Nations must accept the settlement and inform the Settlement Administrator. To view and submit claims forms please visit [•URL].

Individuals can receive compensation even if their First Nation, or the First Nation on whose First Nation Lands they resided, does not accept the settlement agreement.

Claims forms are available here [•URL] and may be submitted to the Settlement Administrator at [•Administrator email] or [•Administrator mailing address].

DO I NEED MY OWN LAWYER TO MAKE A CLAIM?

No. Class Counsel represent you. You may contact class counsel at [• contact address].

HOW WILL THE LAWYERS BE PAID?

Canada, rather than class members, will pay the Class Counsel's fees for prosecuting the class actions and continuing to assist individuals and First Nations. The courts have approved the lawyers' fees and you do not have to pay any money to make a claim.

WHAT AM I GIVING UP IN THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Class members are giving up their right to sue Canada for the claims resolved by the proposed settlement. That means you will not be able to sue Canada for damages incurred before June 20, 2021 that were caused by Canada's failure to provide safe drinking water on your reserve.

First Nations that do not accept the proposed settlement will not be not bound by it, although their members' individual claims will be covered by the settlement.

CAN I REMOVE MYSELF FROM THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Individuals generally cannot remove themselves from the settlement without court approval. Class Counsel are not able to help individuals opt out. Individuals who want to seek leave of the Courts to opt out should consult a different lawyer.

First Nations do not need to agree to the settlement. If a First Nation does not accept the settlement, the settlement will not resolve the collective or communal claims of that First Nation.

You are not required to submit a claim but if you do not opt out and do not submit a claim, and a band does not provide the Settlement Administrator with confirmation of your residence, you will not receive compensation and you will still give up your right to sue Canada.

WHO REPRESENTS ME?

WHO ARE THE LAWYERS REPRESENTING ME?

The Representative Plaintiffs and the Class are represented by McCarthy Tétrault LLP and Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP ("Class Counsel"). You may contact Class Counsel at [●contact address].

DO I HAVE TO PAY CLASS COUNSEL?

No. The courts approved Class Counsel's fees.

WHAT IF I WANT MY OWN LAWYER?

If you want to hire your own lawyer, you may do so at your own expense.

HOW DO FIRST NATIONS ACCEPT THE SETTLEMENT?

First Nations who are eligible for the settlement must accept it in a Band Council Acceptance Resolution and provide a copy to the Settlement Administrator by [●date].

More information—including a draft Band Council Acceptance Resolution is available here: [●URL].

You may also direct questions to Class Counsel at [● contact address].

WHO DO FIRST NATIONS CONTACT TO ACCEPT THE SETTLEMENT?

First Nations with questions should contact Class Counsel at [● contact address].

First Nations who have a Band Council Acceptance Resolution accepting the settlement agreement should provide a copy to the Settlement Administrator by [•date] at [•Administrator email address] or [•Administrator mailing address].

WHO DO I CONTACT FOR MORE INFORMATION?

You may contact the Settlement Administrator at [•Administrator email address] or [•phone number].

You may also contact Class Counsel at [• contact address].

SCHEDULE Q

ELIGIBLE CLASS MEMBER ADDRESS SEARCH PLAN

1. If the Administrator receives a Band Council Confirmation or a Claims Form that does not provide a legible mailing address for an Individual Class Member, or an Individual Class Member has not deposited a cheque or claimed a payment made in accordance with the Agreement within one hundred and eighty (180) days of such cheque or payment being issued, such Individual Class Member will be a "Missing Eligible Class Member", and the date of becoming a Missing Eligible Class Member will be the "Search Commencement Date".

2. For each Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will conduct or cause to be conducted all of the following searches in order to find the Missing Eligible Class Member's current contact information:

(a) Canadian national change of address database;

(b) reverse phone number lookup;

(c) Canada 411;

(d) consult any contact information for such Missing Eligible Class Member in a Band Council Confirmation, if any, and make a written or telephonic request for such Missing Eligible Class Member's contact information from the band office of the First Nation where such Missing Eligible Class Member ordinarily resides or last resided, if any; and

(e) make a written or telephonic request for such Missing Eligible Class Member's contact information from the band office of the First Nation of which such Missing Eligible Class Member is a member, if different than paragraph 2(d), above.

3. The searches identified in paragraph 2, above, will be conducted within forty-five (45) days of the Search Commencement Date.

4. If the Administrator locates more than one new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will make reasonable inquiries to determine which address is correct.

5. If the Administrator locates a new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, the Administrator will issue and mail a new cheque or other form of payment to the Missing Eligible Class Member for any amount payable in accordance with this Agreement, which cheque or payment will be stale dated within ninety (90) days of issuance. If a cheque or other form of payment had been previously issued to the Missing Eligible Class Member but not deposited or claimed, the Administrator will cancel or rescind such prior payment prior to issuance of the new cheque or other payment.

6. If the Administrator does not locate a new mailing address for a Missing Eligible Class Member, but such Missing Eligible Class Member's Claims Form indicates that they are currently resident on a Reserve, the Administrator will issue and mail to such Missing Eligible Class Member, care of the band office or similar place on such Reserve, a new cheque or other form of payment for any amount payable in accordance with this Agreement, which cheque or payment will be stale dated within ninety (90) days of issuance. If a cheque or other form of payment had been previously issued to the Missing Eligible Class Member but not deposited or claimed, the Administrator shall cancel or rescind such prior payment prior to issuance of the new cheque or other payment.

8. If the Administrator remains unable to locate a Missing Eligible Class Member despite complying with this Eligible Class Member Search Plan, and any cheque or payment to such Missing Eligible Class Member has become stale dated, the Administrator shall wait for a period of one hundred and eighty (180) days (the conclusion of which is the "Search Cancellation Date)". If the Administrator is still unable to locate the Missing Eligible Class Member on the Search Cancellation Date, the Missing Eligible Class Member's Claim will be fully and finally extinguished and discharged, the Administrator shall have no obligation to make any payment to such Missing Eligible Class Member, and the Administrator, Canada, counsel for Canada, Class Counsel, the Joint Committee and its members, the Settlement Implementation Committee and its Members, the Trustee, and the FNAC will be released from any liability.

Class Proceeding commenced under Part 5.1 of the Federal Court Rules, SOR/98-106

FIRST ADDENDUM TO THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This addendum (the "Addendum") is made as of October 8, 2021.

WHEREAS:

A. Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence, on their own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members (together, the "Manitoba Action Plaintiffs"), Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung, on their own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members(together, the "Curve Lake First Nation Plaintiffs"), Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Wayne Moonias and Former Chief Christopher Moonias, each on his own behalf and on behalf of all Individual Class Members (together, the "Neskantaga First Nation Plaintiffs", and collectively with the Curve Lake First Nation Plaintiffs, the "Federal Action Plaintiffs") and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada (all of the foregoing, collectively, the "Parties") entered into a settlement agreement dated September 15, 2021 (the "Settlement Agreement"); and

B. The Parties wish to amend the Settlement Agreement to clarify the availability of Specified Injuries Compensation;

NOW THEREFORE the Parties agree to amend the Settlement Agreement as follows:

1. Capitalized terms used but not defined herein shall have the meanings set out in the Settlement Agreement.

2. Section 8.02(2) of the Settlement Agreement is hereby amended to add the words "Specified Injuries Compensation shall only be paid if the Individual Class Member experienced a Specified Injury or the continuing symptoms of an earlier Specified Injury, as set out in Schedule H, during a year for which Individual Damages would be payable to the Individual Class Member in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula in Section 8.01(2) if it were an Advisory Year (but which, for greater certainty, is not required to have been an Advisory Year)." at the end of the paragraph, as follows:

> Confirmed Individual Class Members will be entitled to compensation for Specified Injuries in the amount set out in Schedule H (the "Specified Injuries Compensation"), provided that the Claimant establishes that the injury was caused by using treated or tap water in accordance with a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, or by restricted access to treated or tap water caused by a Long-Term Drinking Water Advisory, in accordance with the Claims Process and Schedule H. Specified Injuries Compensation shall only be paid if the Individual Class Member experienced a Specified Injury or the continuing symptoms of an earlier Specified Injury, as set out in Schedule H, during a year for which Individual Damages would be payable to the Individual Class Member in accordance with the Individual Damages Formula in Section 8.01(2) if it were an Advisory Year (but which, for greater certainty, is not required to have been an Advisory Year).

3. Sections 1.12, 1.13, 1.14, 1.15, 2.01 and 2.02 of the Settlement Agreement are incorporated by reference herein and shall apply to this Addendum.

4. Section 16.12(1) of the Settlement Agreement is hereby amended to replace the words "section 81(g.3) of the Income Tax Act" with "section 81(1)(g.3) of the Income Tax Act".

5. The Parties, by their counsel, agree that this Addendum shall be incorporated into the Settlement Agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned have executed this Addendum on behalf of the Parties as of the date first written above.

PREMIÈRE NATION DE CURVE LAKE et CHEFFE EMILY WHETUNG, pour son propre compte et pour le compte de toutes les PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE (au sens des présentes), (collectivement, les « demandeurs de la Première Nation de Curve Lake »),

ET

PREMIÈRE NATION DE NESKANTAGA et CHEF WAYNE MOONIAS et ANCIEN CHEF CHRISTOPHER MOONIAS, chacun pour son propre compte et pour le compte de toutes les PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE (au sens des présentes),

ET

SA MAJESTÉ LA REINE DU CHEF DU CANADA,

(le « Canada »).

ATTENDU QUE :

A. Le 11 octobre 2019, les demandeurs de l'action devant la Cour fédérale ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier T-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale (l'« action devant la Cour fédérale »);

B. Le 20 novembre 2019, les demandeurs de l'action au Manitoba ont introduit l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier CI-19-01-24661 devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba (l'« action au Manitoba » et, collectivement avec l'action devant la Cour fédérale, les « actions »);

C. Le 14 juillet 2020, la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba a attesté l'action au Manitoba à titre de recours collectif et le 8 octobre 2020, la Cour fédérale a autorisé l'action devant la Cour fédérale à titre de recours collectif;

D. Le « groupe » de chacune des actions est ainsi défini :

a) toutes les personnes, sauf les personnes exclues :

(i) qui sont membres d'une Première Nation;

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

(iii) qui au cours de la période visée ont résidé habituellement pendant au moins un an dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme; et

b) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation qui donne un avis d'acceptation conformément aux conditions de la présente entente;

E. L'avis d'autorisation des actions a été donné en la forme approuvée par les tribunaux et de la manière ordonnée par les tribunaux. Les personnes membres du groupe ont eu la possibilité de s'exclure du groupe pendant une période de cent vingt (120) jours après la première publication de l'avis d'autorisation (la « période d'exclusion »);

F. La période d'exclusion a expiré le 29 mars 2021. Aucune personne membre du groupe ne s'est exclue des actions;

G. Le groupe a subi d'énormes préjudices en étant privé d'eau potable salubre et les personnes et collectivités touchées en ont gravement souffert;

H. Le Canada reconnaît les préjudices dont ont souffert les membres du groupe et souhaite aider les membres du groupe à assurer un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable salubre;

I. Les avocats du groupe et le Canada ont conclu une entente de principe intervenue le 20 juin 2021, qui énonce en principe les conditions auxquelles le Canada est disposé à régler les actions et auxquelles les avocats du groupe recommanderaient aux demandeurs de l'action au Manitoba et aux demandeurs de l'action devant la Cour fédérale (collectivement, les « représentants demandeurs »);

J. Le chef Wayne Moonias a succédé à Christopher Moonias en tant que chef de la Première Nation de Neskantaga et demandera à la Cour fédérale l'autorisation de le remplacer en tant que représentant;

K. Les représentants demandeurs et le Canada ont conclu une entente de principe intervenue le 29 juillet 2021, qui énonce les principales conditions de leur entente de règlement des actions et qui constitue le fondement de la présente entente;

L. Dans le cadre de la rédaction de la présente entente, les parties :

a) ont l'intention d'en faire un règlement juste, global et durable des réclamations relatives à la privation d'eau potable salubre des membres du groupe et aux préjudices connexes dont ils ont souffert;

b) souhaitent la mise en œuvre de mesures concrètes pour empêcher que les membres du groupe ne souffrent de nouveau de ces préjudices;

c) reconnaissent l'importance de fournir aux Premières Nations des fonds pour des projets liés à l'approvisionnement en eau et au traitement des eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles, et respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation de ces fonds;

d) souhaitent promouvoir la guérison, l'éducation, la commémoration et la réconciliation; et

e) ont l'intention d'inclure les Premières Nations signataires d'un traité moderne, selon le cas, mais reconnaissent le caractère unique de chaque Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne, de ses terres, de ses peuples et de ses relations avec le Canada, et conviennent par conséquent que les modalités précises de la participation d'une Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne seront élaborées en consultation avec les parties et la Première Nation signataire d'un traité moderne visée.

PAR CONSÉQUENT, en contrepartie des ententes, des accords et des engagements réciproques énoncés dans les présentes, les parties conviennent de ce qui suit :

1.02 Titres

La division de la présente entente en articles et en paragraphes et l'utilisation de titres ne visent qu'à en faciliter la consultation et ne sauraient influer sur son interprétation.

1.03 Sens large

Dans la présente entente, le singulier s'entend du pluriel et inversement, le masculin s'entend du féminin et inversement, et le terme « personnes » s'entend, également des Premières Nations. Le terme « y compris » s'entend au sens de « y compris, sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède ». Tout renvoi à un ministère ou à un poste du gouvernement s'entend également de tout ministère ou poste du gouvernement remplaçant.

1.04 Interprétation

Les parties reconnaissent qu'elles ont examiné les conditions de la présente entente et ont participé à leur établissement et conviennent qu'il n'existe aucune règle d'interprétation par inférence selon laquelle toute ambiguïté dans la présente entente doit être interprétée en faveur d'une partie en particulier.

1.05 Législation citée

À moins que l'objet ou le contexte ne s'y oppose ou sauf disposition contraire, dans la présente entente, un renvoi à une législation et à son règlement d'application renvoie à cette législation et à son règlement d'application en leur version alors en vigueur et non pas en leur version le cas échéant modifiée, remise en vigueur ou remplacée.

1.06 Date prévue d'une mesure à prendre

Si une mesure doit être prise aux termes des présentes un jour ou au plus tard un jour qui n'est pas un jour ouvrable, cette mesure peut être prise le jour ouvrable suivant.

1.07 Monnaie

Dans la présente entente, le numéraire est exprimé en monnaie légale du Canada.

ANNEXE N	Avis d'approbation de l'entente de règlement (formulaires détaillé et simplifié)

ANNEXE O Modèle de l'ordonnance d'autorisation de la Cour fédérale et de l'ordonnance d'attestation du Manitoba

ANNEXE P Modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés dans la réserve

ANNEXE Q Plan de recherche d'adresse de membres du groupe admissibles

1.10 Aucun effet sur les traités ou les accords existants

Aucune disposition de la présente entente n'annule ni ne remplace un traité entre le Canada et un ou plusieurs membres du groupe, ou un accord existant entre le Canada et un ou plusieurs membres du groupe à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou de questions analogues, à l'exception de l'entente de principe, que la présente entente remplace.

1.11 Aucune dérogation aux droits constitutionnels

La présente entente doit être interprétée comme une entente confirmant les droits des peuples autochtones reconnus et affirmés par l'article 35 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et non pas comme une entente les abrogeant ou y dérogeant.

1.12 Avantage de l'entente

La présente entente lie les parties, et dans le cas du Canada et des Premières Nations membres du groupe, leurs successeurs respectifs et, dans le cas des personnes membres du groupe, leurs successions, héritiers, exécuteurs testamentaires, demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux et représentants personnels, et elle est faite à leur avantage.

1.13 Droit applicable

La présente entente est régie par la législation du Canada et par la législation du Manitoba, selon le cas, ou encore, au choix d'un membre, par la législation du Canada et par la législation de la province ou du territoire où le membre réside habituellement, selon le cas.

1.14 Exemplaires

La présente entente peut être signée par voie électronique et en plusieurs exemplaires, dont chacun est réputé être un original et dont l'ensemble est réputé constituer une seule et même entente.

1.15 Langues officielles

Comme il est indiqué dans la version anglaise de la présente entente, les avocats du groupe préparent la présente traduction française aux fins d'audition de l'approbation du règlement. Après le prononcé des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, la présente version française a le même poids et la même force exécutoire que la version anglaise.

1.16 Rôle de supervision continue des tribunaux

Par dérogation à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente, les tribunaux restent compétents quant à la supervision de la mise en œuvre de la présente entente conformément à ses conditions, y compris, notamment l'adoption de protocoles et d'énoncés de procédure, et les parties reconnaissent la compétence des tribunaux à cette fin. Les tribunaux peuvent donner les directives ou rendre les ordonnances nécessaires pour l'application du présent article.

ARTICLE 2 – DATE DE PRISE D'EFFET DE L'ENTENTE

2.01 Date à laquelle l'entente prend effet et devient exécutoire

À la date de mise en œuvre, la présente entente devient exécutoire pour toutes les personnes membres du groupe. La présente entente devient exécutoire pour toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe a) à la date de son acceptation par les Premières Nations ou, si elle est postérieure b) à la date de mise en œuvre. Si une Première Nation membre du groupe ne donne pas un avis d'acceptation au plus tard à la date limite pour l'acceptation, la présente entente n'est pas exécutoire pour la Première Nation membre du groupe et la Première Nation membre du groupe n'a droit à aucun avantage aux termes des présentes, à moins que les tribunaux n'en décident autrement.

2.02 Prise d'effet au moment de l'approbation

Sous réserve de l'article 2.03, aucune des dispositions de la présente entente ne prend effet tant que les tribunaux n'ont pas approuvé la présente entente.

2.03 Frais de justice dissociés

Les honoraires des avocats du groupe dans le cadre des actions ont été négociés séparément de la présente entente et demeurent assujettis à l'approbation des tribunaux. Le refus des tribunaux d'approuver les honoraires des avocats du groupe n'a aucune incidence sur la mise en œuvre de la présente entente. Dans l'éventualité où les tribunaux refusent d'approuver les honoraires des avocats du groupe prévus à l'article 18.01, a) les autres dispositions de la présente entente demeurent pleinement en vigueur et ne sont aucunement modifiées ou invalidées, et b) l'article 18.01 est modifié compte tenu des honoraires des avocats du groupe approuvés par les tribunaux et par ailleurs de l'intention originale des parties.

ARTICLE 3 – ADMINISTRATION

3.01 Nomination de l'administrateur

Sur la recommandation des parties, les tribunaux nomment un administrateur chargé d'administrer la procédure de règlement des réclamations et investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités énoncés à l'article 3.02 et des autres pouvoirs, droits, attributions et responsabilités déterminés par le comité mixte et approuvés par les tribunaux. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent à tout moment remplacer l'administrateur.

3.02 Attributions de l'administrateur

L'administrateur est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

a) élaborer, mettre en place et mettre en œuvre des systèmes, des formulaires, de l'information, des lignes directrices et des procédures pour le traitement des réclamations et prendre des décisions concernant les réclamations conformément à la présente entente;

b) élaborer, mettre en place et mettre en œuvre des systèmes et des procédures de paiement des indemnités conformément à la présente entente;

c) recevoir des fonds de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et du fiduciaire pour effectuer des paiements aux membres du groupe conformément à la présente entente;

d) fournir le personnel en nombre raisonnable requis pour l'exercice de ses fonctions aux termes de la présente entente, et former et diriger ce personnel;

e) conserver des liaisons avec les collectivités des Premières Nations touchées et des liaisons avec les conseils tribaux afin de faciliter la mise en œuvre du plan de notification et de la procédure de règlement des réclamations;

f) tenir ou veiller à ce que soient tenus des comptes exacts de ses activités et de son administration et établir les états financiers, rapports et dossiers exigés par les tribunaux;

g) rendre compte chaque mois au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement de ce qui suit :

(i) les réclamations reçues et ayant fait l'objet d'une décision;

(ii) les réclamations réputées non admissibles et les raisons de cette décision; et

(iii) les appels des décisions de l'administrateur et les résultats de ces appels;

h) répondre aux demandes de renseignements concernant les réclamations et les formulaires de réclamation;

i) examiner les formulaires de réclamation et les confirmations du conseil de bande et déterminer, sous réserve du paragraphe 7.02(2) dans le cas d'une confirmation du conseil de bande :

(i) l'adhésion au groupe d'un demandeur d'indemnité;

(ii) les dates auxquelles et les endroits où le demandeur d'indemnité était un résident habituel;

(iii) le droit d'un demandeur d'indemnité à des dommages-intérêts individuels, le cas échéant; et

(iv) le droit d'un demandeur d'indemnité à une indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, le cas échéant;

j) examiner les acceptations et déterminer si une Première Nation qui soumet une acceptation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe et le droit de chaque Première Nation membre du groupe à des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, le cas échéant;

k) donner avis des décisions prises conformément à la présente entente;

l) communiquer avec les demandeurs d'indemnité soit en anglais soit en français, au choix du demandeur d'indemnité, et si un demandeur d'indemnité exprime le désir de communiquer dans une autre langue que l'anglais ou le français, faire de son mieux pour l'accommoder; et

m) exercer les autres attributions et responsabilités que les tribunaux ou les parties peuvent de temps à autre demander.

3.03 Nomination du tiers évaluateur

Sur la recommandation des parties, les tribunaux nomment un ou plusieurs tiers évaluateurs. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer un tiers évaluateur à tout moment. Le tiers évaluateur exerce les fonctions de tiers évaluateur énoncées dans la présente entente.

3.04 Responsabilité des frais

Le Canada paie :

a) les frais de remise d'un avis conformément au plan de notification et de tout autre avis ordonné par les tribunaux;

b) les frais et débours raisonnables de l'administrateur, du tiers évaluateur, du fiduciaire, de l'auditeur et du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement (sauf les membres du comité mixte), jusqu'à concurrence de cinquante millions de dollars au total (50 000 000 $), et par la suite, l'administrateur paie ces frais sur le Fonds en fiducie sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux;

c) les frais du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre, conformément à l'article 9.04;

d) les frais du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau conformément à l'article 9.05;

e) les frais des conseils techniques relatifs à l'engagement conformément au paragraphe 9.06(3); et

f) les frais de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement conformément à l'article 9.08.

ARTICLE 4 – FONDS EN FIDUCIE

4.01 Création du Fonds en fiducie

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après l'établissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds en fiducie (le « compte en fiducie »).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en œuvre, et conformément aux conditions de l'Article 16 , le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant un milliard quatre cent trente-huit millions de dollars (1 438 000 000 $) dans le compte en fiducie, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le « Fonds en fiducie ») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

4.02 Distribution du Fonds en fiducie

Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à distribuer et l'administrateur distribue le Fonds en fiducie au bénéfice des membres du groupe conformément à la présente entente, y compris, notamment aux fins du paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels conformément à l'alinéa 8.01(2)a).

4.03 Excédent du Fonds en fiducie

(1) Sur l'avis d'un actuaire ou d'un conseiller analogue, le comité mixte peut à tout moment décider qu'il est plus probable qu'improbable qu'il y ait des fonds non affectés ou excédentaires dans le Fonds en fiducie (un « excédent du Fonds en fiducie »).

(2) Le comité mixte propose une distribution de tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie pour le bénéfice direct ou indirect des membres du groupe conformément au présent article 4.03.

(3) Une distribution d'un excédent du Fonds en fiducie comprend notamment des distributions à une ou plusieurs des fins suivantes, par ordre de priorité décroissant, et aux autres fins que le comité mixte peut déterminer en consultation avec le CCPNEPS :

a) transférer jusqu'à quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) au Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, au besoin;

b) payer une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés est insuffisant pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés;

c) payer les dommages-intérêts individuels ou les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation aux demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont déposé des réclamations valables pendant une période déterminée après la date limite pour les réclamations, s'il y a lieu (une « période de réclamation tardive »), à l'appréciation du comité mixte;

d) payer les dommages-intérêts individuels ou les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, à l'appréciation du comité mixte; et

e) financer des programmes visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques traditionnelles ou spirituelles, l'enseignement ou la guérison eu égard aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, à l'appréciation du comité mixte.

(4) Le comité mixte propose toute distribution de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie et saisit les tribunaux des demandes d'approbation de la distribution proposée de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie.

(5) L'affectation d'un excédent du Fonds en fiducie doit être approuvée par les deux tribunaux et prend effet

a) le lendemain du dernier jour où un membre du groupe peut interjeter appel ou demander l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de l'une ou l'autre des ordonnances d'approbation à l'égard de cette affectation, ou, si elle est postérieure,

b) à la date à laquelle le dernier des appels de l'une ou l'autre des ordonnances d'approbation à l'égard de cette affectation est définitivement tranché.

(6) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds en fiducie, y compris un excédent du Fonds en fiducie, n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible de tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie.

ARTICLE 5 – FONDS D'INDEMNISATION POUR PRÉJUDICES DÉTERMINÉS

5.01 Établissement du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après l'établissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés (le « compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés »).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en œuvre, et conformément aux modalités de l'articleArticle 16 , le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant cinquante millions de dollars (50 000 000 $) dans le compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le « Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés » dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

5.02 Distribution du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

(1) Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à payer et l'administrateur paie l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés sur le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, conformément à l'article 8.02.

(2) Si, après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations et le paiement de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés comme il est prévu à l'article 8.02, il reste des fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, le fiduciaire transfère ces fonds restants au Fonds en fiducie.

(3) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds provenant du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés.

ARTICLE 6 – FONDS POUR LA RELANCE ÉCONOMIQUE ET CULTURELLE DES PREMIÈRES NATIONS

6.01 Création du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Dans les meilleurs délais après sa nomination et après l'établissement de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément à l'article 16.01, le fiduciaire ouvre un compte en fiducie portant intérêt auprès d'une banque canadienne de l'annexe I aux fins du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations (le « compte du Fonds de relance »).

(2) Au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en œuvre, et conformément aux modalités de l'Article 16 , le Canada fait une contribution à la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre en versant quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) dans le compte du Fonds de relance, ce paiement constituant un fonds distinct (le « Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations ») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

(3) Le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations a pour but de fournir aux Premières Nations membres du groupe des fonds pour financer des projets liés à l'approvisionnement en eau et au traitement des eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles. Les parties respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation des fonds distribués provenant du compte du Fonds de relance.

6.02 Distribution du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Le fiduciaire autorise l'administrateur à payer et l'administrateur paie les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation sur le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, conformément au paragraphe 8.03(1).

(2) Si, après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations et le paiement des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation comme il est prévu au paragraphe 8.03(1), il reste des fonds dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, le fiduciaire transfère ces fonds restants au Fonds en fiducie.

(3) Il est entendu qu'en aucun cas un montant provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations n'est restitué au Canada, et que le Canada n'est pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.

ARTICLE 7 – PROCÉDURE DE RÈGLEMENT DES RÉCLAMATIONS

7.01 Principes régissant l'administration des réclamations

(1) La procédure de règlement des réclamations est censée être rapide, économique, conviviale, adaptée aux différences culturelles et non traumatisante, compte tenu des traumatismes subis. L'administrateur détermine et met en œuvre les délais de service pour la procédure de règlement des réclamations au plus tard soixante (60) jours après la date de mise en œuvre.

(2) Sauf preuve raisonnable contraire, l'administrateur, le tiers évaluateur et le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres supposent qu'un demandeur d'indemnité agit honnêtement et de bonne foi à l'égard d'une réclamation.

(3) Dans l'examen d'un formulaire de réclamation ou d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur, le tiers évaluateur et le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres tirent toutes les conclusions raisonnables et favorables qu'ils peuvent tirer en faveur du demandeur d'indemnité.

7.02 Décisions quant à l'admissibilité et décisions quant aux préjudices déterminés

(1) L'administrateur examine chaque formulaire de réclamation, confirmation du conseil de bande et/ou tout autre renseignement qu'il juge pertinent pour établir, sous réserve du paragraphe 7.02(2) dans le cas d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, pour chaque demandeur d'indemnité si ce dernier est ou non une personne membre du groupe et la période pendant laquelle il a résidé habituellement dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme (une « décision quant à l'admissibilité ») et, s'il y lieu, la validité d'une réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés (une « décision quant aux préjudices déterminés »). Il est entendu que l'administrateur peut communiquer à un demandeur d'indemnité une décision quant à l'admissibilité ou une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés avant que l'administrateur n'ait calculé l'indemnité pour préjudices individuels ou l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, le cas échéant, à laquelle le demandeur d'indemnité peut avoir droit.

(2) Une confirmation du conseil de bande est facultative. Dans les cas où elle est fournie, et sauf preuve contraire, une confirmation du conseil de bande constitue une preuve suffisante que les personnes membres du groupe qui y sont identifiées résidaient habituellement dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme aux fins d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité et est suffisante pour faire une demande d'indemnité pour préjudices individuels pour le compte de ces personnes membres du groupe sans que ces personnes membres du groupe ne soient tenues de soumettre des formulaires de réclamation. Par dérogation à ce qui précède, une personne membre du groupe identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, ou un exécuteur testamentaire, un demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou un représentant personnel pour son compte, a le droit de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, et une confirmation du conseil de bande n'est pas censée remplacer un formulaire de réclamation soumis par une personne membre du groupe ou pour son compte, que cette personne membre du groupe soit ou non identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande. En cas de conflit entre une confirmation du conseil de bande et un formulaire de réclamation, le formulaire de réclamation prévaut. Tout demandeur d'indemnité qui souhaite présenter une demande d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés est tenu de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation à l'égard de ses préjudices déterminés.

(3) L'administrateur donne à chaque demandeur d'indemnité un avis énonçant les résultats de sa décision quant à l'admissibilité et, s'il y a lieu, de sa décision quant aux préjudices déterminés. Si l'administrateur établit que le demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe, la décision quant à l'admissibilité précise la période pendant laquelle il résidait habituellement dans une réserve applicable alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, le type d'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable applicable et s'il s'agit d'une réserve située dans une Première Nation éloignée.

(4) L'administrateur communique au demandeur d'indemnité ses motifs écrits dans les cas suivants :

a) une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe, ou le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas résidé habituellement dans une réserve applicable pendant toute la période indiquée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité; ou

b) une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas admissible à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés réclamée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité.

(5) Seul un demandeur d'indemnité dont une décision quant à l'admissibilité (y compris, pour plus de certitude, identifié comme une personne membre du groupe dans une confirmation du conseil de bande) confirme qu'il est une personne membre du groupe (une « personne membre du groupe confirmée ») peut avoir droit à une indemnité en vertu de l'article 8.01 et, le cas échéant, de l'article 8.02.

(6) Le demandeur d'indemnité dispose d'un délai de soixante (60) jours pour interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations après avoir reçu :

a) une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe ou le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas résidé habituellement dans une réserve applicable pendant toute la période indiquée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité ou une confirmation du conseil de bande; ou

b) une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas admissible à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés réclamée dans le formulaire de réclamation du demandeur d'indemnité.

(7) La décision du tiers évaluateur dans un appel interjeté en vertu du paragraphe 7.02(6) est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

(8) Les avocats du groupe aident les demandeurs d'indemnité ou leurs représentants qui en font raisonnablement la demande à soumettre des demandes d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou à interjeter appel d'une décision quant aux préjudices déterminés sans frais pour le Canada ou le demandeur d'indemnité, si ce n'est, pour plus de certitude, des honoraires des avocats du groupe négociés séparément ou approuvés par les tribunaux et payables conformément à l'article 18.02.

7.03 Décisions quant aux dommages-intérêts de Première Nation

Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la réception par une Première Nation membre du groupe de la décision de l'administrateur quant à son admissibilité à une indemnité de base ou quant au calcul par l'administrateur de ses dommages-intérêts de Première Nation conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations, la Première Nation membre du groupe peut interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de cette décision conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations. La décision du tiers évaluateur dans un tel appel est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

7.04 Renvois au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement

(1) L'administrateur renvoie un formulaire de réclamation au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement lorsque les préjudices qui y sont décrits ne sont pas prévus dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et que le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement n'a pas déjà refusé d'accorder l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés dans des circonstances essentiellement analogues.

(2) La décision du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement à l'égard d'un formulaire de réclamation qui lui est renvoyé en vertu du présent article 7.04 est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

7.05 Caractère définitif des décisions

Sous réserve de ce qui est énoncé dans le présent Article 7 et dans la procédure de règlement des réclamations, toutes les décisions de l'administrateur sont définitives et lient un demandeur d'indemnité et ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel ou de révision.

ARTICLE 8 – INDEMNISATION RÉTROSPECTIVE

8.01 Dommages-intérêts individuels

(1) Lorsqu'il détermine où résidait habituellement un demandeur d'indemnité aux fins de la présente entente, l'administrateur tient compte de chaque année au cours de la période visée où une réserve était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, depuis la date de l'imposition de l'avis (individuellement, une « année de l'avis »), et où un demandeur d'indemnité a été un « résident habituel » dans une réserve touchée, aux fins de la présente entente, si :

a) le demandeur d'indemnité a vécu dans la réserve touchée pendant une plus grande partie d'une année de l'avis (ou, après la première année de l'avis, la partie applicable de l'année de l'avis subséquente où un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur si l'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme a été levé avant la fin de l'année de l'avis) qu'il n'a vécu ailleurs; et

b) par dérogation à ce qui précède, dans le cas d'un demandeur d'indemnité âgé de dix-huit (18) ans ou moins au moment applicable, le demandeur d'indemnité vivait habituellement dans une réserve touchée, mais a vécu ailleurs pendant une partie de l'année de l'avis pour fréquenter un établissement d'enseignement.

(2) L'administrateur calcule les dommages-intérêts pour chaque personnes membre du groupe confirmée (les « dommages-intérêts individuels ») selon la formule suivante (la « formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels ») :

a) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui n'avait pas encore atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans le 20 novembre 2013 :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis; et

(ii) après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4);

au cours de la période visée pendant laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur;

b) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, mais qui était incapable en raison de son état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de sa réclamation :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis (et, après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4)) antérieure au 20 novembre 2019, dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans et avait été en mesure d'introduire une instance à l'égard de cette année de l'avis (ou d'une partie de celle-ci) pour une période cumulative de moins de six (6) années en date du 20 novembre 2019; et

(ii) pour chaque année de l'avis (et, après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4)) postérieure au 20 novembre 2019,

au cours de la période visée pendant laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur; ou

c) dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe confirmée qui avait atteint l'âge de dix-huit (18) ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, sauf une personne visée à l'alinéa 8.01(2)b) :

(i) pour chaque année de l'avis; et

(ii) après la première année de l'avis, pour chaque partie d'une année de l'avis conformément au paragraphe 8.01(4), entre le 20 novembre 2013 et la fin de la période visée au cours de laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel dans une réserve alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme en vigueur.

(3) Le comité mixte, agissant sur l'avis d'un actuaire ou d'un conseiller analogue, détermine les taux auxquels les dommages-intérêts individuels sont payés. Sous réserve a) de la disponibilité de fonds suffisants dans le Fonds en fiducie et b) de la disponibilité de fonds suffisants dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations pour payer des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation d'un montant égal à cinquante pour cent (50 %) des dommages-intérêts individuels, les dommages-intérêts individuels sont payés aux taux indiqués à l'ANNEXE G, ou à des taux se rapprochant de ceux que permettent les fonds dans le Fonds en fiducie et dans le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.

(4) Les dommages-intérêts individuels pour toute année de l'avis partielle postérieure à la première année de l'avis sont calculés pour chaque personne membre du groupe confirmée en multipliant :

a) les dommages-intérêts individuels auxquels aurait eu droit la personne membre du groupe confirmée pour une année de l'avis complète, calculés conformément au paragraphe 8.01(2); par

b) une fraction, dont le numérateur est le nombre de jours de l'année de l'avis partielle applicable après la première année de l'avis au cours de laquelle un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était encore en vigueur dans une réserve où la personne membre du groupe confirmée était un résident habituel, et dont le dénominateur est trois cent soixante-cinq (365).

(5) Sauf disposition contraire dans la présente entente, dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur paie les dommages-intérêts individuels conformément à la présente entente. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

8.02 Indemnité pour préjudices déterminés

(1) En plus des dommages-intérêts individuels, une personne membre du groupe peut indiquer dans son formulaire de réclamation qu'elle demande des dommages-intérêts pour un ou plusieurs problèmes de santé indiqués à l'Error! Reference source not found. qui ont été causés par une utilisation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel, ou par un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou à de l'eau du robinet en raison d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve dans laquelle la personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel (les « préjudices déterminés »). Il est entendu que les problèmes de santé causés par une utilisation de l'eau d'une manière qui est contraire à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou par une utilisation d'eau de source ne constituent pas des préjudices déterminés.

(2) Les personnes membres du groupe confirmées ont droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés d'un montant indiqué à l'Error! Reference source not found. (l'« indemnité pour préjudices déterminés »), pour peu que le demandeur d'indemnité établisse que le préjudice a été causé par une utilisation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, ou par un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou de l'eau du robinet en raison d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'Error! Reference source not found..

(4) Dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur détermine s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer la totalité de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour chaque réclamation valide et établie d'une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés (le « montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ») établie conformément à la procédure de règlement des réclamations, et :

a) s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés conformément à la présente entente; ou

b) s'il n'y a pas suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur paie à chaque personne membre du groupe confirmée, conformément à la présente entente, sa quote-part du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés proportionnelle à l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés à laquelle la personne membre du groupe confirmée aurait droit si le montant total de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés était égal au Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés; et

c) dans l'un ou l'autre cas, l'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

8.03 Dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe

(1) L'administrateur calcule les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe selon les indemnités suivantes auxquelles a droit chaque Première Nation membre du groupe :

a) une indemnité de base de cinq cent mille dollars (500 000 $) (l'« indemnité de base »); et

b) une indemnité d'un montant correspondant à 50 pour cent (50 %) des dommages-intérêts individuels payés aux personnes membres du groupe confirmées qui résidaient habituellement dans la réserve ou les réserves de la Première Nation membre du groupe alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme (les « dommages-intérêts de Première Nation »).

(2) L'administrateur paie l'indemnité de base à chaque Première Nation membre du groupe sur le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours qui suivent a) la date de mise en œuvre ou, si elle postérieure, b) la date à laquelle la Première Nation membre du groupe remet un avis d'acceptation écrit aux avocats du groupe. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

(3) Tous les six (6) mois après le paiement de l'indemnité de base conformément au paragraphe 8.03(2), l'administrateur paie à chaque Première Nation membre du groupe sur le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, sans double emploi, les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation alors accumulés, mais impayés payables à la Première Nation membre du groupe. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à la présente entente.

ARTICLE 9 – MESURES DE REDRESSEMENT POTENTIELLES

9.01 Plan d'action pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe

(1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui touchent les membres du groupe, notamment en prenant les mesures décrites dans le plan d'action dans les délais de projet qui y sont prévus.

(2) Le Canada met à jour régulièrement, et au moins chaque trimestre, le plan d'action compte tenu des progrès réalisés par rapport au plan d'action.

(3) Le plan d'action est modifié pour tenir compte des engagements supplémentaires pris par le Canada, y compris les engagements prévus dans les plans de mesures correctrices.

(4) Dans les trente (30) jours ouvrables qui suivent une mise à jour ou une modification du plan d'action, le Canada remet au comité mixte une copie du plan d'action mis à jour ou modifié.

(5) Il est entendu qu'aucune disposition de la présente entente ne limite le Canada qu'aux mesures à prendre énoncées dans le plan d'action ni n'empêche le Canada de prendre des mesures additionnelles qui ne sont pas prévues dans le plan d'action au bénéfice des membres du groupe.

9.02 Engagement à prendre d'autres mesures

(1) En plus des mesures énoncées dans le plan d'action, le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe qui vivent dans des réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau public ou d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau privé approuvé par voie d'une résolution du conseil de bande conforme essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE P, ou une autre modèle que le Canada et les avocats du groupe jugent acceptable, y compris, notamment des réseaux sur place, qui respectent les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales les plus rigoureuses en matière de qualité de l'eau à domicile (l'« engagement »). Il est entendu que :

a) l'« accès à une source fiable d'eau potable » doit être de nature et en quantité suffisantes pour permettre toute utilisation habituelle et nécessaire de l'eau dans un foyer canadien semblable, y compris, notamment, l'eau potable, le bain et l'hygiène personnelle, la préparation et le lavage des aliments, l'assainissement et la lessive;

b) l'engagement se limite aux efforts raisonnables du Canada, y compris, notamment le financement des coûts réels, la formation, la planification et l'assistance technique;

c) si, malgré tous les efforts raisonnables déployés par le Canada, l'accès à une source fiable d'eau potable ne peut être assuré, le Canada n'est pas tenu de garantir l'accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans le foyer d'une personne membre du groupe; et

d) les facteurs qui peuvent être pris en compte pour déterminer le caractère raisonnable des efforts déployés comprennent, notamment :

(i) les opinions de la Première Nation visée;

(ii) les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux en matière de qualité de l'eau;

(iii) la surveillance et les essais effectués ou non à l'égard du réseau d'approvisionnement en eau; et

(iv) l'emplacement physique du foyer, y compris la proximité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau centralisés et l'éloignement.

(2) Le Canada dépensera au moins six milliards de dollars (6 000 000 000 $) entre le 20 juin 2021 et le 31 mars 2030 pour respecter l'engagement, à raison d'au moins quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) par exercice se terminant le 31 mars, en finançant les coûts réels de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau dans les réserves pour les Premières Nations (les « dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement »).

(3) Le Canada remet au comité mixte un état annuel de toutes les dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement effectivement engagées au cours de chaque exercice jusqu'au 31 mars 2030, lequel état doit être fourni au plus tard quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours après la fin de l'exercice visé.

(4) Le Canada fournit sans délai à toute Première Nation membre du groupe qui en fait la demande un état des dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement à l'égard des réserves de la Première Nation membre du groupe.

9.03 Abrogation et remplacement de la *Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables :

a) pour déposer une loi abrogeant la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 (la « LSEPPN ») au plus tard le 31 mars 2022;

b) pour élaborer et déposer une loi remplaçant la LESPPN (la « loi remplaçante »), en consultation avec les Premières Nations; et

c) pour déposer la loi remplaçante au plus tard le 31 décembre 2022.

(2) La loi remplaçante vise les objectifs suivants :

a) assurer la viabilité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, en fonction des prémisses suivantes :

(i) définir des normes minimales de qualité de l'eau pour les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations, compte tenu des normes qui s'appliquent directement aux collectivités des Premières Nations; et

(ii) définir des normes minimales de capacité pour l'approvisionnement en eau des collectivités des Premières Nations, quant au volume par personne membre de la collectivité;

b) élaborer une approche transparente pour la construction, l'amélioration et la prestation de services d'approvisionnement en eau potable et de traitement des eaux usées pour les Premières Nations;

c) confirmer le financement adéquat et durable des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations; et

d) appuyer la prise en charge volontaire de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées par les Premières Nations.

(3) Malgré l'engagement du Canada de déposer la loi remplaçante, le Canada appuie l'élaboration d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations, comme il est décrit à l'article 9.05, ci-après.

9.04 Comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre

(1) Le Canada fournit vingt millions de dollars (20 000 000 $) de financement jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026, pour la création du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre (le « CCPNEPS »).

(2) La composition du CCPNEPS est représentative de la diversité des collectivités, des langues, des genres, des territoires, des compétences, des connaissances et de l'expérience de la précarité de l'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations membres du groupe au Canada.

(4) Le CCPNEPS est investi des fonctions principales suivantes :

a) travailler avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe à assurer une supervision et un encadrement et à faire des recommandations à Services aux Autochtones Canada propres à favoriser l'élaboration et la mise en œuvre d'initiatives stratégiques prospectives, notamment :

(i) l'élaboration de la stratégie à long terme pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées de Services aux Autochtones Canada dans les réserves des Premières Nations membres du groupe; et

(ii) l'élaboration de la loi remplaçante;

b) fournir à Services aux Autochtones Canada des conseils et des perspectives stratégiques propres à favoriser la viabilité à long terme pour de l'eau potable salubre dans les collectivités des Premières Nations; et

c) appuyer l'établissement des besoins et des priorités du financement pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées dans les collectivités des Premières Nations.

(5) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du CCPNEPS.

9.05 Initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit neuf millions de dollars (9 000 000 $) de financement aux Premières Nations pour qu'elles élaborent leurs propres règlements et initiatives en matière de gouvernance jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026 (le « Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau »). Services aux Autochtones Canada administre le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau conformément à son mandat.

(2) La capitalisation du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau s'effectue jusqu'à l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2026, que la loi remplaçante soit ou non adoptée, notamment dans les délais prévus.

(3) Le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau aide les Premières Nations membres du groupe qui souhaitent élaborer leurs propres initiatives en matière de gouvernance de l'eau, notamment au moyen de financement pour :

a) la recherche :

b) l'obtention de conseils techniques;

c) la rédaction de règlements; et

d) la mise en œuvre de projets pilotes dans les réserves.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau.

9.06 Accord sur les mesures requises

(1) Si une Première Nation établit que l'engagement n'est pas ou n'est plus respecté dans sa ou ses réserves ou si une Première Nation établit que le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices (chacune de ces Premières Nations, une « Première Nation insuffisamment desservie »), elle en donne un avis écrit au Canada, adressé au sous-ministre des Services aux Autochtones Canada, décrivant la manière dont l'engagement n'est pas ou n'est plus respecté ou dont le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices.

(2) Le Canada consulte sans délai chaque Première Nation insuffisamment desservie afin de respecter l'engagement dans les meilleurs délais.

(3) Le Canada paie les frais raisonnables qu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie doit engager pour obtenir des conseils techniques afin de déterminer quelles mesures sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement dans la ou les réserves de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(4) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour parvenir à un accord avec la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie précisant les mesures qui sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement (un « plan de mesures correctrices »).

(5) Le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie se conforment au plan de mesures correctrices.

9.07 Règlement des différends concernant les mesures requises

Si le Canada ne se conforme pas à un plan de mesures correctrices en vigueur ou si le Canada et une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ne peuvent convenir d'un plan de mesures correctrices dans les trois (3) mois qui suivent la remise de l'avis de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie prévu à l'article 9.06 ou dans tout autre délai dont les parties peuvent convenir, la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut recourir à la procédure de règlement des différends décrite à l'ANNEXE K (la « procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement »), auquel cas le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie soumettent le plan de mesures correctrices alors en vigueur ou leur projet de plan de mesures correctrices respectif à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement.

9.08 Frais de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement

(1) Le Canada paie cinquante pour cent (50 %) des frais et débours raisonnables de la participation d'une Première Nation membre du groupe insuffisamment desservie à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, y compris les honoraires et débours juridiques raisonnables, étant entendu que le Canada paie cent pour cent (100 %) des frais raisonnables d'une convocation à quelque négociation, médiation et arbitrage collaboratifs conformément à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, ainsi que les honoraires et les débours raisonnables du médiateur et de l'arbitre nommé conformément à la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement; et

(2) Il est entendu que les frais et débours dont il est question au paragraphe 9.08(1) sont distincts et en sus des frais et débours payables aux avocats du groupe et au comité mixte en vertu de l'Article 18 .

ARTICLE 10 – EFFET DE L'ENTENTE

10.01 Aucune disposition quant aux préjudices continus

La présente entente ne prévoit aucune disposition quant aux préjudices dont les membres du groupe pourraient en raison d'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui commencent ou qui sont maintenus après le 20 juin 2021, et les membres du groupe ne peuvent pas réclamer une indemnité à l'égard de ces préjudices.

10.02 Responsabilité du Canada

Les parties conviennent expressément qu'une fois que le Canada a respecté les conditions de la présente entente, le Canada n'a aucune autre responsabilité envers les membres du groupe à l'égard des préjudices dont ils ont souffert avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de ces Premières Nations membres du groupe, ou dans lesquelles ces personnes membres du groupe étaient des résidents habituels.

10.03 Quittances

(1) Les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement rendues par les tribunaux stipulent que, sauf comme il est prévu aux articles 10.01 et 10.04, et en contrepartie des obligations et des responsabilités du Canada qui lui incombent en vertu de la présente entente, chaque personne membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire, demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou représentant personnel pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe ou de sa succession, et chaque Première Nation membre du groupe (collectivement ci-après, les « donneurs de quittance ») dégage entièrement et définitivement le Canada et ses fonctionnaires, mandataires, dirigeants et employés, prédécesseurs, successeurs et ayants cause (collectivement ci-après, les « bénéficiaires de quittance »), de quelque action, cause d'action, réclamation et demande de quelque nature ou type, qu'elle soit ou non connue ou prévue, que les donneurs de quittance avaient, ont aujourd'hui ou pourraient avoir à l'avenir contre les bénéficiaires de quittance à l'égard ou en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de ces Premières Nations membres du groupe, ou dans lesquelles ces personnes membres du groupe étaient des résidents habituels, dans chaque cas avant la fin de la période visée.

(2) Les donneurs de quittance sont réputés convenir que s'ils font une réclamation ou une demande ou introduisent une action ou une instance contre d'autres personnes qui donne lieu à une réclamation contre les bénéficiaires de quittance pour une contribution, une indemnité ou une autre réparation, que ce soit en vertu d'une loi, de la common law ou du droit civil du Québec, à l'égard de réclamations visées par la quittance prévue au paragraphe 10.03(1), ci-dessus, les donneurs de quittance limitent expressément leurs réclamations de manière à exclure toute partie de responsabilité du Canada.

(3) Après une décision définitive relative à une réclamation faite en vertu de la procédure de règlement des réclamations et conformément à ses modalités, les donneurs de quittance sont également réputés dégager libérer entièrement et définitivement :

a) les parties, les avocats du groupe, les avocats du Canada, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres, le CCPNEPS et ses membres, le comité mixte et ses membres, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de l'application de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant au calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages de Première Nation, au caractère suffisant de l'indemnité reçue et à la répartition et à la distribution de l'excédent du Fonds en fiducie;

b) tout conseil de bande qui a soumis une confirmation du conseil de bande à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de la confirmation du conseil de bande, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant à l'exhaustivité ou à l'exactitude de celle-ci; et

c) tout conseil de bande qui adopte une résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE P ou un autre modèle que le Canada et les avocats du groupe jugent acceptable à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler de la résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, y compris, notamment quelque réclamation quant à l'exhaustivité ou à l'exactitude de celle-ci, et l'adoption d'une résolution du conseil de bande ou l'omission d'adopter une résolution du conseil de bande approuvant des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés ne saurait avoir pour effet de rendre une Première Nation ou son conseil de bande responsable ou imputable à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau qui y sont décrits.

(4) Les parties, les avocats du groupe, les avocats du Canada, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres, le CCPNEPS et ses membres, le comité mixte et ses membres, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur n'ont aucune responsabilité envers un membre du groupe admissible disparu à l'égard de quelque réclamation qui a découlé, qui découle ou qui pourrait découler du paiement ou du non-paiement d'un montant conformément à la présente entente, lorsque l'administrateur s'est conformé au plan de recherche d'adresse de membres du groupe admissibles prévu à l'ANNEXE Q.

(5) Il est entendu :

a) qu'une personne membre du groupe vivante qui ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide à l'administrateur, ou pour le compte de laquelle une réclamation valide n'est pas faite au moyen d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, ou, dans le cas d'une personne membre du groupe qui est une personne frappée d'incapacité, pour le compte de laquelle son représentant personnel n'a pas soumis de formulaire de réclamation valide; et

b) qu'une personne membre du groupe décédée qui n'a pas soumis un formulaire de réclamation valide avant son décès, ou dont l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée, avec les autres renseignements requis par la présente entente, dans chaque cas, au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, n'a pas droit à des dommages-intérêts individuels ni à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés en vertu de la présente entente, et l'administrateur rejette toute réclamation soumise après la dernière date limite pour les réclamations. Chaque personne membre du groupe continue d'être liée par la quittance prévue dans le présent article 10.03, même si elle ne soumet pas un formulaire de réclamation valide au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations.

(6) Il est entendu que toute Première Nation touchée qui ne donne pas un avis d'acceptation au plus tard à la date limite pour l'acceptation perd tout droit à quelque avantage en vertu de la présente entente, y compris, notamment les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, et l'administrateur rejette tout avis d'acceptation soumis après la date limite pour l'acceptation.

10.04 Recours permanents

(1) Les parties reconnaissent et conviennent que, par dérogation à l'article 10.03 ou à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente, les membres du groupe n'abandonnent pas et conservent expressément leurs réclamations ou causes d'action en cas de violation de la présente entente par le Canada.

(2) Les Parties reconnaissent et conviennent qu'il y aurait préjudice irréparable pour lequel des dommages-intérêts ne constitueraient pas une réparation appropriée en droit si le Canada devait manquer à ses obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 3.04, de l'Article 4 , de l'Article 5 , de l'Article 6 ou de l'Article 9 . Il est donc convenu que, sous réserve de la Loi sur la responsabilité civile de l'État et le contentieux administratif, L.R.C. (1985), ch. C-50, les parties ont le droit de recourir à une mesure injonctive et à une autre mesure de redressement équitable pour prévenir toute violation réelle ou imminente de la présente entente, et pour faire respecter les conditions de la présente entente, sans qu'il ne soit nécessaire d'obtenir ou de déposer un cautionnement dans le cadre de l'obtention d'une telle mesure injonctive ou autre mesure de redressement équitable, en plus des autres dommages-intérêts et mesures de redressement dont les parties peuvent bénéficier en droit ou en équité.

10.05 Impôt sur le revenu canadien et avantages sociaux

(1) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour veiller à ce que la réception d'un paiement conformément à la présente entente ne porte pas atteinte au droit d'un membre du groupe à des prestations sociales ou à des prestations d'assistance sociale fédérales, et aucun pareil paiement ne saurait être considéré comme un revenu imposable au sens de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu.

(2) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour obtenir une entente avec les gouvernements provinciaux et territoriaux aux termes de laquelle la réception d'un paiement conformément à la présente entente ne porte pas atteinte au montant, à la nature ou à la durée des prestations sociales ou des prestations d'assistance sociale offertes ou payables à un membre du groupe.

ARTICLE 11 – MISE EN ŒUVRE DE LA PRÉSENTE ENTENTE

11.01 Ordonnances d'approbation du règlement

(1) Les parties conviennent de solliciter les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement aux tribunaux essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE O.

(2) Les parties consentent à l'inscription des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement.

(3) Les parties prennent toutes les mesures raisonnables pour coopérer en vue de saisir les tribunaux d'une demande d'ordonnances d'approbation de règlement.

(4) Les parties planifient l'audition de l'approbation du règlement dans les meilleurs délais compte tenu des exigences du plan de notification et de la disponibilité des tribunaux.

11.02 Plan de notification

(1) Les parties conviennent de saisir conjointement les tribunaux d'une demande d'approbation du plan de notification comme moyen permettant aux membres du groupe de recevoir les avis de règlement et les avis d'approbation du règlement, et les avis d'exclusion tardive, selon le cas.

(2) Le Canada convient de financer la mise en œuvre du plan de notification et de tout avis ultérieur ordonné par les tribunaux.

ARTICLE 12 – EXCLUSION

12.01 Exclusion

Aucune personne membre du groupe ne peut s'exclure des actions sans l'autorisation des tribunaux, et chaque personne membre du groupe est liée par la présente entente si elle est approuvée par les tribunaux.

12.02 Exclusion tardive

Par dérogation à l'article 12.01, les personnes membres du groupe qui résident habituellement dans la Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing, la North Caribou Lake, la Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, la Nation des Oneidas de la Thames et la Bande de Deer Lake ont le droit de s'exclure des actions moyennant la remise à l'administrateur d'un avis écrit dans les quarante-cinq (45) jours qui suivent la date de la première publication de l'avis de règlement. Les Premières Nations visées dans le présent article 12.02 ont reçu un premier avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme après le commencement de la période d'exclusion. Sauf en ce qui a trait à l'exclusion tardive prévue dans le présent article 12.02, les personnes membres du groupe n'ont pas le droit de s'exclure aux termes de la présente entente et ne peuvent s'exclure des actions qu'avec l'autorisation des tribunaux conformément à l'article 12.01Error! Reference source not found..

12.03 Exclusion automatique pour les réclamations individuelles

Toute personne membre du groupe qui n'abandonne pas, avant l'expiration du délai pour s'exclure des actions, quelque instance qui soulève des questions de droit ou de fait qui sont communes aux actions, est réputée s'être exclue des actions.

ARTICLE 13 – PAIEMENTS AUX PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE DÉCÉDÉES ET FRAPPÉES D'INCAPACITÉ

13.01 Indemnisation d'une personne décédée; octroi d'une autorisation ou d'un pouvoir analogue

(1) Si une personne membre du groupe est décédée ou décède après le 20 novembre 2017, inclusivement (cette personne membre du groupe, une « personne membre du groupe décédée »), et :

a) que la personne membre du groupe décédée a été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande;

b) que la personne membre du groupe décédée, ou son représentant personnel, a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur avant son décès; ou

c) que l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur après le décès de cette dernière, et que l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée a soumis à l'administrateur la preuve exigée par le paragraphe 13.01(2), l'administrateur paie à l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée avait droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, ce paiement étant payable à « la succession » de la personne membre du groupe décédée.

(2) Au soutien d'une réclamation soumise conformément au paragraphe 13.01(1), l'exécuteur testamentaire de la personne membre du groupe décédée soumet à l'administrateur, dans chaque cas, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge acceptable :

a) un formulaire de réclamation (si un formulaire de réclamation n'a pas été soumis par la personne membre du groupe décédée, ou son représentant personnel, avant son décès et que la personne membre du groupe décédée n'a pas été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande);

b) la preuve et la date du décès de la personne membre du groupe décédée;

c) la preuve de l'autorisation légale du représentant de recevoir l'indemnité pour le compte de la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée, ainsi établie :

(i) si la réclamation est fondée sur un testament ou un autre titre testamentaire ou une succession ab intestat, une copie de l'acte d'homologation ou des lettres d'homologation ou d'un autre document de même nature ou des lettres d'administration ou d'un autre document de même nature, étant censés être délivrés par un tribunal ou une autorité au Canada; ou

(ii) si la réclamation est fondée sur un testament notarié au Québec, une copie certifiée conforme du testament.

13.02 Indemnisation d'une personne décédée; sans octroi d'une autorisation ou d'un pouvoir analogue

(1) Si un formulaire de réclamation a été soumis à l'administrateur par une personne membre du groupe décédée, ou par son représentant personnel, avant son décès, ou par son exécuteur testamentaire ou un autre représentant de la personne membre du groupe décédée (un « demandeur d'indemnité successoral »), après son décès, mais que la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée n'a pas soumis à l'administrateur tous les éléments de la preuve requise aux termes du paragraphe 13.01(2), l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral doit soumettre à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa a) et de l'alinéa b), ainsi qu'une preuve de l'autorisation ou du pouvoir d'agir de l'exécuteur testamentaire ou du demandeur d'indemnité successoral de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(3) (collectivement, une « déclaration de représentation successorale »), au plus tard à la date limite pour les réclamations ou, si elle est postérieure, à l'expiration de la période de réclamation tardive (la « dernière date limite pour les réclamations ») et par ailleurs conformément à la présente entente, et :

a) si une seule déclaration de représentation successorale a été soumise à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée a droit à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successoral indiqué dans la déclaration de représentation successorale pour le compte de la succession; ou

b) si plus d'une déclaration de représentation successorale a été soumise à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée au plus tard à la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur :

(i) si les exécuteurs testamentaires ou les demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux indiqués dans toutes les déclarations de représentation successorale soumettent à l'administrateur une convention signée ordonnant le paiement de l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe décédée a droit et donnent une quittance que l'administrateur juge acceptable quant à la forme, paie l'indemnité à la succession conformément à cette convention; ou

(ii) si les exécuteurs testamentaires ou les demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux indiqués dans toutes les déclarations de représentation successorale ne soumettent pas à l'administrateur une convention conformément au sous-alinéa 13.02(1)b)(i), demande à l'un des exécuteurs testamentaires ou des demandeurs d'indemnité successoraux de soumettre à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa 13.01(2)c) et paie à cette personne pour le compte de la succession l'indemnité à laquelle a droit la personne membre du groupe décédée, étant entendu que si personne ne soumet à l'administrateur la preuve requise aux termes de l'alinéa 13.01(2)c) dans les deux (2) ans qui suivent la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, la réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession s'éteint, l'administrateur n'a plus aucune autre obligation de faire quelque paiement à la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à sa succession et toutes les réclamations de ou pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession sont réputées avoir fait l'objet d'une quittance conformément à l'article 10.03.

(2) Si un formulaire de réclamation est soumis à l'administrateur par une personne membre du groupe décédée, ou pour son compte, mais qu'aucune déclaration de représentation successorale n'est soumise à l'administrateur à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.01(1) dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours qui suivent la réception du formulaire de réclamation, l'administrateur déploie des efforts raisonnables pour envoyer un avis à la dernière adresse connue de la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successoral de la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le cas, demandant la soumission d'une déclaration de représentation successorale. Si personne ne soumet à l'administrateur une déclaration de représentation successorale à l'égard de la personne membre du groupe décédée dans les deux (2) ans qui suivent la dernière date limite pour les réclamations, la réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession s'éteint, l'administrateur n'a plus aucune autre obligation de faire quelque paiement à la personne membre du groupe décédée ou à sa succession et toutes les réclamations de ou pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe décédée et de sa succession sont réputées avoir fait l'objet d'une quittance conformément à l'article 10.03.

(3) Au soutien d'une déclaration de représentation successorale soumise en vertu du paragraphe 13.02(1), l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral de la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le cas, soumet à l'administrateur la preuve suivante qu'il représente la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée, dans chaque cas, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge acceptable :

a) si la personne membre du groupe décédée avait un testament :

(i) une copie du testament nommant l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, pour représenter la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée; et

(ii) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée, confirmant qu'ils croient que le testament est valide, n'ont pas connaissance que le testament a été révoquée, n'ont pas connaissance de quelque testament ultérieur de la personne membre du groupe décédée, et n'ont pas connaissance de quelque exécuteur, administrateur, fiduciaire ou liquidateur nommé par un tribunal; ou

b) si la personne membre du groupe décédée n'avait pas de testament :

(i) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée, confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque testament de la personne membre du groupe décédée et n'ont pas connaissance de quelque exécuteur, administrateur, fiduciaire ou liquidateur nommé par un tribunal;

(ii) une preuve de la relation entre l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, et la personne membre du groupe décédée, selon le modèle que l'administrateur juge raisonnablement acceptable;

(iii) une attestation ou une déclaration signée par l'exécuteur testamentaire ou le demandeur d'indemnité successoral, et par une autre personne qui connaissait personnellement la personne membre du groupe décédée :

A. confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque héritier ayant priorité de rang de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4); et

B. soit :

(I) confirmant qu'ils n'ont pas connaissance de quelque héritier de rang égal de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), ou

(II) s'il existe un héritier de rang égal de la personne membre du groupe décédée conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), énumérant les personnes ayant un rang égal; et

(iv) s'il existe des héritiers de la personne membre du groupe décédée qui ont un rang égal par rapport à l'exécuteur testamentaire ou au demandeur d'indemnité successoral conformément au paragraphe 13.02(4), le consentement signé de toutes ces personnes quant au pouvoir de l'exécuteur testamentaire ou du demandeur d'indemnité successoral, selon le cas, d'agir pour la succession de la personne membre du groupe décédée.

(4) Pour l'application de l'alinéa b), la priorité de rang des héritiers est établie conformément aux dispositions de la Loi sur les Indiens quant à la distribution des biens ab intestat, et cette priorité de rang des héritiers de la plus élevée à la plus basse s'établit comme suit :

a) l'époux ou conjoint de fait survivant;

b) les enfants;

c) les petits-enfants;

d) les parents;

e) les frères et sœurs; et

f) les enfants des frères et sœurs.

Les termes et expressions utilisés dans le présent paragraphe 13.02(4), mais qui ne sont pas définis dans la présente entente s'entendent au sens qui leur est attribué dans la Loi sur les Indiens.

13.03 Personne frappée d'incapacité

Si une personne membre du groupe qui a soumis un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur avant la date limite pour les réclamations, ou qui a été identifiée dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, est ou devient une personne frappée d'incapacité avant la réception de son indemnité, et que l'administrateur est avisé que cette personne membre du groupe est une personne frappée d'incapacité avant le paiement de son indemnité, l'administrateur paie au représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe l'indemnité à laquelle elle aurait eu droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations, et si l'administrateur n'en est pas ainsi avisé, l'administrateur paie l'indemnité payable à la personne membre du groupe. Si une personne membre du groupe est ou devient une personne frappée d'incapacité avant de soumettre un formulaire de réclamation à l'administrateur, le représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe peut soumettre un formulaire de réclamation pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe avant la date limite pour les réclamations et l'indemnité à laquelle la personne membre du groupe aurait eu droit aux termes de la procédure de règlement des réclamations est payée au représentant personnel de la personne membre du groupe.

13.04 Clause de dégagement de responsabilité du Canada, de l'administrateur, des avocats du groupe, du comité mixte, du tiers évaluateur, du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et du CCPNEPS

Le Canada et ses avocats, l'administrateur, les avocats du groupe, le comité mixte et ses membres, le tiers évaluateur, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres et le CCPNEPS sont tenus indemnes et à couvert quant à l'ensemble des réclamations, des demandes reconventionnelles, des poursuites, des actions, des causes d'action, des demandes, des dommages, des pénalités, des préjudices, des compensation, des jugements, des dettes, des frais (y compris les honoraires et frais d'avocats) ou des autres responsabilités de quelque nature que ce soit en raison ou par suite d'un paiement ou d'un non-paiement à un à une personne membre du groupe décédée ou à une personne frappée d'incapacité ou pour son compte, ou à un exécuteur testamentaire, à un demandeur d'indemnité successoral, à la succession ou à un représentant personnel aux termes de la présente entente, et la présente entente constitue un moyen de défense péremptoire.

ARTICLE 14 – COMITÉ DE MISE EN ŒUVRE DU RÈGLEMENT

14.01 Comité de mise en œuvre du règlement

(1) Les tribunaux instituent un comité de mise en œuvre du règlement composé de deux (2) membres du comité mixte, de deux (2) représentants du Canada et de deux (2) membres du CCPNEPS, chacun d'eux étant appelé aux présentes un « membre » pour l'application de la présente entente. Un des membres du comité mixte est nommé président du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement.

(2) Le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement s'efforce de parvenir à un consensus. Si un consensus n'est pas possible, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement prend ses décisions à la majorité des voix. En cas de partage des voix, le président a voix prépondérante.

(3) Les tribunaux ou les parties, d'un commun accord, peuvent remplacer un membre du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement, pour peu que la composition du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement demeure conforme à celle prévue au paragraphe 14.01(1) ci-dessus.

(4) Le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement est un organe de surveillance institué en vertu de la présente entente et investi des responsabilités suivantes :

a) surveiller le travail de l'administrateur et la procédure de règlement des réclamations;

b) recevoir et examiner les rapports de l'administrateur, y compris, notamment les rapports sur les frais d'administration;

c) donner à l'administrateur ou au tiers évaluateur les directives qui peuvent alors être nécessaires conformément au mandat du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement;

d) recevoir et accepter ou rejeter les demandes de report de la date limite pour les réclamations, étant entendu qu'un report nécessite une ordonnance des tribunaux;

e) proposer à l'approbation des tribunaux les protocoles qui peuvent être nécessaires à la mise en œuvre de la présente entente;

f) examiner les formulaires de réclamation dont il est saisi par l'administrateur; et

g) traiter toute autre question soumise au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement par les tribunaux ou l'un d'eux.

(5) Il est entendu que le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement n'a pas compétence pour examiner les appels, les demandes ou les recours analogues d'un demandeur d'indemnité ou d'une personne membre du groupe. Aucune personne membre du groupe ni aucune autre personne ne peut solliciter des mesures de redressement de quelque nature auprès du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement ne peut être saisi de toute pareille demande ou procédure analogue.

14.02 Décisions définitives et exécutoires

Les décisions du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement seront définitives et exécutoires et ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel ou de révision.

14.03 Frais du comité de mise en œuvre du règlement

Conformément au paragraphe b), le Canada assume les frais de participation au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement des membres qui ne sont pas aussi membres du comité mixte. Les frais des membres du comité mixte sont payés conformément au paragraphe 15.01(8). Le Canada paie les débours raisonnables que tous les membres engagent pour participer au comité de mise en œuvre du règlement.

ARTICLE 15 – COMITÉ MIXTE

15.01 Comité mixte

(1) Les tribunaux instituent un comité mixte qui est composé de trois (3) membres recommandés par les avocats du groupe et qui est investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités nécessaires à l'exécution des obligations qui lui incombent aux termes de la présente entente. Le comité mixte est composé d'un (1) représentant des avocats du groupe de Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP et de deux (2) représentants des avocats du groupe de McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l.

(2) Sous réserve du paragraphe 15.01, sur la recommandation du comité mixte, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer un membre du comité mixte dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe.

(3) Le comité mixte s'efforce raisonnablement de parvenir à un consensus. Si un consensus n'est pas possible, le comité mixte prend ses décisions à la majorité des voix.

(4) Le comité mixte représente les membres du groupe et agira dans l'intérêt véritable de l'ensemble des membres du groupe dans l'exercice de ses fonctions prévues dans la présente entente.

(5) Le comité mixte consulte le CCPNEPS et les membres du groupe, ou un sous-ensemble d'entre eux, conformément à la présente entente ou comme le comité mixte le juge approprié.

(6) Le comité mixte peut présenter les requêtes ou répondre aux requêtes ou engager les procédures qu'il juge nécessaires pour faire valoir les intérêts des membres du groupe.

(7) Le comité mixte peut répartir ses travaux entre ses membres et leurs cabinets d'avocats ou retenir les services d'autres conseillers juridiques, auquel cas les honoraires et débours de ces autres conseillers juridiques, ainsi que les taxes applicables, sont à la charge du comité mixte.

(8) Les frais et débours raisonnables du comité mixte sont payés conformément à l'article 18.02, sauf s'il n'y a pas suffisamment de fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus, auquel cas l'administrateur paie les frais et débours raisonnables du comité mixte et les débours sur Fonds en fiducie avec l'approbation des tribunaux.

(9) Si un membre du comité mixte estime que la majorité du comité mixte a pris une décision qui n'est pas dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe, le membre peut soumettre la décision à un arbitrage confidentiel et exécutoire pour déterminer, selon la prépondérance des probabilités, si la décision de la majorité n'est pas dans l'intérêt véritable du groupe. L'arbitre rend sa décision rapidement et sommairement et sans droit d'appel. Si les membres du comité mixte ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un arbitre, ils peuvent demander aux tribunaux d'en nommer un. Les frais de l'arbitrage sont à la charge du comité mixte.

(10) Le comité mixte se réunit tous les trimestres ou plus fréquemment au besoin.

ARTICLE 16 – FIDUCIAIRE ET FIDUCIE

16.01 Fiducie

Au plus tard trente (30) jours après la nomination du fiduciaire par les tribunaux, le Canada établit une seule fiducie (la « Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ») d'un capital de dix dollars (10 $), que le fiduciaire détient conformément aux conditions de la présente entente.

16.02 Fiduciaire

Sur la recommandation du comité mixte, les tribunaux nomment le fiduciaire de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités que les tribunaux ordonnent. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, le fiduciaire est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

a) détenir le Fonds en fiducie, le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations (chacun, un « Fonds ») dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre;

b) si le fiduciaire juge qu'il est dans l'intérêt véritable des membres du groupe d'investir les fonds de chaque Fonds (ou de l'un d'eux) en vue d'atteindre un taux de rendement maximal sans risque de perte important, eu égard à la capacité de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et de chaque Fonds de respecter ses obligations financières;

c) payer à l'administrateur et à toute autre personne visée à l'article 3.04 et au paragraphe 15.01(8) sur la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au besoin, les montants alors nécessaires pour donner effet à quelque disposition de la présente entente, y compris le paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;

d) retenir les services de professionnels pour l'aider dans l'exercice de ses attributions;

e) faire preuve du même degré de soin, de diligence et de compétence dont ferait preuve une personne raisonnablement prudente dans des circonstances comparables;

f) tenir les livres, registres et comptes nécessaires ou appropriés pour documenter l'actif détenu dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds, ainsi que chaque opération de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et de chaque Fonds;

g) prendre toutes les mesures raisonnables requises aux termes de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu, comme le prévoit la présente entente;

h) faire rapport à l'administrateur et au Canada et au comité mixte, trimestriellement, sur l'actif détenu dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds à la fin de chaque trimestre, ou de façon intermédiaire, si une demande lui en est faite; et

i) prendre les autres mesures qui sont accessoires à ce qui précède et exercer tous les pouvoirs qui sont nécessaires ou utiles à l'exercice des activités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ou à l'application des dispositions de la présente entente.

16.03 Frais des fiduciaires

Le Canada paie les honoraires, débours et autres frais du fiduciaire conformément à l'alinéa b).

16.04 Nature de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre

La Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre est établie aux fins suivantes :

a) acquérir les fonds applicables payables par le Canada;

b) détenir le Fonds en fiducie, le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés et le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, en tant que fonds distincts dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre;

c) effectuer les décaissements nécessaires;

d) investir des fonds dans des placements dans l'intérêt véritable des membres du groupe, comme le prévoit la présente entente; et

e) prendre les autres mesures qui sont accessoires à ce qui précède et exercer tous les pouvoirs qui sont nécessaires ou utiles à l'application des dispositions de la présente entente.

16.05 Droits légaux

La propriété légale de l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris chaque Fonds, et le droit d'exercer les activités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris les activités relatives à chaque Fonds, sont, sous réserve des restrictions et des autres conditions énoncées dans les présentes, dévolus exclusivement au fiduciaire, et les membres du groupe et autres bénéficiaires de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre n'ont pas le droit d'exiger ou d'imposer un partage, une division ou une distribution de quelque élément d'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, sauf dans le cadre d'une action visant à faire respecter les dispositions de la présente entente. Aucun membre du groupe ni aucun autre bénéficiaire de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre n'a ni n'est réputé avoir un droit de propriété sur l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

16.06 Dossiers

Le fiduciaire tient les livres, registres et comptes nécessaires ou appropriés pour documenter l'actif de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et chaque opération de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, le fiduciaire tient, à son bureau principal, des registres de toutes les opérations de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et une liste des éléments d'actif détenus en fiducie, y compris chaque Fonds, et un registre du solde du compte de chaque Fonds de temps à autre.

16.07 Rapports trimestriels

Le fiduciaire remet à l'administrateur, au Canada et au comité mixte, dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque trimestre civil, un rapport trimestriel indiquant les éléments d'actif détenus à la fin de ce trimestre dans la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et dans chaque Fonds (y compris la durée, le taux d'intérêt ou le rendement et la date d'échéance de ceux-ci) et un relevé du solde du compte de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au cours de ce trimestre.

16.08 Rapports annuels

L'auditeur remet à l'administrateur, au fiduciaire, au Canada, au comité mixte et aux tribunaux, dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque anniversaire de la date de capitalisation de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, laquelle date est la fin de l'exercice de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre :

a) les états financiers audités de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, segmentés pour chaque Fonds, pour le dernier exercice terminé, avec le rapport de l'auditeur s'y rapportant; et

b) un rapport présentant un sommaire des éléments d'actif détenus en fiducie à la fin de l'exercice pour chaque Fonds et les décaissements effectués par la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre au cours de l'exercice précédent.

16.09 Mode de paiement

Le fiduciaire a le pouvoir discrétionnaire exclusif de déterminer si une somme payée ou payable sur la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre est payée ou payable sur le revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ou sur le capital de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

16.10 Ajouts de capital

Tout revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre qui n'a pas été versé au cours d'un exercice s'ajoute à son capital à la fin de cet exercice.

16.11 Choix fiscaux

Pour chaque année d'imposition de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, le fiduciaire produit les choix et désignations qu'il peut produire en vertu de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu et des dispositions équivalentes de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire et prend toutes les autres mesures raisonnables de façon à ce que ni la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre ni aucune autre personne ne soient assujetties à l'impôt sur le revenu de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, y compris, notamment le choix en vertu du paragraphe 104(13.1) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu et des dispositions équivalentes de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire pour chaque année d'imposition de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre et le montant à préciser dans le cadre de ce choix correspond au maximum autorisé en vertu de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu ou de la législation en matière d'impôt sur le revenu d'une province ou d'un territoire, selon le cas.

16.12 Impôt sur le revenu canadien

(1) Le Canada fait de son mieux pour exonérer de l'impôt fédéral tout revenu gagné par la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, et le Canada tient compte des mesures qu'il a prises dans des circonstances analogues pour les conventions de règlements de recours collectifs visés à l'alinéa 81g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu.

(2) Les parties conviennent que les paiements aux membres du groupe sont de la nature de dommages-intérêts pour préjudice personnel et ne constituent pas un revenu imposable et le Canada fait de son mieux pour obtenir une décision anticipée en matière d'impôt en ce sens, ou à défaut une interprétation technique ayant le même effet, dans l'un ou l'autre cas auprès de la Direction des décisions en impôt de l'Agence du revenu du Canada.

16.13 Conseillers en placement

Sur demande du fiduciaire, le comité mixte peut demander aux tribunaux de nommer des conseillers en placement pour donner au fiduciaire des conseils sur le placement des fonds détenus dans chaque Fonds de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre. Le fiduciaire paie les honoraires et frais raisonnables de tous les conseillers en placement sur le Fonds applicable de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

ARTICLE 17 – AUDITEUR

17.01 Nomination de l'auditeur

Sur la recommandation du comité mixte, les tribunaux nomment l'auditeur investi des pouvoirs, des droits, des attributions et des responsabilités que les tribunaux ordonnent. Sur la recommandation des parties, ou de leur propre chef, les tribunaux peuvent remplacer l'auditeur en tout temps. Sans que soit limitée la portée générale de ce qui précède, l'auditeur est notamment investi des attributions et des responsabilités suivantes :

a) vérifier annuellement les comptes de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre conformément aux normes d'audit généralement reconnues;

b) fournir les rapports prévus à l'article 16.08; et

c) déposer les états financiers de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre, avec le rapport de l'auditeur s'y rapportant auprès des tribunaux et en remettre un exemplaire au Canada, au comité mixte, à l'administrateur et au fiduciaire dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la fin de chaque exercice de la Fiducie pour de l'eau potable salubre.

17.02 Paiement de l'auditeur

Le Canada paie les honoraires, débours et autres frais raisonnables de l'auditeur conformément à l'alinéa 3.04b).

ARTICLE 18 – FRAIS JURIDIQUES

18.01 Honoraires et frais des avocats du groupe

Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux et dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la date de mise en œuvre, le Canada paie aux avocats du groupe la somme de cinquante-trois millions de dollars (53 000 000 $), taxes applicables en sus, au titre de leurs honoraires et frais juridiques dans le cadre de la poursuite des actions jusqu'à la date de l'audition de l'approbation du règlement, et des conseils aux membres du groupe concernant l'entente et l'acceptation.

18.02 Frais continus

(1) Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux, dans les soixante (60) jours qui suivent la date de mise en œuvre, le Canada paie aux avocats du groupe la somme additionnelle de cinq millions de dollars (5 000 000 $), taxes applicables en sus, en fiducie (les « fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus ») au titre de leurs honoraires et frais pour des services devant être rendus par les avocats du groupe et le comité mixte conformément à la présente entente, y compris la mise en œuvre et l'administration de la présente entente, pour une période de quatre (4) ans après l'audition de l'approbation du règlement (les « frais continus »).

(2) Les avocats du groupe tiennent des registres appropriés et demandent l'approbation des tribunaux pour le paiement des frais continus sur les fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus.

(3) Les avocats du groupe déclarent semestriellement au Canada et aux tribunaux le solde des fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus.

(4) Les avocats du groupe demandent aux tribunaux d'ordonner le paiement des fonds détenus en fiducie à l'égard des frais continus qui demeurent en fiducie quatre (4) ans après l'audition de l'approbation du règlement.

18.03 Services juridiques continus

(1) Les avocats du groupe se partagent le travail de la prestation de services juridiques continus aux membres du groupe entre eux, ou par ailleurs selon les directives du comité mixte.

(2) Dans la mesure où les honoraires et frais des avocats du groupe, et les taxes applicables, sont payés conformément au paragraphe 18.01 ou au paragraphe 18.02, les avocats du groupe s'abstiennent de facturer aux membres du groupe quelque montant additionnel pour les services juridiques rendus conformément à la présente entente.

(3) Après la date de mise en œuvre, la responsabilité de représenter les intérêts de du groupe dans son ensemble (à l'exclusion de l'aide apporter à un ou plusieurs membres du groupe en particulier qui leur est raisonnablement demandée) passe des avocats du groupe au comité mixte, et les avocats du groupe n'ont aucune autre obligation à cet égard.

(4) Il est entendu que le comité mixte et ses membres, ainsi que les avocats nommés par le comité mixte, reçoivent leurs honoraires, frais et taxes applicables conformément au paragraphe 15.01(8).

(5) Ni les avocats du groupe ni le comité mixte n'ont la responsabilité de représenter les Premières Nations membres du groupe dans le cadre de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, à moins que leurs services ne soient retenus séparément à cette fin, auquel cas ils peuvent représenter des Premières Nations membres du groupe dans le cadre de la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement, étant entendu que leurs honoraires et frais ne sont dans ce cas pas payés conformément à l'article 18.01 ou à l'article 18.02.

18.04 Choix d'un autre avocat

Aucune disposition de la présente entente n'empêche un membre du groupe de retenir à ses frais les services d'un autre avocat que les avocats du groupe, étant entendu, toutefois, que cet autre avocat n'a droit à aucun paiement en vertu du présent Article 18 . Cet autre avocat n'a en outre pas le droit de recevoir quelque paiement de quelque nature de la part d'un membre du groupe relativement à la présente entente, que ce soit directement ou indirectement, à moins que le paiement ne soit approuvé par les tribunaux.

ARTICLE 19 – PROCÉDURE GÉNÉRALE DE RÈGLEMENT DES DIFFÉRENDS

19.01 Renvoi initial au tiers évaluateur

(1) Sous réserve de l'article 19.03, en cas de différend quant à un droit ou à une obligation aux termes de la présente entente, sauf un différend concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations ou un différend visé à l'article 9.07 (chacun de ces différends sauf un différend concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations ou un différend visé à l'article 9.07, un « différend »), les parties déploient de bonne foi des efforts raisonnables pour régler le différend dans les trente (30) jours.

(2) Si un différend ne peut être résolu dans les trente (30) jours, le Canada, le comité mixte ou un membre du groupe peut le renvoyer au tiers évaluateur

(3) Le tiers évaluateur tranche le différend dont il est ainsi saisi sommairement et fournit les motifs de sa décision par écrit.

19.02 Renvoi devant les tribunaux

(1) Le Canada et le comité mixte peuvent interjeter appel d'une décision rendue par application du paragraphe 19.01(3) devant les tribunaux, et les tribunaux révisent la décision du tiers évaluateur selon une norme de décision raisonnable.

(2) Une décision des tribunaux peut être portée en appel conformément aux règles de chaque tribunal.

19.03 Exclusion des décisions relatives à la procédure de règlement des réclamations et des plans de mesures correctrices

Il est entendu que l'Article 19 ne s'applique pas aux différends concernant la procédure de règlement des réclamations, y compris, notamment l'admissibilité au groupe et l'indemnité payable à un membre du groupe, ni à l'égard d'un plan de mesures correctrices, y compris, notamment son contenu ou la conformité du Canada, et que ces différends sont réglés conformément à la présente entente.

ARTICLE 20 – RÉSILIATION ET AUTRES CONDITIONS

20.01 Résiliation de l'entente

(1) Sauf comme il prévu au paragraphe 20.01(2), la présente entente demeure pleinement en vigueur jusqu'à ce que toutes les obligations qui y sont prévues soient honorées.

(2) Par dérogation à toute autre disposition contraire de la présente entente :

a) l'engagement demeure en vigueur et continue de s'appliquer après à la résiliation de la présente entente, de même que l'article 9.06, l'article 9.07 et l'article 9.08 et la procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement; et

b) l'article 10.02 et l'article 10.03 demeurent en vigueur après la résiliation de la présente entente; et

c) l'Article 21 demeure en vigueur après la résiliation de la présente entente.

20.02 Modifications

Sauf disposition expresse contraire dans la présente entente, des modifications ne peuvent être apportées à la présente entente qu'avec l'accord écrit des parties, et si les tribunaux ont rendu les ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, toute modification apportée à la présente entente ne prend effet qu'après avoir été approuvée par les tribunaux.

20.03 Aucune cession

(1) Sauf disposition expresse contraire dans la présente entente, aucune somme payable aux termes de la présente entente ne peut faire l'objet d'une cession et toute pareille cession est nulle et sans effet.

(2) Sauf ordonnance contraire d'un tribunal compétent et sous réserve du paragraphe 20.03(3) et de l'article 18.04, tout paiement auquel un demandeur d'indemnité a droit est versé au demandeur d'indemnité conformément aux directives que le demandeur d'indemnité donne à l'administrateur.

(3) Les paiements à l'égard d'une personne membre du groupe décédée ou d'une personne frappée d'incapacité seront versés conformément à l'Article 13 .

ARTICLE 21 – CONFIDENTIALITÉ

21.01 Confidentialité

À moins que les parties n'en conviennent autrement, l'information donnée, créée ou obtenue dans le cadre de la mise en œuvre de la présente entente est gardée confidentielle et ne saurait être utilisée à une autre fin que celle de la présente entente.

21.02 Destruction de l'information et des dossiers des membres du groupe

Deux (2) ans après avoir effectué le paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels, de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, l'administrateur détruit l'ensemble de l'information et des documents de tous les membres du groupe qu'il détient, à moins qu'un membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire ou demandeur d'indemnité successoral ne demande expressément la restitution de l'information le concernant dans le délai de deux (2) ans. Dès réception d'une demande en ce sens, l'administrateur transmet l'information concernant le membre du groupe de la manière qui lui est indiquée. Avant de détruire quelque information ou document conformément au présent article, l'administrateur prépare une analyse statistique anonymisée du groupe conformément à l'article 39 de la procédure de règlement des réclamations.

21.03 Confidentialité des négociations

À moins que les parties n'en conviennent autrement, l'engagement de confidentialité quant aux discussions et à toutes les communications, écrites ou verbales, dans le cadre et à l'égard des négociations menant à l'entente de principe et à la présente entente demeure en vigueur.

ARTICLE 22 – COOPÉRATION

22.01 Coopération quant à l'approbation et à la mise en œuvre du règlement

Dès la signature de la présente entente, les représentants demandeurs dans les actions, les avocats du groupe et le Canada font de leur mieux pour obtenir l'approbation de la présente entente par les tribunaux et pour favoriser et faciliter la participation des membres du groupe à tous les aspects de la présente entente. Si la présente entente n'est pas approuvée par les tribunaux, les parties négocient de bonne foi pour remédier aux lacunes indiquées par les tribunaux.

22.02 Annonces publiques

Dès le prononcé des ordonnances d'approbation du règlement, les parties publient une déclaration publique conjointe annonçant le règlement selon un modèle dont les parties doivent convenir et, au moment convenu d'un commun accord, font des annonces publiques en faveur de la présente entente. À la demande raisonnable de l'une d'entre elles, les parties continuent de se prononcer publiquement en faveur de la présente entente.

EN FOI DE QUOI, les parties ont signé la présente entente le 15 septembre 2021.

Recours collectif introduit en vertu de la partie 5.1 des Règles des Cours fédérale, DORS/98-106

ENTENTE DE PRINCIPE (l'« ENTENTE »)

ATTENDU QUE les demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation v Attorney General of Canada, nº dossier de la Cour 1-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale le 11 octobre 2019 (l' « action de Curve Lake ») et l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation v Attorney General of Canada, nº de dossier de la Cour CI 19-01-24661 devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba le 20 novembre 2019 (l'« action de Tataskweyak » et, collectivement avec l'action de Curve Lake, les « actions »);

ET ATTENDU QUE la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba a attesté l'action de Tataskweyak à titre de recours collectif le 14 juillet 2020 et que la Cour fédérale a autorisé l'action de Curve Lake à titre de recours collectif le 8 octobre 2020;

ET ATTENDU QUE le « groupe » dans les actions est défini comme suit :

a) Toutes les personnes qui :

i) sont membres d'une bande, au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, ch. 1-5 (« Première Nation »), dont l'aliénation des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, ch. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations ont fait l'objet d'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (soit un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, un avis de non-consommation ou de non-utilisation ou un avis similaire) qui a duré au moins un an du 20 novembre 1995 au 20 juin 2021 (« Premières Nations touchées »);

ii) n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

iii) ont résidé habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors qu'elle était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une durée d'au moins un an; et

b) la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et toute autre Première Nation qui choisit de se joindre à la présente action à titre de représentant;

Les « personnes exclues » sont des membres de la Tsuu T'ina Nation, de la Sucker Creek First Nation, de la Ermineskin Cree Nation, de la Tribu des Blood et de la Okanagan Indian Band, et Michael Darryl Isnardy.

ET ATTENDU QUE le groupe a subi d'énormes préjudices en étant privé d'eau potable salubre et que les personnes et les collectivités touchées en ont gravement souffert;

ET ATTENDU QUE le groupe a demandé un jugement sommaire sur la première question commune concernant l'existence et la portée de l'obligation du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre aux membres du groupe;

ET ATTENDU QU'aucune personne membre du groupe ne s'est retirée des actions et que quelques cent vingt-deux (122) Premières Nations membres du groupe se sont jointes aux actions;

ET ATTENDU QUE le défendeur (« Canada ») reconnaît les difficultés auxquelles sont confrontés les membres du groupe et souhaite les aider à obtenir un accès courant à de l'eau potable salubre;

ET ATTENDU QUE le Canada est disposé à régler les actions aux conditions énoncées ci-après, sous réserve de la négociation d'une entente de règlement définitive (l'« entente de règlement »);

ET ATTENDU QUE la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias et la Première Nation de Neskantaga (collectivement, les « représentants demandeurs ») sont disposés à régler les actions selon les modalités énoncées ci-après, sous réserve que ces dernières soient intégrées dans l'entente de règlement, et recommandent aux Premières Nations membres du groupe d'accepter ces modalités;

PAR CONSÉQUENT, le Canada et les demandeurs négocient de bonne foi et déploient tous les efforts raisonnables pour signer l'entente de règlement au plus tard le 27 août 2021, sous réserve de l'accord des parties à une prolongation.

ARTICLE 1 GÉNÉRALITÉS

(49) Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau : Le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau au sens du paragraphe Error! Reference source not found.

1.02 Administration

(1) Les parties conviennent du choix de l'administrateur. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à une entente, toute partie peut présenter une requête pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux.

(2) L'administrateur est nommé par les tribunaux.

(3) Le Canada est seul responsable du paiement des honoraires et débours raisonnables de l'administrateur, y compris les taxes applicables.

1.03 Fonds en fiducie

(1) Dès que possible après sa nomination, l'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le « compte en fiducie »).

(2) Le Canada réglera le fonds en fiducie en versant un milliard quatre cent trente-huit millions de dollars (1 438 000 000 $) dans le compte en fiducie dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date à laquelle les ordonnances approuvant l'entente de règlement deviennent définitives, compte tenu des appels.

(3) Si les avocats du groupe, de l'avis d'un actuaire expert, déterminent qu'il y a des fonds non affectés dans le fonds en fiducie (l' « excédent »), ces fonds sont distribués au profit direct ou indirect du groupe.

(4) Les avocats du groupe, suivant les conseils des membres du groupe ou d'un comité représentatif de ceux-ci, proposeront une répartition de l'excédent, qui pourra comprendre ce qui suit :

i) le transfert d'un maximum de quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) au Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations;

ii) l'augmentation des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;

iii) des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation pour les demandeurs en retard qui ont présenté des réclamations valides après la date limite pour les réclamations;

iv) l'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés si le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés était insuffisant pour verser l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour toutes les réclamations valides; ou

v) de la programmation visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques culturelles ou spirituelles, l'étude ou la guérison relative aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

b) Les avocats du groupe présentent des requêtes pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux en vue de l'approbation de la distribution proposée de l'excédent.

(5) Il est entendu qu'il n'y aura pas de réversion au Canada des fonds en fiducie et que le Canada ne sera pas un bénéficiaire admissible de l'excédent.

1.04 Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations

(1) Les parties reconnaissent l'importance de fournir aux Premières Nations des fonds pour des projets liés à l'eau et aux eaux usées, au développement économique et aux activités culturelles. Les parties respectent l'autonomie des Premières Nations quant à l'utilisation des fonds.

(2) Dès que possible après sa nomination, l'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le « compte du Fonds de relance »).

(3) Le Canada finance le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations en versant quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) dans le compte du Fonds de relance dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date à laquelle les ordonnances approuvant l'entente de règlement deviennent définitives, compte tenu des appels.

(4) Si des fonds demeurent dans le compte du Fonds de relance après l'expiration de la date limite pour les réclamations et que l'administrateur a payé tous les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation (les « fonds excédentaires »), ces fonds sont distribués au profit direct ou indirect du groupe.

(5) Les avocats du groupe, suivant les conseils des membres du groupe, proposeront une répartition des fonds excédentaires, qui pourra comprendre ce qui suit :

i) l'augmentation des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation;

ii) des dommages-intérêts individuels ou des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation pour les demandeurs en retard qui ont présenté des réclamations valides après la date limite pour les réclamations;

iii) l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés était insuffisant pour verser l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés pour toutes les réclamations valides; ou iv) de la programmation visant à promouvoir l'éducation, les pratiques culturelles ou spirituelles, l'étude ou la guérison relative aux avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

b) Les avocats du groupe présentent des requêtes pour obtenir des directives devant les tribunaux en vue de l'approbation de la distribution proposée des fonds excédentaires.

(6) Il n'y aura pas de réversion au Canada du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations et le Canada ne sera pas un bénéficiaire admissible des fonds excédentaires.

1.05 Admissibilité

(1) L'administrateur doit examiner chaque formulaire de réclamation, confirmation du conseil de bande ou tout autre renseignement qu'il juge pertinent pour identifier les membres admissibles du groupe (la « décision quant à l'admissibilité »). L'administrateur doit donner des motifs écrits lorsqu'il établit qu'un demandeur n'est pas un membre du groupe.

(2) Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité refusant l'adhésion au groupe, le demandeur et toute partie peuvent interjeter appel de la décision d'admissibilité.

(3) La procédure d'appel à l'égard d'une décision quant à l'admissibilité est décidée par les parties.

ARTICLE 2 INDEMNISATION RÉTROSPECTIVE

2.01 Calcul des dommages-intérêts des personnes membres du groupe

(1) L'administrateur calculera les dommages-intérêts des personnes membres du groupe conformément à l'information présentée dans un formulaire de réclamation valide, une confirmation du conseil de bande ou tout autre renseignement qu'il juge pertinent, conformément à la formule énoncée ci-après (la « formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels »).

(2) Les personnes membres du groupe recevront des dommages-intérêts (les « dommages-intérêts individuels ») :

a) Si la personne membre du groupe n'avait pas encore atteint l'âge de 18 ans le 20 novembre 2013, pour chaque année, au cours de la période visée, durant laquelle elle résidait habituellement dans une réserve pendant qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur; ou

b) Si la personne membre du groupe avait atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013, pour chaque année du 20 novembre 2013 jusqu'à la fin de la période visée, durant laquelle elle résidait habituellement dans une réserve alors qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur.

(3) Les dommages-intérêts individuels seront payés environ aux taux suivants, les taux réels devant être déterminés par les avocats du groupe sur avis d'un actuaire expert :

a) Mille trois cents dollars (1 300 $) par année pour un avis d'ébullition de l'eau qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée;

b) Mille six cent cinquante (1 650 $) par année pour un avis de non-consommation qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée;

c) Deux mille dollars (2 000 $) par année pour un avis de non-utilisation qui vise une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation éloignée; et

d) Deux mille dollars (2 000 $) par année pour tout avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une Première Nation éloignée.

(4) Les dommages-intérêts individuels seront payés au prorata de toute partie d'une année pour laquelle ils sont exigibles.

2.02 Paiement des dommages-intérêts individuels des membres du groupe

(1) Dans un délai raisonnable que les parties doivent fixer en consultation avec l'administrateur, l'administrateur doit verser à chaque personne membre du groupe les dommages-intérêts individuels des fonds en fiducie conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels.

2.03 Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés

(1) En plus des dommages-intérêts individuels, les personnes membres du groupe peuvent indiquer sur leur formulaire de réclamation qu'ils réclament des dommages-intérêts pour des conditions médicales précises qui ont été causées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans une réserve où elles résidaient habituellement (les « préjudices déterminés »). Il est entendu que le demandeur doit établir que le préjudice a été causé par l'utilisation d'eau, autre que l'eau de source, conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou par le manque d'eau propre pendant un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

(2) Les parties déterminent la liste des préjudices déterminés, ainsi que l'indemnité pour chaque préjudice déterminé (l'« indemnité pour préjudices déterminés »).

(3) L'administrateur doit établir un compte en fiducie portant intérêt à une Banque canadienne de l'annexe I (le « compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés »).

(4) Le Canada réglera le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés en versant cinquante millions de dollars (50 000 000 $) dans le compte d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date à laquelle les ordonnances approuvant l'entente de règlement deviennent définitives, compte tenu des appels.

(5) Les parties conviennent de ce qui suit :

a) Les moyens de prouver un préjudice déterminé d'une manière non conflictuelle et culturellement sensible de manière à ne pas traumatiser de nouveau les demandeurs;

b) Un délai approprié pour que l'administrateur détermine la validité d'une demande d'indemnisation pour des préjudices déterminés (une « décision relative aux préjudices déterminés »); et

c) Un mécanisme d'appel et un calendrier appropriés;

(6) Les avocats du groupe aident les personnes membres du groupe ou leurs représentants, sur demande, à présenter une demande d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés ou à faire appel d'une décision relative aux préjudices déterminés sans frais pour le Canada ou la personne membre du groupe.

(7) Dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant la date limite pour les réclamations, l'administrateur doit déterminer s'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés pour payer l'indemnité pour chaque réclamation valide.

a) S'il y a suffisamment de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur doit verser à chaque membre du groupe l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés; ou

b) En cas d'insuffisance de fonds dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur verse aux personnes membres du groupe leur quote-part du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, proportionnelle à l'indemnisation pour les préjudices déterminés qui leur seraient dus.

(8) Il n'y a pas de réversion au Canada du Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés.

(9) Si des fonds restent dans le Fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés après avoir payé toutes les demandes d'indemnisation pour les dommages déterminés, l'administrateur les verse au fonds en fiducie.

2.04 Calcul des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe

(1) L'administrateur calcule les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation membre du groupe selon la formule indiquée ci-après (la « formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation »).

(2) Chaque Première Nation membre du groupe recevra une indemnité de base de cinq cent mille dollars (500 000 $) (l'« indemnité de base »).

(3) En plus de l'indemnité de base, les Premières Nations recevront un montant correspondant à cinquante pour cent (50 %) des dommages-intérêts individuels payés aux personnes membres du groupe à l'égard des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans les réserves ou réserves des Premières Nations membre du groupe (les « dommages-intérêts de Première Nation »).

2.05 Paiement des dommages-intérêts des Premières Nations membres du groupe

(1) L'administrateur paie l'indemnité de base et les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation provenant du Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations.

(2) L'administrateur paie l'indemnité de base à chaque Première Nation membre du groupe dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant l'approbation de l'entente de règlement par les tribunaux, y compris tous les appels, et à une Première Nation membre du groupe qui donne un avis d'acceptation aux avocats du groupe.

(3) Tous les six (6) mois après que l'indemnité de base a été versée conformément au paragraphe 2.05(2), l'administrateur paie à la Première Nation membre du groupe les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation qui ont été accumulés à ce jour.

2.06 Aucune disposition relative aux préjudices continus

(1) L'entente ne prévoit pas que des dommages-intérêts seront accordés aux membres du groupe à l'égard des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui commencent ou se poursuivent après le 20 juin 2021, et les membres du groupe ne renoncent pas à quelque réclamation à l'égard de ces dommages-intérêts futurs.

2.07 Responsabilité du Canada

(1) Les parties conviennent expressément qu'au moment de faire les paiements prévus dans l'entente de règlement, la responsabilité du Canada envers les personnes membres du groupe et les Premières Nations membres du groupe qui ont accepté l'entente de règlement pour les préjudices jusqu'au 20 juin 2021, en raison du défaut du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable propre, est terminée.

(2) Les parties devront convenir d'un libellé de renonciation spécifique pour l'entente de règlement.

ARTICLE 3 RÉPARATION PROSPECTIVE

3.01 Plan d'action pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe devant être mis en œuvre

(1) Le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour appuyer l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui concernent les membres du groupe, y compris en prenant les mesures énoncées dans le plan d'action, dans les délais prévus dans le projet.

(2) Le plan d'action peut être modifié avec le consentement des parties, en plus d'être mis à jour régulièrement par le Canada au fur et à mesure que des progrès sont réalisés.

(3) Aucune disposition de l'entente n'empêche le Canada de prendre des mesures supplémentaires au profit des membres du groupe, mesures qui ne sont pas prévues dans le plan d'action.

3.02 Engagement à prendre des mesures supplémentaires

(1) En plus du plan d'action, le défendeur doit faire tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe qui vivent sur les réserves aient régulièrement accès à l'eau potable à leur domicile, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'eau public ou privé approuvé par une résolution du conseil de bande, y compris les systèmes sur place, qui respecte les exigences les plus strictes entre les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales régissant la qualité de l'eau résidentielle (l'« engagement »). Il est entendu :

a) qu'un accès courant doit permettre toutes les utilisations habituelles et nécessaires de l'eau dans une maison canadienne située dans un endroit similaire, y compris, notamment, l'eau potable, pour se laver et pour l'hygiène personnelle, pour la préparation d'aliments et pour laver la vaisselle, pour l'assainissement et pour la blanchisserie;

b) que l'engagement se limite aux efforts raisonnables du Canada, y compris la fourniture réelle de financement au titre des coûts, de formation, de planification et d'assistance technique;

c) que si, malgré les efforts raisonnables du Canada, un accès courant ne peut être obtenu, le Canada n'est pas tenu de garantir un accès courant au domicile d'une personne membre du groupe; et

d) que les facteurs qui peuvent être pris en compte dans la détermination des efforts raisonnables comprennent, notamment :

i) les points de vue de la Première Nation;

ii) les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux relatifs à l'eau;

iii) si de la surveillance et des essais sont effectués sur le réseau d'alimentation en eau; et

iv) l'emplacement physique du domicile, y compris la proximité des réseaux d'alimentation en eau centralisés et l'éloignement.

(2) Le Canada doit dépenser au moins six milliards de dollars (6 000 000 000 $) jusqu'en 2030, comme le prévoit le Budget principal des dépenses de Services aux Autochtones Canada, au taux d'au moins quatre cents millions de dollars (400 000 000 $) par année, pour respecter l'engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de la mise à niveau, de l'exploitation, de l'aménagement et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves pour les Premières Nations (les « dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement »).

a) Le Canada doit remettre aux avocats du groupe un état annuel de toutes les dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement jusqu'en 2030.

b) Sur demande, le Canada remet à toute Première Nation membre du groupe un état des dépenses dans le cadre de l'engagement qu'il a reçu.

3.03 Abrogation et remplacement de la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fera tous les efforts raisonnables pour déposer une loi abrogeant la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 (la « LSEPPN ») au plus tard le 31 mars 2022.

(2) Le Canada fera tous les efforts raisonnables pour élaborer et déposer une loi remplaçant la LSEPPN (la « loi remplaçante »), en consultation avec les Premières Nations, et pour déposer cette loi au plus tard le 31 décembre 2022.

(3) La loi remplaçante vise les objectifs suivants :

a) Assurer la viabilité des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations, en fonction des prémisses suivantes :

i) Définir des normes minimales de qualité de l'eau pour les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations, compte tenu des normes qui s'appliquent directement aux collectivités des Premières Nations; et

ii) Définir des normes minimales de capacité pour l'approvisionnement en eau des collectivités des Premières Nations, quant au volume par personne membre de la collectivité;

b) Élaborer une approche transparente pour la construction, l'amélioration et la prestation de services d'approvisionnement en eau potable et de traitement des eaux usées pour les Premières Nations;

c) Confirmer le financement adéquat et durable des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées des Premières Nations; et

d) Appuyer la prise en charge volontaire de l'infrastructure d'approvisionnement en eau et de traitement des eaux usées par les Premières Nations.

(4) Indépendamment de son engagement de déposer la loi remplaçante, le Canada appuie l'élaboration d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations, comme il est décrit à l'article 3.04, ci-après.

3.04 Comité consultatif des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit vingt millions de dollars (20 000 000 $) de financement jusqu'à l'exercice 2025/2026, pour la création du comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre (le « CCPNEPS »).

(2) La composition du CCPNEPS est représentative de la diversité des collectivités, des langues, des genres, des territoires, des compétences, des connaissances et de l'expérience de la précarité de l'approvisionnement en eau des Premières Nations membres du groupe au Canada.

(3) Le CCPNEPS est investi des fonctions principales suivantes :

a) Travailler avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe à assurer une supervision et un encadrement et à faire des recommandations à Services aux Autochtones Canada propres à favoriser l'élaboration et la mise en œuvre d'initiatives stratégiques prospectives, y compris notamment :

i) L'élaboration de la stratégie à long terme pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées de Services aux Autochtones Canada dans les réserves des Premières Nations membres du groupe; et

ii) L'élaboration de la loi remplaçante;

b) Fournir à Services aux Autochtones Canada des conseils et des perspectives stratégiques propres à favoriser la viabilité à long terme pour de l'eau potable salubre dans les collectivités des Premières Nations; et

c) Appuyer l'établissement des besoins et des priorités du financement pour l'approvisionnement en eau et le traitement des eaux usées dans les collectivités des Premières Nations.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du CCPNEPS.

3.05 Initiatives en matière de gouvernance des Premières Nations

(1) Le Canada fournit neuf millions de dollars (9 000 000 $) de financement aux Premières Nations pour qu'elles élaborent leurs propres règlements et initiatives en matière de gouvernance jusqu'à l'exercice 2025/2026 (le « Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau »).

(2) La capitalisation du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau s'effectue jusqu'à la période indiquée, que la loi remplaçante soit ou non adoptée, notamment dans les délais prévus.

(3) Le Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau aide les Premières Nations membres du groupe qui souhaitent élaborer leurs propres initiatives en matière de gouvernance de l'eau, notamment pour la recherche, l'obtention de conseils techniques, la rédaction de règlements et la mise en œuvre de projets pilotes dans les communautés des Premières Nations.

(4) Les parties établissent conjointement le mandat du Fonds pour la gouvernance de l'eau.

3.06 Accord sur les mesures requises

(1) Le Canada doit consulter sans délai chaque Première Nation membre du groupe qui l'avise que l'engagement n'est pas respecté ou qu'il cesse d'être respecté (chacune étant une « Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ») en vue de respecter l'engagement.

(2) Le Canada doit déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour parvenir à un accord avec la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie précisant les mesures qui sont nécessaires pour respecter l'engagement (un « accord de réparation »).

(3) Le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie doivent se conforment à l'accord de réparation.

3.07 Règlement des différends concernant les mesures requises

(1) Si le Canada ne parvient pas à un accord de réparation avec une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie après six (6) mois, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie soumettent chacun leur projet d'accord de réparation à un processus de règlement des différends (la « procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement »).

(2) La procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement sera élaborée conjointement par les parties et intégrera les pratiques de règlement des différends autochtones.

[Cet espace a été volontairement laissé en blanc]

LES PARTIES CONVIENNENT DES MODALITÉS CI-DESSUS et elles négocieront de bonne foi et feront tous les efforts raisonnables pour signer l'entente de règlement au plus tard le 27 août 2021, ou à toute autre date dont les parties peuvent convenir.

ORDONNANCE

LA PRÉSENTE REQUÊTE en autorisation, présentée par les demandeurs, a été entendue le 16 septembre 2020.

À LA LECTURE du dossier de requête des demandeurs et du consentement du défendeur.

1. LA COUR ORDONNE que ce recours soit et est autorisé par les présentes comme un recours collectif conformément aux Règles des cours fédérales, 334.16 et 334.17.

2. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que le groupe est défini comme suit :

(a) Toutes les personnes autres que les personnes exclues :

(i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c, I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant (les «Premières Nations touchées»);

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

(iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

Les « personnes exclues » sont les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan, et Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que, jusqu'à ce que les réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours collectif soient entièrement et définitivement décidées, réglées, interrompues ou abandonnées, y compris l'épuisement de tous les droits d'appel, la permission de la Cour est requise pour introduire tout autre recours, instance ou procédure pour le compte d'un membre du groupe à l'égard des réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours, sauf les recours, instances ou procédures introduits pour le compte des membres du groupe qui se sont exclus du présent recours collectif de la manière prescrite ci-après.

4. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont par les présentes autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte du groupe dans son ensemble:

(a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE qu'un sous-groupe soit et est par les présentes reconnu pour les membres de chaque Première Nation touchée, et la Première Nation elle-même, s'il s'agit d'une Nation participante;

6. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont, par les présentes, autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe :

(a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?

(b) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?

(c) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

(d) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 6(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?

(e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?

(f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?

(g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?

(h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?

(i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

7. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, le chef Christopher Moonias et la Première Nation de Neskantaga sont nommés par les présentes représentants demandeurs du groupe.

8. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP sont nommés par les présentes avocats du groupe (les «avocats du groupe »).

9. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les demandeurs et le défendeur déploient des efforts raisonnables pour convenir de la nomination d'un administrateur aux fins de donner avis de l'autorisation du présent recours collectif (l'« administrateur »). Les parties avisent la Cour de la nomination de l'administrateur dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date de la présente ordonnance, à défaut de quoi la Cour nomme un administrateur dûment qualifié.

10. LA COUR ORDONNE que les membres du groupe soient avisés que le présent recours a été autorisé en tant que recours collectif de la manière suivante, ce qui constitue et est par les présentes réputé constituer un avis adéquat :

(a) l'avis simplifié figurant à l'annexe A et l'avis détaillé figurant à l'annexe B, ainsi que la traduction en français de ces documents sont affichés, tel que convenu par les parties, sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;

(b) l'administrateur publie l'avis simplifié dans les journaux indiqués à l'annexe C jointe aux présentes, en format ¼ de page dans l'édition de fin de semaine de chaque journal, si possible;

(c) l'administrateur distribue l'avis simplifié à tous les bureaux de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, de la Première Nation de Neskantaga et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

(d) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé à tout membre du groupe qui en fait la demande;

(e) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé aux chefs de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues;

(f) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé au bureau de la bande ou à un bureau analogue de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues, en demandant qu'ils soient affichés dans un endroit bien visible;

(g) l'administrateur établit une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe.

11. LA COUR ORDONNE que le défendeur soit responsable du coût de la remise d'un avis d'autorisation d'un recours collectif tel qu'il est énoncé au paragraphe 10 ci-dessus.

12. LA COUR ORDONNE que, dans les 30 jours qui suivent la date de la présente ordonnance, les demandeurs et le défendeur échangent une liste de leurs meilleurs renseignements sur les noms des Premières Nations qui peuvent participer au groupe, et ces listes constituent le moyen d'établir les Premières Nations qui ont droit à un avis direct aux fins des paragraphes 10(e) et (f) ci-dessus.

13. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'un membre du groupe puisse s'exclure du présent recours collectif en remettant un coupon d'exclusion signé, dont un modèle est joint à l'annexe D, ou une autre demande d'exclusion signée et lisible, dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date à laquelle l'avis est publié pour la première fois conformément au paragraphe 10(b) ci-dessus (la «date limite d'exclusion »), à l'administrateur. L'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé doivent indiquer la date limite d'exclusion et l'adresse de l'administrateur aux fins de la réception des coupons d'exclusion.

14. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse s'exclure du présent recours collectif après la date limite d'exclusion, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

15. LA COUR ORDONNE que l'administrateur signifie aux parties et dépose auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite d'exclusion, une déclaration sous serment énumérant toutes les personnes qui ont fait leur choix de s'exclure du recours collectif, le cas échéant.

16. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'une Première Nation touchée puisse participer au présent recours collectif en mandatant les avocats du groupe au moins cent vingt (120) jours avant le règlement de l'une ou l'autre des questions communes (la « date limite de participation »), aux avocats du groupe, à l'adresse indiquée au paragraphe 11 ci-dessus.

17. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse participer au présent recours collectif après la date limite de participation, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

18. LA COUR ORDONNE que les avocats du groupe signifient aux parties et déposent auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite de participation, une liste de toutes les Premières Nations touchées qui ont choisi de participer au recours collectif.

19. LA COUR DÉCLARE que le plan de poursuite de l'instance joint aux présentes à l'appendice 1 est une méthode pratique pour faire avancer le recours collectif pour le compte du groupe.

20. LA COUR ORDONNE que chaque partie supporte ses propres frais de la requête en autorisation du présent recours collectif.

Avis juridique

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Une poursuite pourrait avoir une incidence sur vous et votre Première Nation. Veuillez lire ceci attentivement.

Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif en raison du manque d'accessibilité à l'eau potable propre sur les réserves des Premières Nations.

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé qu'un recours collectif au nom d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande pouvait être intenté. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Il n'y a pas d'argent disponible à l'heure actuelle et rien ne garantit que le recours collectif sera accueilli.

Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.

De quoi s'agit-il?

Le présent recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Le recours collectif allègue que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Le recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. La Cour n'a pas statué sur la véracité de ces allégations. En l'absence de règlement, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant le tribunal.

Si vous avez des questions au sujet du présent recours collectif, vous pouvez communiquer avec M. Eric Khan au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com.

Qui représente le groupe?

Particuliers membres du groupe : Qui est inclus et qui est exclu?

Membres d'une bande inclus : Le groupe comprend les membres d'une bande (au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens) : a) dont la réserve était visée par un avis concernant l'eau potable (tel qu'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, etc.) pendant au moins un an à un moment quelconque du 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant; b) qui n'étaient pas décédés avant le 20 novembre 2017; et c) qui vivent habituellement dans leur réserve.

Membres d'une bande exclus : Les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et Michael Daryl Isnardy sont exclus de ce recours collectif.

Particuliers : Quelles sont vos options?

Demeurer dans le groupe : Pour demeurer dans le groupe, vous n'avez rien à faire. Si le groupe obtient de l'argent ou des avantages, les avocats du groupe donneront un avis sur la façon de réclamer votre part. Vous serez légalement lié par toutes les ordonnances et tous les jugements, et vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada au sujet des mêmes réclamations en droit.

Le fait de demeurer dans le groupe n'aura pas d'incidence sur le soutien reçu des organismes communautaires qui sont financés par un gouvernement.

S'exclure du groupe : Si vous ne souhaitez pas participer à ce recours collectif, vous devez vous en exclure. Si vous vous excluez, vous ne pouvez pas obtenir d'argent ni d'avantages de ce litige. Pour vous exclure, veuillez visiter [NDR : Insérer le site Web de l'administrateur pour ce recours] pour obtenir un coupon d'exclusion ou écrire à CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 afin de demander votre exclusion du présent recours collectif. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Votre demande d'exclusion doit être envoyée au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la date de la première publication de l'avis].

Premières Nations : Quelles sont vos options?

Choisir de se joindre au groupe : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au groupe et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour participer au recours. Pour participer au recours ou obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille 416-598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Votre demande de participation doit être envoyée au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

Transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin

Les représentants demandeurs et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

Annexe B

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Si vous avez répondu « OUI », un recours collectif pourrait avoir une incidence sur vos droits et les droits des Premières Nations

Un tribunal a autorisé le présent avis

- Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif visant l'accès à l'eau potable propre dans vos communautés des Premières Nations.
- La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé que des recours collectifs peuvent être introduits pour le compte d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.
- Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué si le Canada avait eu des comportements fautifs, et la question à savoir si le Canada a fait quelque chose de mal doit éventuellement être décidée par le tribunal. Il n'y a pas d'argent offert actuellement et rien ne garantit qu'il y en aura. Cependant, vos droits sont touchés et vous avez un choix à faire maintenant. Le présent avis vise à vous aider, vous et votre Première Nation, à faire ce choix.

PARTICULIERS MEMBRES D'UNE BANDE : VOS DROITS LÉGAUX ET OPTIONS À CETTE ÉTAPE
NE RIEN FAIRE : CONSERVER VOS DROITS DANS LE CADRE DU GROUPE	Demeurer membre du groupe dans le cadre de ces poursuites et attendre le résultat du litige. Partager les avantages éventuels résultant du litige, mais abandonner certains droits individuels. En ne faisant rien, vous gardez la possibilité de recevoir de l'argent ou d'autres avantages pouvant découler d'un procès ou d'un règlement. Mais vous renoncez à tout droit de poursuivre vous-même le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans la présente poursuite.
VOUS EXCLURE DU GROUPE (OPTION D'EXCLUSION)	Vous exclure du groupe dans le cadre de ces poursuites et n'en tirer aucun avantage. Conserver ses droits. Si vous demandez de vous exclure du groupe et que de l'argent ou des avantages sont ultérieurement attribués aux membres du groupe, vous n'en bénéficierez pas. Mais vous conservez le droit de poursuivre vous-même le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans la présente poursuite.

QUESTIONS? APPELEZ SANS FRAIS AU 1-800-538-0009 OU VISITEZ HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

CHOISIR DE SE JOINDRE AU GROUPE (OPTION DE PARTICIPATION)	Se joindre au groupe. Si vous vous joignez au groupe, vos Premières Nations pourraient partager l'argent et les avantages résultant du litige. En vous joignant au groupe (option de participation), les Premières Nations pourraient recevoir de l'argent ou d'autres avantages, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau, qui pourraient découler d'un procès ou d'un règlement dans le cadre du recours collectif. Il est facile de participer et cela ne coûte rien.

NE RIEN FAIRE: PERDRE LES DROITS DE VOTRE PREMIÈRE NATION AUX TERMES DU RECOURS COLLECTIF	En ne faisant rien, votre Première Nation perdra la possibilité de recevoir de l'argent et d'autres avantages si le recours collectif est accueilli favorablement. Si les Premières Nations se joignent pas au groupe (option de participation) et que de l'argent ou des avantages sont ultérieurement attribués, votre Première Nation n'en bénéficiera pas. En choisissant de ne pas participer, votre Première Nation peut conserver les droits de poursuivre le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans le présent litige.

- Les avocats doivent prouver les réclamations contre le Canada lors d'un procès ou conclure un règlement. Si de l'argent ou des avantages sont obtenus, vous serez avisé de la façon de réclamer votre part.

- Vos options sont expliquées dans le présent avis. Pour être exclu du recours, les particuliers membres d'une bande doivent en faire la demande au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis.]. Pour se joindre au recours collectif, les Premières Nations doivent envoyer leur avis de participation au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

QUE CONTIENT LE PRÉSENT AVIS?

RENSEIGNEMENTS DE BASE

1. Pourquoi le présent avis est-il remis?

Les tribunaux ont des recours collectifs « autorisés ». Cela signifie que les poursuites respectent les exigences relatives aux recours collectifs et peuvent être instruites. Si vous êtes inclus, vous pourriez avoir des droits légaux et des options avant que les tribunaux ne statuent sur le bien-fondé des réclamations intentées contre le Canada en votre nom. Le présent avis tente d'expliquer toutes ces démarches.

Le juge en chef Joyal de la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba préside actuellement l'affaire Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Le juge Favel de la Cour fédérale du Canada préside actuellement l'affaire Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. Les personnes qui intentent une poursuite sont appelées les demandeurs. Le Canada est le défendeur. Un lien vers la dernière version de la demande introductive d'instance (le document juridique énonçant les allégations contre le Canada) est disponible ici : https://www.mccarthy.ca/fr/action-collective-concernant-les-avis-sur-la-qualite-de-leau-potable-des-premieres-nations.

2. Quel est l'objet du présent recours?

Les présents recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Les recours collectifs allèguent également que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Les recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué (et le Canada n'a fait aucun aveu) quant à la véracité de l'une ou l'autre de ces affirmations. S'il n'y a pas de règlement avec le Canada, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant la Cour.

Si vous éprouvez des difficultés à comprendre cet enjeu ou si vous avez des questions au sujet du recours collectif, vous pouvez composer le 1-800-538-0009 pour obtenir de l'aide.

3. Pourquoi s'agit-il d'un recours collectif?

Dans un recours collectif, les « représentants demandeurs » (en l'espèce, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Nesktanaga et le chef Christopher Moonias) ont poursuivi en justice au nom des particuliers membres d'une bande et de Premières Nations qui ont des revendications semblables. Tous ces particuliers membres d'une bande font partie du « groupe » ou sont des « membres du groupe », de même que les Premières Nations qui choisissent de se joindre au recours collectif. La Cour règle les questions pour tous les membres du groupe dans une même affaire, sauf (dans le cas des particuliers membres du groupe) pour ceux qui se retirent du groupe (option d'exclusion) et (dans le cas des Premières Nations) pour ceux qui ne se joignent pas au recours collectif (option de participation).

4. Qui est membre du groupe?

Le groupe comprend et exclut les personnes suivantes :

Toutes les personnes, sauf les « personnes exclues » :

(i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c, I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire, d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 (les « Premières Nations touchées »);

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées deux ans avant le début du présent recours (soit, au plus tard le 20 novembre 2017);

(iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée pendant qu'elle était visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

Les « personnes exclues » sont des membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de Michael Daryl Isnardy.

5. Que veulent les demandeurs?

Les demandeurs réclament des sommes d'argent et d'autres avantages pour le groupe, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau. Les demandeurs réclament également des honoraires d'avocats et des frais de justice, majorés des intérêts.

6. Y a-t-il de l'argent offert maintenant pour les membres du groupe?

Il n'y a pas d'argent ni d'avantages à l'heure actuelle parce que la Cour n'a pas encore statué quant aux comportements fautifs du Canada et que les deux parties n'ont pas conclu de règlement. Rien ne garantit que des sommes d'argent ou des avantages seront obtenus. Si de l'argent ou d'autres avantages deviennent disponibles, un avis sera donné sur la façon de réclamer votre part.

VOS DROITS ET OPTIONS

Chaque particulier membre d'une bande doit décider s'il veut rester ou non dans le groupe, et doit le faire au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis]. Les

Premières Nations doivent décider de se joindre ou non au groupe au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

7. Que se passe-t-il si je ne fais rien? Que se passe-t-il si la Première Nation ne fait rien?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne faites rien, vous resterez automatiquement dans le recours collectif. Vous serez lié par toutes les ordonnances de la Cour, bonnes ou mauvaises. Si des sommes d'argent ou d'autres avantages sont attribués, vous pourriez avoir à prendre des mesures après avoir reçu un avis pour recevoir des avantages.
Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations doivent choisir de se joindre au recours collectif pour recevoir les avantages éventuels et être liées par toutes les ordonnances, bonnes ou mauvaises.

8. Que se passe-t-il si je ne veux pas me joindre au recours? Que se passe-t-il si une Première Nation souhaite se joindre au recours?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne souhaitez pas être partie à l'instance, vous devez vous retirer – c'est-à-dire choisir « l'option d'exclusion ». Si vous vous retirez, vous ne recevrez aucun avantage pouvant découler du recours collectif. Vous ne serez pas lié par des ordonnances de la Cour et vous conservez le droit de poursuivre le Canada en tant que particulier à l'égard des questions en l'espèce.

Pour vous exclure, envoyez une communication indiquant que vous souhaitez être retiré du groupe de Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada, dossier de la Cour nº CI-19-01-2466. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Vous pouvez également obtenir un formulaire d'exclusion à l'adresse [insérer le lien Web de l'administrateur]. Vous devez faire parvenir votre demande d'exclusion au plus tard le [NDR : 90 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis] à: CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 ou info@classaction2.com.

Composez le 1-800-538-0009 si vous avez des questions sur la façon de vous exclure du recours collectif.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au recours collectif et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur bande ou de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour s'y joindre – c'est-à-dire choisir l' « option de participation ». Pour choisir l'option de participation ou pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694. Les demandes de participation des Premières Nations doivent être envoyées au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

LES AVOCATS QUI VOUS REPRÉSENTENT

9. Les particuliers membres d'une bande sont-ils représentés par un avocat dans ce recours?

Oui. La Cour a nommé McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP pour vous représenter, ainsi que d'autres membres du groupe, à titre d'« avocats du groupe ». Vous n'aurez pas à payer d'honoraires ou d'autres frais juridiques pour ces avocats. Si vous souhaitez être représenté par un autre avocat, vous pouvez en retenir un pour comparaître devant la Cour à vos propres frais.

10. Comment les avocats seront-ils payés?

Les avocats ne seront payés que s'ils obtiennent gain de cause ou concluent un règlement. La Cour doit également approuver leur demande de rémunération. Les honoraires et frais pourraient être déduits des sommes obtenues pour le groupe, ou payés séparément par le défendeur.

PROCÈS

11. Quand et comment la Cour tranchera-t-elle qui a raison?

Si le recours collectif n'est pas rejeté ou réglé, les demandeurs doivent prouver leurs réclamations dans le cadre d'une requête en jugement sommaire ou d'un procès qui aura lieu à Ottawa (Ontario). Au cours de la requête ou du procès, la Cour entendra tous les éléments de preuve de manière à ce qu'elle puisse rendre une décision sur la question de savoir qui des demandeurs ou du Canada a raison à propos des réclamations dans le recours collectif. Rien ne garantit que les demandeurs gagneront quelque somme d'argent ou avantage pour le groupe.

12. Est-ce que je recevrai de l'argent après le procès?

Si les demandeurs obtiennent de l'argent ou des avantages à la suite d'un procès ou d'un règlement, vous serez avisé de la façon d'en demander une part ou des autres options que vous avez à ce moment-là. Ces choses ne sont pas connues à l'heure actuelle. Des renseignements importants sur cette affaire seront affichés sur le site Web [NDR : insérer le site Web de l'administrateur] dès qu'ils seront disponible.

OBTENIR DE PLUS AMPLES RENSEIGNEMENTS

13. Comment obtenir de plus amples renseignements? Comment puis-je transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin?

Vous pouvez obtenir de plus amples renseignements à l'adresse https://classaction2.com/ en composant sans frais le 1-800-538-0009, en écrivant à l'adresse suivante : CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2, ou par courriel : info@classaction2.com.

Les membres des Premières Nations et les particuliers membres d'une bande peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca ou 66, rue Wellington Ouest, Toronto (Ontario) M5K 1E6) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694 ou 250, avenue University, 8e étage, Toronto (Ontario) M5H 3E5.

La Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga, le chef Christopher Moonias, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements concernant le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur ou les avocats du groupe. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

LE PROCUREUR GÉNÉRAL DU CANADA

Défendeur

Poursuite en vertu des Règles des Cours fédérales, 334.16 et 334.17

PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

POUR LES QUESTIONS COMMUNES, LES REQUÊTES EN AUTORISATION ET JUGEMENT SOMMAIRE

1. Le calendrier de consentement des parties est joint en annexe A. Le présent plan de poursuite de l'instance vise à traiter des requêtes des demandeurs en autorisation et jugement sommaire.

2. Si la requête en jugement sommaire est accueillie, un autre plan sera proposé pour régler les questions restantes, selon le résultat.

3. Sinon, si la requête en jugement sommaire n'est pas accueillie, les demandeurs proposeront un autre plan pour l'instruction des questions communes.

4. Les demandeurs demandent l'autorisation de la question commune suivante devant être résolue pour le compte de l'ensemble du groupe (la « question commune de l'étape 1 ») :

   (a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. Si le défendeur consent à l'autorisation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs négocieront avec le défendeur pour résoudre les questions communes. En cas d'échec des négociations, les demandeurs exigeront la remise d'une défense, après quoi ils remettront un dossier à l'appui d'une requête en jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer une date d'audition de leur requête.

6. Si le défendeur s'oppose à l'autorisation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs exigeront que le défendeur présente une défense. Les demandeurs produiront alors un dossier à l'appui des requêtes en autorisation et jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer le calendrier d'audition de leur requête en jugement sommaire ainsi que l'audition de leur requête en autorisation.

7. Lors de la requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont également l'autorisation des questions communes suivantes devant être résolues pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe de la Première Nation touchée, soit les membres de cette Première Nation et la Première Nation elle-même, si elle est une Première Nation participante (les « questions communes de l'étape 2 ») :

(a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?

(b) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?

(c) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

(d) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 7(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?

(e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?

(f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?

(g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?

(h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?

(i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

8. Si la question commune de l'étape 1 est tranchée en faveur des demandeurs, les parties concluront un plan de communication de la preuve pour gérer la production, en temps opportun, par le défendeur des documents pertinents à l'égard des questions communes de l'étape 2 pour chaque sous-groupe des Premières Nations touchées.

9. Au moment d'évaluer la production des documents du défendeur, les demandeurs décideront s'il y a lieu de présenter des requêtes en jugement sommaire sur les questions communes de l'étape 2 pour certains ou la totalité des sous-groupes des Premières Nations touchées, ou s'il y a lieu de prévoir une instruction sur ces questions communes.

NOTIFICATION DE L'AUTORISATION ET PROCÉDURE D'EXCLUSION

10. Lors de la requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de fixer la forme et le contenu de la notification de l'autorisation de ce recours (l'« avis d'autorisation »), le moment et la manière de fournir l'avis d'autorisation (le « programme d'avis ») et d'indiquer une date d'exclusion comme étant trois (3) mois suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'autorisation (la «date d'exclusion »), et une date de participation comme étant six (6) mois avant le début de la détermination des questions communes de l'étape 2.

11. Si une requête en jugement sommaire est entendue avec une requête en autorisation, les demandeurs demanderont au tribunal de rendre d'abord sa décision sur l'autorisation, d'ordonner la délivrance d'un avis si un recours collectif est autorisé, puis de rendre sa décision sur la question commune de l'étape 1 après la date d'exclusion.

12. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'ordonner au défendeur de payer les frais du programme d'avis, y compris les frais de l'administrateur.

13. Les demandeurs demanderont une ordonnance pour la distribution de l'avis d'autorisation comme suit :

(a) afficher l'avis sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;

(b) publier l'avis dans les journaux désignés;

(c) distribuer l'avis à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

(d) faire parvenir l'avis à tout membre du groupe qui le demande et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation qui a le droit d'adhérer au groupe, ainsi qu'à chaque bureau d'une bande;

(e) établir une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe;

(f) et par tout autre avis que la Cour ordonne.

14. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'approuver les formulaires d'exclusion et de participation devant être utilisés par les membres du groupe qui souhaitent s'exclure du recours collectif ou y participer, ce qui exigera que le membre du groupe fournisse suffisamment de renseignements pour établir qu'il est membre du groupe.

ÉTAPES DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE APRÈS LA DÉTERMINATION DES QUESTIONS COMMUNES FAVORABLES AU GROUPE

Avis de résolution des questions communes

15. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de régler la forme et le contenu de l'avis de résolution des questions communes de l'étape 1 et de l'étape 2 (le « plan d'avis de résolution ») et la manière dont les membres du groupe déposeront des réclamations (les « formulaires de réclamation ») avant une date fixée avec l'administrateur. Les demandeurs demanderont également à la Cour de régler un processus approprié pour déterminer les questions individuelles restantes.

Évaluation des dommages

16. Si les questions communes sont résolues en faveur des demandeurs, les demandeurs proposent deux (2) méthodes d'évaluation et de distribution des dommages-intérêts pour les membres du groupe comme suit :

(a) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont chaque particulier membre d'un groupe peut se prévaloir au prorata ou au prorata au sein d'un sous-groupe;

(b) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont les Premières Nations participantes peuvent se prévaloir sur une base communautaire; et

17. À la suite de la détermination de l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts, y compris les dommages-intérêts punitifs, des dommages-intérêts supplémentaires peuvent être accordés dans le cadre d'instances individuelles.

Évaluation du nombre de demandeurs

18. Après l'expiration du délai de remise des formulaires de réclamation, l'administrateur calcule le nombre total de demandeurs aux fins de tout partage au prorata des dommages-intérêts globaux.

19. Les parties peuvent également retenir les services d'un actuaire pour aider à déterminer la taille du groupe et les caractéristiques démographiques du groupe.

Distribution de dommages-intérêts punitifs globaux

20. Si la Cour accorde des dommages-intérêts globaux au groupe ou à un sous-groupe, le montant total des dommages-intérêts sera attribué au groupe d'une manière que déterminera la Cour dans un délai fixé par la Cour à partir de l'avis de résolution.

Fonds non distribués

21. Toute somme non distribuée sera distribuée à cy-près selon les directives de la Cour. Les demandeurs proposent que les montants résiduels soient distribués cy-près à des organismes communautaires qui aident les Premières Nations touchées à mettre en place des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau.

Résolution des questions individuelles

22. Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la délivrance du jugement sur les questions communes, les parties se réunissent pour régler un protocole visant à résoudre des questions individuelles. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un tel protocole, les demandeurs doivent demander des directives à la Cour dans les soixante (60) jours.

EXIGENCES DIVERSES DU PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

Financement

23. Les avocats du groupe ont conclu une entente avec les représentants demandeurs à l'égard des honoraires d'avocats et débours juridiques. Cette entente prévoit que les avocats du groupe ne recevront pas de paiement pour leur travail tant que le recours collectif n'aura pas reçu une suite favorable ou que les frais n'auront pas été recouvrés du défendeur.

24. Les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont soumis à l'approbation du tribunal.

Administration des réclamations

25. L'administrateur assurera l'administration des réclamations pour tout règlement ou jugement obtenu. L'administrateur distribuera l'avis conformément au plan d'avis de résolution. Si un règlement est réalisé et qu'un fonds de règlement est fourni, ou si un jugement donne lieu à une attribution en faveur des membres du groupe, l'administrateur administrera les paiements prélevés sur le fonds aux demandeurs selon la procédure indiquée ci-dessus, après approbation et/ou modification par la Cour.

Site Web du recours collectif

26. De temps à autre, les avocats du groupe afficheront les actes de procédure et les documents de cour pertinents, les derniers documents et résumés des derniers développements et faits nouveaux, les délais prévus, la foire aux questions et les réponses et les coordonnées des avocats du groupe pour les renseignements des membres du groupe.

Gestion des conflits

27. Les avocats du groupe et les demandeurs ont pris les mesures appropriées pour établir qu'il n'existe aucun conflit d'intérêts entre les membres du groupe, et qu'aucun tel conflit n'est prévu. En cas de conflit, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera un sous-groupe et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP, l'autre. Si un conflit survenait entre les Premières Nations et leurs membres, ce qui n'est pas prévu étant donné leur intérêt commun, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera les membres et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP représentera les Premières Nations.

Droit applicable

28. La législation applicable est la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, la Charte des droits et libertés, la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, c. 21, la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5, Loi sur la gestion des terres des Premières Nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24, La Loi sur les Cours fédérales, L.R.C. 1985, c. F-7 ainsi que les règlements applicables, la common law et le droit canadien.

Coordination des instances

29. Le 14 juillet 2020, la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba a autorisé un recours collectif connexe dans l'affaire intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation v. Canada, dossier de la Cour nº 19-01-24661 (l'« action de Tataskweyak »). Les représentants demandeurs dans l'action de Tataskweyak se sont engagés à travailler en collaboration avec les demandeurs pour faire valoir leurs intérêts communs. Aux termes du Protocole judiciaire canadien de gestion de recours collectifs multijuridictionnels et la remise d'un avis de recours collectif, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour fédérale et à la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba de convoquer des conférences conjointes de gestion des instances, selon le cas, afin d'assurer la coordination entre les deux instances et de favoriser l'efficacité. Afin d'assurer la cohérence des résultats, les demandeurs peuvent demander à la Cour fédérale et à la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba de se réunir pour entendre toute requête en jugement sommaire ou en vue d'un procès de l'action de Tataskweyak et du présent recours.

Procédure en vertu de la Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c. C. 130

ORDONNANCE

LA PRÉSENTE MOTION en attestation, présentée par les demandeurs, a été entendue le 14 juillet 2020 au 408 York Ave à Winnipeg, au Manitoba.

À LA LECTURE du dossier de motion des demandeurs et du consentement du défendeur.

ET SUR AVIS que les parties consentent à la présente ordonnance.

1. LA COUR ORDONNE que ce recours soit et est autorisé par les présentes comme un recours collectif conformément à la Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c. C. 130.

2. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que le groupe est défini comme suit :

(a) Toutes les personnes autres que les personnes exclues :

(i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c, I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant (les «Premières Nations touchées»);

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées avant le 20 novembre 2017; et

(iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée alors visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

(b) La Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et toute autre Première Nation touchée qui a choisi de se joindre au présent recours à titre de représentant (les « Nations participantes »).

Les « personnes exclues » sont les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan, et Michael Daryl Isnardy.

3. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que, jusqu'à ce que les réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours collectif soient entièrement et définitivement décidées, réglées, interrompues ou abandonnées, y compris l'épuisement de tous les droits d'appel, la permission de la Cour est requise pour introduire tout autre recours, instance ou procédure pour le compte d'un membre du groupe à l'égard des réclamations invoquées dans le présent recours, sauf les recours, instances ou procédures introduits pour le compte des membres du groupe qui se sont exclus du présent recours collectif de la manière prescrite ci-après.

4. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont par les présentes autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte du groupe dans son ensemble:

(a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE qu'un sous-groupe soit et est par les présentes reconnu pour les membres de chaque Première Nation touchée, et la Première Nation elle-même, s'il s'agit d'une Nation participante;

6. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les questions communes suivantes soient et sont, par les présentes, autorisées aux fins de résolution pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe :

(a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?

(b) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?

(c) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

(d) Si la réponse à la question commune 6(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 6(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?

(e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?

(f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?

(g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?

(h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?

(i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

7. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que la cheffe Doreen Spence et la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak sont nommées par les présentes représentants demandeurs du groupe.

8. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP sont nommés par les présentes avocats du groupe (les «avocats du groupe »).

9. LA COUR ORDONNE ET DÉCLARE que les demandeurs et le défendeur déploient des efforts raisonnables pour convenir de la nomination d'un administrateur aux fins de donner avis de l'attestation du présent recours collectif (l'« administrateur »). Les parties avisent la Cour de la nomination de l'administrateur dans les soixante (60) jours suivant la date de la présente ordonnance, à défaut de quoi la Cour nomme un administrateur dûment qualifié.

10. LA COUR ORDONNE que les membres du groupe soient avisés que le présent recours a été attesté en tant que recours collectif de la manière suivante, ce qui constitue et est par les présentes réputé constituer un avis adéquat :

(b) l'administrateur publie l'avis simplifié dans les journaux indiqués à l'annexe C jointe aux présentes, en format ¼ de page dans l'édition de fin de semaine de chaque journal, si possible;

(c) l'administrateur distribue l'avis simplifié à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

(d) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé à tout membre du groupe qui en fait la demande;

(e) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé aux chefs de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues;

(f) l'administrateur transmet l'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé au bureau de la bande ou à un bureau analogue de chaque Première Nation touchée indiquée conformément au paragraphe 12 ci-après, à l'exception des personnes exclues, en demandant qu'ils soient affichés dans un endroit bien visible;

(g) l'administrateur établit une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe.

11. LA COUR ORDONNE que le défendeur soit responsable du coût de la remise d'un avis d'attestation d'un recours collectif tel qu'il est énoncé au paragraphe 10 ci-dessus.

12. LA COUR ORDONNE que, dans les 30 jours qui suivent la date de la présente ordonnance, les demandeurs et le défendeur échangent une liste de leurs meilleurs renseignements sur les noms des Premières Nations qui peuvent participer au groupe, et ces listes constituent le moyen d'établir les Premières Nations qui ont droit à un avis direct aux fins des paragraphes 10(e) et (f) ci-dessus.

13. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'un membre du groupe puisse se retirer du présent recours collectif en remettant un coupon de retrait signé, dont un modèle est joint à l'annexe D, ou une autre demande de retrait signée et lisible, dans les cent vingt (120) jours qui suivent la date à laquelle l'avis est publié pour la première fois conformément au paragraphe 10(b) ci-dessus (la «date limite de retrait »), à l'administrateur. L'avis simplifié et l'avis détaillé doivent indiquer la date limite de retrait et l'adresse de l'administrateur aux fins de la réception des coupons de retrait.

14. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse se retirer du présent recours collectif après la date limite de retrait, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

15. LA COUR ORDONNE que l'administrateur signifie aux parties et dépose auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite de retrait, une déclaration sous serment énumérant toutes les personnes qui ont fait leur choix de se retirer du recours collectif, le cas échéant.

16. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'une Première Nation touchée puisse participer au présent recours collectif en mandatant les avocats du groupe au moins cent vingt (120) jours avant le règlement de l'une ou l'autre des questions communes (la « date limite de participation »), aux avocats du groupe, à l'adresse indiquée au paragraphe 11 ci-dessus.

17. LA COUR ORDONNE qu'aucun membre du groupe ne puisse participer au présent recours collectif après la date limite de participation, sauf avec l'autorisation de la Cour.

18. LA COUR ORDONNE que les avocats du groupe signifient aux parties et déposent auprès de la Cour, dans les soixante (60) jours suivant l'expiration de la date limite de participation, une liste de toutes les Premières Nations touchées qui ont choisi de participer au recours collectif.

19. LA COUR DÉCLARE que le plan de poursuite de l'instance joint aux présentes à l'appendice 1 est une méthode pratique pour faire avancer le recours collectif pour le compte du groupe.

20. LA COUR ORDONNE que chaque partie supporte ses propres frais de la motion en attestation du présent recours collectif.

Avis juridique

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Une poursuite pourrait avoir une incidence sur vous et votre Première Nation. Veuillez lire ceci attentivement.

Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif en raison du manque d'accessibilité à l'eau potable propre sur les réserves des Premières Nations.

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé qu'un recours collectif au nom d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande pouvait être intenté. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Il n'y a pas d'argent disponible à l'heure actuelle et rien ne garantit que le recours collectif sera accueilli.

Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.

De quoi s'agit-il?

Le présent recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Le recours collectif allègue que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Le recours collectif allègue que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. La Cour n'a pas statué sur la véracité de ces allégations. En l'absence de règlement, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant le tribunal.

Si vous avez des questions au sujet du présent recours collectif, vous pouvez communiquer avec M. Eric Khan au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com.

Qui représente le groupe?

Particuliers membres du groupe : Qui est inclus et qui est exclu?

Membres d'une bande inclus : Le groupe comprend les membres d'une bande (au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens) : a) dont la réserve était visée par un avis concernant l'eau potable (tel qu'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, etc.) pendant au moins un an à un moment quelconque du 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant; b) qui n'étaient pas décédés avant le 20 novembre 2017; et c) qui vivent habituellement dans leur réserve.

Membres d'une bande exclus : Les membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et Michael Daryl Isnardy sont exclus de ce recours collectif.

Particuliers : Quelles sont vos options?

Demeurer dans le groupe : Pour demeurer dans le groupe, vous n'avez rien à faire. Si le groupe obtient de l'argent ou des avantages, les avocats du groupe donneront un avis sur la façon de réclamer votre part. Vous serez légalement lié par toutes les ordonnances et tous les jugements, et vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada au sujet des mêmes réclamations en droit.

Le fait de demeurer dans le groupe n'aura pas d'incidence sur le soutien reçu des organismes communautaires qui sont financés par un gouvernement.

Se retirer du groupe : Si vous ne souhaitez pas participer à ce recours collectif, vous devez vous en retirer. Si vous vous retirez, vous ne pouvez pas obtenir d'argent ni d'avantages de ce litige. Pour vous retirer, veuillez visiter [NDR : Insérer le site Web de l'administrateur pour ce recours] pour obtenir un coupon de retrait ou écrire à CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 afin de demander votre retrait du présent recours collectif. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Votre demande de retrait doit être envoyée au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la date de la première publication de l'avis].

Premières Nations : Quelles sont vos options?

Choisir de se joindre au groupe : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au groupe et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour participer au recours. Pour participer au recours ou obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711; swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille 416-598-3694; khille@oktlaw.com). Votre demande de participation doit être envoyée au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

Comment puis-je obtenir de plus amples renseignements?

Nom de l'administrateur : CA2
Coordonnées : 1-800-538-0009 ou info@classaction2.com

Transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin

Les représentants demandeurs et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information

aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

Annexe B

Êtes-vous membre d'une Première Nation qui a été visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme?

Si vous avez répondu « OUI », un recours collectif pourrait avoir une incidence sur vos droits et les droits des Premières Nations

Un tribunal a autorisé le présent avis

- Vous pourriez être touché par un recours collectif visant l'accès à l'eau potable propre dans vos communautés des Premières Nations.
- La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont décidé que des recours collectifs peuvent être introduits pour le compte d'un « groupe » de membres des Premières Nations et de membres d'une bande. Les membres d'une bande peuvent choisir de demeurer dans le groupe. Les Premières Nations peuvent choisir de se joindre ou non au groupe. Les tribunaux ont nommé la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Christopher Moonias à titre de représentants demandeurs pour le groupe.
- Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué si le Canada avait eu des comportements fautifs et la question à savoir si le Canada a fait quelque chose de mal doit éventuellement être décidée par le tribunal. Il n'y a pas d'argent offert actuellement et rien ne garantit qu'il y en aura. Cependant, vos droits sont touchés et vous avez un choix à faire maintenant. Le présent avis vise à vous aider, vous et votre Première Nation, à faire ce choix.

PARTICULIERS MEMBRES D'UNE BANDE : VOS DROITS LÉGAUX ET OPTIONS À CETTE ÉTAPE
NE RIEN FAIRE : CONSERVER VOS DROITS DANS LE CADRE DU GROUPE	Demeurer membre du groupe dans le cadre de ces poursuites et attendre le résultat du litige. Partager les avantages éventuels résultant du litige, mais abandonner certains droits individuels. En ne faisant rien, vous gardez la possibilité de recevoir de l'argent ou d'autres avantages pouvant découler d'un procès ou d'un règlement. Mais vous renoncez à tout droit de poursuivre vous-même le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans la présente poursuite.
VOUS RETIRER DU GROUPE (OPTION DE RETRAIT)	Vous retirer du groupe dans le cadre de ces poursuites et n'en tirer aucun avantage. Conserver ses droits. Si vous demandez de vous retirer du groupe et que de l'argent ou des avantages sont ultérieurement attribués aux membres du groupe, vous n'en bénéficierez pas. Mais vous conservez le droit de poursuivre vous-même le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans la présente poursuite.
PREMIÈRES NATIONS : VOS DROITS LÉGAUX ET OPTIONS À CETTE ÉTAPE

QUESTIONS? APPELEZ SANS FRAIS AU 1-800-538-0009 OU VISITEZ HTTPS://CLASSACTION2.COM/

CHOISIR DE SE JOINDRE AU GROUPE (OPTION DE PARTICIPATION)	Se joindre au groupe. Si vous vous joignez au groupe, vos Premières Nations pourraient partager l'argent et les avantages résultant du litige. En vous joignant au groupe (option de participation), les Premières Nations pourraient recevoir de l'argent ou d'autres avantages, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau, qui pourraient découler d'un procès ou d'un règlement dans le cadre du recours collectif. Il est facile de participer et cela ne coûte rien.

NE RIEN FAIRE: PERDRE LES DROITS DE VOTRE PREMIÈRE NATION AUX TERMES DU RECOURS COLLECTIF	En ne faisant rien, votre Première Nation perdra la possibilité de recevoir de l'argent et d'autres avantages si le recours collectif est accueilli favorablement. Si les Premières Nations se joignent pas au groupe (option de participation) et que de l'argent ou des avantages sont ultérieurement attribués, votre Première Nation n'en bénéficiera pas. En choisissant de ne pas participer, votre Première Nation peut conserver les droits de poursuivre le Canada à propos des mêmes réclamations en droit que dans le présent litige.

- Les avocats doivent prouver les réclamations contre le Canada lors d'un procès ou conclure un règlement. Si de l'argent ou des avantages sont obtenus, vous serez avisé de la façon de réclamer votre part.

- Vos options sont expliquées dans le présent avis. Pour être exclu du recours, les particuliers membres d'une bande doivent en faire la demande au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis.]. Pour se joindre au recours collectif, les Premières Nations doivent envoyer leur avis de participation au plus tard 120 jours avant la décision quant aux réclamations des membres du groupe.

QUE CONTIENT LE PRÉSENT AVIS?

RENSEIGNEMENTS DE BASE

1. Pourquoi le présent avis est-il remis?

Les tribunaux ont des recours collectifs « attestés ». Cela signifie que les poursuites respectent les exigences relatives aux recours collectifs et peuvent être instruites. Si vous êtes inclus, vous pourriez avoir des droits légaux et des options avant que les tribunaux ne statuent sur le bien-fondé des réclamations intentées contre le Canada en votre nom. Le présent avis tente d'expliquer toutes ces démarches.

Le juge en chef Joyal de la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba préside actuellement l'affaire Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence v. Canada. Le juge Favel de la Cour fédérale du Canada préside actuellement l'affaire Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Nesktanaga First Nation, and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada. Les personnes qui intentent une poursuite sont appelées les demandeurs. Le Canada est le défendeur. Un lien vers la dernière version de la demande introductive d'instance (le document juridique énonçant les allégations contre le Canada) est disponible ici : https://www.mccarthy.ca/fr/action-collective-concernant-les-avis-sur-la-qualite-de-leau-potable-des-premieres-nations.

2. Quel est l'objet du présent recours?

Les présents recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations en ne veillant pas à ce que les communautés des Premières Nations aient un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable salubre. Les recours collectifs allèguent également que les membres de ces communautés et les communautés elles-mêmes ont subi des préjudices émotionnels, physiques, financiers et spirituels. Les recours collectifs allèguent que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations fiduciaires et à son devoir de diligence et a contrevenu à la Charte des droits et libertés. Les tribunaux n'ont pas statué (et le Canada n'a fait aucun aveu) quant à la véracité de l'une ou l'autre de ces affirmations. S'il n'y a pas de règlement avec le Canada, les demandeurs devront prouver leurs prétentions devant la Cour.

Si vous éprouvez des difficultés à comprendre cet enjeu ou si vous avez des questions au sujet du recours collectif, vous pouvez composer le 1-800-538-0009 pour obtenir de l'aide.

3. Pourquoi s'agit-il d'un recours collectif?

Dans un recours collectif, les « représentants demandeurs » (en l'espèce, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Nesktanaga et le chef Christopher Moonias) ont poursuivi en justice au nom des particuliers membres d'une bande et de Premières Nations qui ont des revendications semblables. Tous ces particuliers membres d'une bande font partie du « groupe » ou sont des « membres du groupe », de même que les Premières Nations qui choisissent de se joindre au recours collectif. La Cour règle les questions pour tous les membres du groupe dans une même affaire, sauf (dans le cas des particuliers membres du groupe) pour ceux qui se retirent du groupe (option de retrait) et (dans le cas des Premières Nations) pour ceux qui ne se joignent pas au recours collectif (option de participation).

4. Qui est membre du groupe?

Le groupe comprend et exclut les personnes suivantes :

Toutes les personnes, sauf les « personnes exclues » :

(i) qui sont membres d'une bande au sens du paragraphe 2(1) de la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c, I-5 (« Première Nation »), dont la disposition des terres est assujettie à cette loi ou à la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24 (les « terres des Premières Nations »), et dont les terres des Premières Nations sont visées par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse d'un avis d'ébullition d'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire, d'un avis de non-utilisation ou d'un autre type d'avis) qui a duré au moins un an depuis le 20 novembre 1995 (les « Premières Nations touchées »);

(ii) qui n'étaient pas décédées deux ans avant le début du présent recours (soit, au plus tard le 20 novembre 2017);

(iii) qui résidaient habituellement dans une Première Nation touchée pendant qu'elle était visée par un avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable qui a duré au moins un an; et

Les « personnes exclues » sont des membres de la Nation des Tsuu T'ina, de la Première Nation de Sucker Creek, de la Nation des Cris d'Ermineskin, de la Tribu des Gens-du-Sang, de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de la bande indienne d'Okanagan et de Michael Daryl Isnardy.

5. Que veulent les demandeurs?

Les demandeurs réclament des sommes d'argent et d'autres avantages pour le groupe, notamment des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau. Les demandeurs réclament également des honoraires d'avocats et des frais de justice, majorés des intérêts.

6. Y a-t-il de l'argent offert maintenant pour les membres du groupe?

Il n'y a pas d'argent ni d'avantages à l'heure actuelle parce que la Cour n'a pas encore statué quant aux comportements fautifs du Canada et que les deux parties n'ont pas conclu de règlement. Rien ne garantit que des sommes d'argent ou des avantages seront obtenus. Si de l'argent ou d'autres avantages deviennent disponibles, un avis sera donné sur la façon de réclamer votre part.

VOS DROITS ET OPTIONS

Chaque particulier membre d'une bande doit décider s'il veut rester ou non dans le groupe, et doit le faire au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis]. Les

Premières Nations doivent décider de se joindre ou non au groupe au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

7.	Que se passe-t-il si je ne fais rien? Que se passe-t-il si la Première Nation ne fait rien?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne faites rien, vous resterez automatiquement dans le recours collectif. Vous serez lié par toutes les ordonnances de la Cour, bonnes ou mauvaises. Si des sommes d'argent ou d'autres avantages sont attribués, vous pourriez avoir à prendre des mesures après avoir reçu un avis pour recevoir des avantages.
Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations doivent choisir de se joindre au recours collectif pour recevoir les avantages éventuels et être liées par toutes les ordonnances, bonnes ou mauvaises.

8.	Que se passe-t-il si je ne veux pas me joindre au recours? Que se passe-t-il si une Première Nation souhaite se joindre au recours?

Particuliers membres d'une bande : Si vous ne souhaitez pas être partie à l'instance, vous devez vous retirer – c'est-à-dire choisir « l'option de retrait ». Si vous vous retirez, vous ne recevrez aucun avantage pouvant découler du recours collectif. Vous ne serez pas lié par des ordonnances de la Cour et vous conservez le droit de poursuivre le Canada en tant que particulier à l'égard des questions en l'espèce.

Pour vous retirer, envoyez une communication indiquant que vous souhaitez être retiré du groupe de Curve Lake First Nation, Chief Emily Whetung, Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias v. Canada, dossier de la Cour nº CI-19-01-2466. Indiquez vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et apposez votre signature. Vous pouvez également obtenir un formulaire de retrait à l'adresse [insérer le lien Web de l'administrateur]. Vous devez faire parvenir votre demande de retrait au plus tard le [NDR : 120 jours à partir de la première publication de l'avis] à: CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2 ou info@classaction2.com.

Composez le 1-800-538-0009 si vous avez des questions sur la façon de vous retirer du recours collectif.

Premières Nations : Les Premières Nations qui souhaitent se joindre au recours collectif et faire valoir des réclamations au nom de leur bande ou de leur communauté doivent prendre des mesures pour s'y joindre – c'est-à-dire choisir l' « option de participation ». Pour choisir l'option de participation ou pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements, veuillez communiquer avec l'administrateur au 1-800-538-0009 ou à l'adresse info@classaction2.com. Les Premières Nations peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694. Les demandes de participation des Premières Nations doivent être envoyées au plus tard 120 jours avant que la Cour ne statue sur les réclamations des membres du groupe.

LES AVOCATS QUI VOUS REPRÉSENTENT

9. Les particuliers membres d'une bande sont-ils représentés par un avocat dans ce recours?

Oui. La Cour a nommé McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP pour vous représenter, ainsi que d'autres membres du groupe, à titre d'« avocats du groupe ». Vous n'aurez pas à payer d'honoraires ou d'autres frais juridiques pour ces avocats. Si vous souhaitez être représenté par un autre avocat, vous pouvez en retenir un pour comparaître devant la Cour à vos propres frais.

10. Comment les avocats seront-ils payés?

Les avocats ne seront payés que s'ils obtiennent gain de cause ou concluent un règlement. La Cour doit également approuver leur demande de rémunération. Les honoraires et frais pourraient être déduits des sommes obtenues pour le groupe, ou payés séparément par le défendeur.

PROCÈS

11. Quand et comment la Cour tranchera-t-elle qui a raison?

Si le recours collectif n'est pas rejeté ou réglé, les demandeurs doivent prouver leurs réclamations dans le cadre d'une motion de jugement sommaire ou d'un procès qui aura lieu à Ottawa (Ontario). Au cours de la motion ou du procès, la Cour entendra tous les éléments de preuve de manière à ce qu'elle puisse rendre une décision sur la question de savoir qui des demandeurs ou du Canada a raison à propos des réclamations dans le recours collectif. Rien ne garantit que les demandeurs gagneront quelque somme d'argent ou avantage pour le groupe.

12. Est-ce que je recevrai de l'argent après le procès?

Si les demandeurs obtiennent de l'argent ou des avantages à la suite d'un procès ou d'un règlement, vous serez avisé de la façon d'en demander une part ou des autres options que vous avez à ce moment-là. Ces choses ne sont pas connues à l'heure actuelle. Des renseignements importants sur cette affaire seront affichés sur le site Web [NDR : insérer le site Web de l'administrateur] dès qu'ils seront disponible.

OBTENIR DE PLUS AMPLES RENSEIGNEMENTS

13. Comment obtenir de plus amples renseignements? Comment puis-je transmettre l'information aux personnes qui en ont besoin?

Vous pouvez obtenir de plus amples renseignements à l'adresse https://classaction2.com/ en composant sans frais le 1-800-538-0009, en écrivant à l'adresse suivante : CA2 Inc., 9, avenue Prince Arthur, Toronto (Ontario) M5R 1B2, ou par courriel : info@classaction2.com.

Les membres des Premières Nations et les particuliers membres d'une bande peuvent également communiquer avec les avocats du groupe et demander l'avocate du groupe Stephanie Willsey (sans frais : 1-877-244-7711 ou swillsey@mccarthy.ca ou 66, rue Wellington Ouest, Toronto (Ontario) M5K 1E6) ou l'avocat du groupe Kevin Hille à khille@oktlaw.com ou au 416-598-3694 ou 250, avenue University, 8e étage, Toronto (Ontario) M5H 3E5.

La Première Nation de Curve Lake, la cheffe Emily Whetung, la Première Nation de Neskantaga, le chef Christopher Moonias, la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak, la cheffe Doreen Spence, et les avocats du groupe demandent aux travailleurs de la santé, aux travailleurs sociaux, aux dirigeants communautaires des Premières Nations, aux membres de la famille, aux aidants et aux amis des membres du groupe de bien vouloir transmettre l'information aux membres du groupe qui auraient de la difficulté à lire ou à comprendre le présent avis. On peut obtenir de plus amples renseignements concernant le présent recours sur le site Web ou en communiquant avec l'administrateur ou les avocats du groupe. Veuillez montrer le présent avis aux personnes qui pourraient être touchées par le présent recours ou à leurs aidants.

Je comprends qu'en me retirant de ce recours collectif, je confirme que je ne souhaite pas participer à ce recours collectif.

Je comprends que toute réclamation individuelle que je pourrais avoir doit être introduite dans un délai de prescription déterminé ou cette réclamation sera légalement interdite.

Je crois comprendre que l'attestation de ce recours collectif a suspendu l'écoulement du délai de prescription à partir du moment où le recours collectif a été déposé. Le délai de prescription recommencera à courir contre moi si je me retire de ce recours collectif.

Je comprends qu'en me retirant, j'assume l'entière responsabilité de la reprise de la poursuite des démarches juridiques pertinentes relatives au délai de prescription pour protéger toute réclamation que je pourrais avoir.

PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

POUR LES QUESTIONS COMMUNES, LES MOTIONS EN ATTESTATION ET DE JUGEMENT SOMMAIRE

1. Le calendrier de consentement des parties, tel qu'il est ordonné par la Cour, est joint en annexe A. Le présent plan de poursuite de l'instance vise à traiter des motions des demandeurs en attestation et de jugement sommaire.

2. Si les motions sont accueillies, un autre plan sera proposé pour régler les questions restantes, selon le résultat.

3. Sinon, si la motion de jugement sommaire n'est pas accueillie, les demandeurs proposeront un autre plan pour l'instruction des questions communes.

4. Dans le cadre de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont l'attestation de la question commune suivante devant être résolue pour le compte de l'ensemble du groupe (la «question commune de l'étape 1 ») :

(a) Depuis le 20 novembre 1995 jusqu'à maintenant, le défendeur a-t-il un devoir ou une obligation envers les membres du groupe de prendre des mesures raisonnables pour leur fournir ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable pour l'utilisation humaine?

5. Si le défendeur consent à l'attestation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs négocieront avec le défendeur pour résoudre les questions communes. En cas d'échec des négociations, les demandeurs exigeront la remise d'une défense, après quoi ils remettront un dossier à l'appui d'une motion de jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer une date d'audition de leur motion.

6. Si le défendeur s'oppose à l'attestation d'un recours collectif, les demandeurs exigeront que le défendeur présente une défense. Les demandeurs produiront alors un dossier à l'appui des motions en attestation et de jugement sommaire sur la question commune de l'étape 1. Lors d'une conférence préparatoire à l'instruction qui suit la remise du dossier des demandeurs, ils demanderont à la Cour de décider que cette affaire est appropriée pour un jugement sommaire et de fixer le calendrier d'audition de leur motion de jugement sommaire ainsi que l'audition de leur motion en attestation.

7. Lors de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont également l'attestation des questions communes suivantes devant être résolues pour le compte de chaque sous-groupe de la Première Nation touchée, soit les membres de cette Première Nation et la Première Nation elle-même, si elle est une Première Nation participante (les « questions communes de l'étape 2 ») :

(a) Si la réponse à la question commune 4(a) est « oui », le Canada a-t-il manqué à ses devoirs ou obligations envers les membres du sous-groupe?

(b) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », une violation de la Charte des droits et libertés (« Charte ») est-elle sauvée par l'art. 1 de la Charte?

(c) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui », le manquement du défendeur a-t-il causé une entrave importante et déraisonnable à l'utilisation et à la jouissance de leurs terres par les membres du groupe ou leurs Premières Nations?

(d) Si la réponse à la question commune 7(a) est « oui » et que la réponse à la question commune 7(b) est « non », les membres du sous-groupe peuvent-ils obtenir des dommages en vertu de l'art. 24(1) de la Charte?

(e) La causalité des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe peut-elle être considérée comme une question commune?

(f) La Cour peut-elle procéder à une évaluation globale de tout ou partie des dommages subis par les membres du sous-groupe?

(g) La conduite du défendeur justifie-t-elle l'octroi de dommages-intérêts punitifs et, dans l'affirmative, de quel montant?

(h) La Cour devrait-elle ordonner au défendeur de prendre des mesures pour fournir aux membres du sous-groupe ou s'assurer qu'il leur soit fourni ou s'abstenir d'interdire un accès adéquat à de l'eau potable?

(i) Dans l'affirmative, quelles mesures devraient être ordonnées?

8. Si la question commune de l'étape 1 est tranchée en faveur des demandeurs, les parties concluront un plan de communication de la preuve pour gérer la production, en temps opportun, par le défendeur des documents pertinents à l'égard des questions communes de l'étape 2 pour chaque sous-groupe des Premières Nations touchées.

9. Au moment d'évaluer la production des documents du défendeur, les demandeurs décideront s'il y a lieu de présenter des motions de jugement sommaire sur les questions communes de l'étape 2 pour certains ou la totalité des sous-groupes des Premières Nations touchées, ou s'il y a lieu de prévoir une instruction sur ces questions communes.

NOTIFICATION DE L'ATTESTATION ET PROCÉDURE DE RETRAIT

10. Lors de la motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de fixer la forme et le contenu de la notification de l'attestation de ce recours (l'« avis d'attestation»), le moment et la manière de fournir l'avis d'attestation (le « programme d'avis ») et d'indiquer une date de retrait comme étant trois (3) mois suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'attestation (la « date de retrait»), et une date de participation comme étant six (6) mois avant le début de la détermination des questions communes de l'étape 2.

11. Si une motion de jugement sommaire est entendue avec une motion en attestation, les demandeurs demanderont au tribunal de rendre d'abord sa décision sur l'attestation, d'ordonner la délivrance d'un avis si un recours collectif est attesté, puis de rendre sa décision sur la question commune de l'étape 1 après la date de retrait.

12. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'ordonner au défendeur de payer les frais du programme d'avis, y compris les frais de l'administrateur.

13. Les demandeurs demanderont une ordonnance pour la distribution de l'avis d'attestation comme suit :

(a) afficher l'avis sur les sites Web respectifs des avocats du groupe, du défendeur et de l'administrateur;

(b) publier l'avis dans les journaux désignés;

(c) distribuer l'avis à tous les bureaux de la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;

(d) faire parvenir l'avis à tout membre du groupe qui le demande et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation qui a le droit d'adhérer au groupe, ainsi qu'à chaque bureau d'une bande;

(e) établir une ligne de soutien nationale sans frais, afin de fournir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux familles, aux tuteurs, aux gardiens ou aux autres personnes qui font des demandes pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe;

(f) et par tout autre avis que la Cour ordonne.

14. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour d'approuver les formulaires de retrait et de participation devant être utilisés par les membres du groupe qui souhaitent se retirer du recours collectif ou y participer, ce qui exigera que le membre du groupe fournisse suffisamment de renseignements pour établir qu'il est membre du groupe.

ÉTAPES DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE APRÈS LA DÉTERMINATION DES QUESTIONS COMMUNES FAVORABLES AU GROUPE

Avis de résolution des questions communes

15. Les demandeurs demanderont à la Cour de régler la forme et le contenu de l'avis de résolution des questions communes de l'étape 1 et de l'étape 2 (le « plan d'avis de résolution ») et la manière dont les membres du groupe déposeront des réclamations (les « formulaires de réclamation ») avant une date fixée avec l'administrateur. Les demandeurs demanderont également à la Cour de régler un processus approprié pour déterminer les questions individuelles restantes.

Évaluation des dommages

16. Si les questions communes sont résolues en faveur des demandeurs, les demandeurs proposent deux (2) méthodes d'évaluation et de distribution des dommages-intérêts pour les membres du groupe comme suit :

(a) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont chaque particulier membre d'un groupe peut se prévaloir au prorata ou au prorata au sein d'un sous-groupe;

(b) l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts dont les Premières Nations participantes peuvent se prévaloir sur une base communautaire; et

17. À la suite de la détermination de l'ensemble des dommages-intérêts, y compris les dommages-intérêts punitifs, des dommages-intérêts supplémentaires peuvent être accordés dans le cadre d'instances individuelles.

Évaluation du nombre de demandeurs

18. Après l'expiration du délai de remise des formulaires de réclamation, l'administrateur calcule le nombre total de demandeurs aux fins de tout partage au prorata des dommages-intérêts globaux.

Distribution de dommages-intérêts punitifs globaux

19. Si la Cour accorde des dommages-intérêts globaux au groupe ou à un sous-groupe, le montant total des dommages-intérêts sera attribué au groupe d'une manière que déterminera la Cour dans un délai fixé par la Cour à partir de l'avis de résolution.

Fonds non distribués

20. Toute somme non distribuée sera distribuée à cy-près selon les directives de la Cour. Les demandeurs proposent que les montants résiduels soient distribués cy-près à des organismes communautaires qui aident les Premières Nations touchées à mettre en place des infrastructures d'approvisionnement en eau.

Résolution des questions individuelles

21. Dans les trente (30) jours qui suivent la délivrance du jugement sur les questions communes, les parties se réunissent pour régler un protocole visant à résoudre des questions individuelles. Si les parties ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur un tel protocole, les demandeurs doivent demander des directives à la Cour dans les soixante (60) jours.

EXIGENCES DIVERSES DU PLAN DE POURSUITE DE L'INSTANCE

Financement

22. Les avocats du groupe ont conclu une entente avec les représentants demandeurs à l'égard des honoraires d'avocats et débours juridiques. Cette entente prévoit que les avocats du groupe ne recevront pas de paiement pour leur travail tant que le recours collectif n'aura pas reçu une suite favorable ou que les frais n'auront pas été recouvrés du défendeur.

23. Les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont soumis à l'approbation du tribunal en vertu de la Loi sur les recours collectifs.

Administration des réclamations

24. L'administrateur assurera l'administration des réclamations pour tout règlement ou jugement obtenu. L'administrateur distribuera l'avis conformément au plan d'avis de résolution. Si un règlement est réalisé et qu'un fonds de règlement est fourni, ou si un jugement donne lieu à une attribution en faveur des membres du groupe, l'administrateur administrera les paiements prélevés sur le fonds aux demandeurs selon la procédure indiquée ci-dessus, après approbation et/ou modification par la Cour.

Site Web du recours collectif

25. De temps à autre, les avocats du groupe afficheront les actes de procédure et les documents de cour pertinents, les derniers documents et résumés des derniers développements et faits nouveaux, les délais prévus, la foire aux questions et les réponses et les coordonnées des avocats du groupe pour les renseignements des membres du groupe.

Gestion des conflits

26. Les avocats du groupe et les demandeurs ont pris les mesures appropriées pour établir qu'il n'existe aucun conflit d'intérêts entre les membres du groupe, et qu'aucun tel conflit n'est prévu. En cas de conflit, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera un sous-groupe et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP, l'autre. Si un conflit survenait entre les Premières Nations et leurs membres, ce qui n'est pas prévu étant donné leur intérêt commun, McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. représentera les membres et Olthuis Kleer Townshend LLP représentera les Premières Nations.

Droit applicable

27. La législation applicable est la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, la Charte des droits et libertés, la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, c. 21, la Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. 1985, c. I-5, Loi sur la gestion des terres des Premières Nations, L.C. 1999, c. 24, La Loi sur les recours collectifs, CPLM c C130 ainsi que les règlements applicables, la common law et le droit manitobain.

MODÈLE DE RÉSOLUTION D'ACCEPTATION DU CONSEIL DE BANDE

Voir ci-joint.

[Nom de la Première Nation]

Résolution du conseil de bande

En ce qui concerne l'entente de règlement dans le cadre des actions collectives portant sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sur les terres des Premières Nations

ATTENDU QUE le 11 octobre 2019, certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Curve Lake First Nation and Chief Emily Whetung on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Curve Lake First Nation and Neskantaga First Nation and Chief Christopher Moonias on his own behalf and on behalf of all members of Neskantaga First Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier T-1673-19 devant la Cour fédérale (l'« action devant la Cour fédérale »);

ATTENDU QUE le 20 novembre 2019, certains demandeurs ont introduit l'action intitulée Tataskweyak Cree Nation and Chief Doreen Spence on her own behalf and on behalf of all members of Tataskweyak Cree Nation c. Attorney General of Canada, portant le numéro de dossier CI-19-01-24661 devant la Cour du banc de la Reine du Manitoba (l'« action au Manitoba », et conjointement avec l'action devant la Cour fédérale, les « actions »);

ATTENDU QUE les actions ont été attestées ou autorisées par les tribunaux respectifs comme des recours collectifs;

ATTENDU QUE le procureur général du Canada et les demandeurs dans les actions ont négocié une entente de règlement (l'« entente de règlement ») à l'égard des actions;

ATTENDU QUE l'entente de règlement prévoit qu'une Première Nation membre du groupe visé dans les actions (le « groupe ») peut donner à l'administrateur désigné par les tribunaux en vertu de l'entente de règlement (l'« administrateur ») un avis d'acceptation par cette Première Nation de l'entente de règlement et ainsi avoir droit à certaines indemnités et à certains avantages aux termes de l'entente de règlement dont peuvent se prévaloir les membres de cette Première Nation;

ATTENDU QUE [nom de la Première Nation] est membre du groupe et que le [nom du conseil de bande] (le « conseil ») souhaite confirmer et approuver l'acceptation de l'entente de règlement par [nom de la Première Nation] en adoptant la présente résolution du conseil de bande à une réunion dûment constituée convoquée à cette fin;

IL EST PAR LES PRÉSENTES RÉSOLU CE QUI SUIT :

1. Le conseil enjoint au chef [Nom du chef], au nom de la [Nom de la Première Nation] et lui donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, d'approuver et d'accepter l'entente de règlement, dont une copie a été examinée par les signataires ci-après au nom du conseil, et il enjoint en outre à ce signataire autorisé et lui donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, de remettre à l'administrateur une copie signée de la présente résolution du conseil de bande pour confirmer l'acceptation de l'entente de règlement par [Nom de la Première

Nation]. Le conseil reconnaît et confirme par les présentes qu'aucune autre mesure n'est requise par le conseil pour accepter l'entente de règlement.

2. Le conseil ordonne et donne l'autorisation, par les présentes, au chef, au nom de la [Nom de la Première Nation], de temps à autre, de signer et de remettre la présente résolution ainsi que les autres documents et instruments et de prendre toutes les mesures raisonnablement nécessaires pour exécuter l'entente de règlement et y donner effet, y compris, s'il le juge approprié, pour confirmer la résidence des personnes membres du groupe dans une réserve de la [Nom de la Première Nation] alors qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur dans cette réserve pendant la période visée par l'entente de règlement.

3. Ces résolutions peuvent être signées par le chef et les membres du conseil en autant d'exemplaires pouvant se révéler nécessaire, sous forme originale ou électronique, dont chacun sera réputé être un original, et dont la totalité seront réputés constituer ensemble une seule et même résolution.

Les signataires suivants attestent et garantissent qu'un quorum du conseil a signé la présente résolution du conseil de bande, comme en font foi leurs signatures ci-dessous.

MODÈLE DE CONFIRMATION DU CONSEIL DE BANDE

Voir ci-joint.

[Nom de la Première Nation]

Confirmation du conseil de bande

En ce qui concerne l'entente de règlement dans le cadre des actions collectives portant sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sur les terres des Premières Nations

Il y a lieu de se reporter à l'entente de règlement (l'« entente de règlement ») intervenue en date du [●] septembre 2021 entre le procureur général du Canada (le « Canada »), la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung, pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Première Nation de Neskantaga, et la Nation des cris de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence, pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres de la Nation des cris de Tataskweyak. Les termes clés utilisés mais non définis dans la présente confirmation du conseil de bande ont le sens qui leur est donné dans l'entente de règlement.

Conformément à l'entente de règlement, une Première Nation membre du groupe peut fournir à l'administrateur une déclaration identifiant les personnes membres du groupe qui résidaient habituellement dans une réserve de cette Première Nation membre du groupe entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 20 juin 2021 alors qu'un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur dans cette réserve (collectivement, les « membres du groupe visés »). Un « résident habituel » s'entend d'une personne qui a vécue dans la réserve plus longtemps qu'elle n'a vécue ailleurs, ou d'une personne qui était âgée de dix-huit (18) ans ou moins au moment visé et qui vivait habituellement dans une réserve touchée, mais qui vivait ailleurs pendant une partie de l'année pour fréquenter un établissement d'enseignement. Les membres du groupe visé doivent avoir résidé habituellement dans la réserve pendant au moins un an au cours d'une période au cours de laquelle un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme était en vigueur.

ANNEXE F

PROCÉDURE DE RÈGLEMENT DES RÉCLAMATIONS

FORMULAIRES DE RÉCLAMATION

1. À la nomination de l'administrateur, les parties fournissent à l'administrateur une ou plusieurs listes sous forme de tableur électronique (la « liste ») indiquant, à la connaissance des parties :

    a) les Premières Nations admissibles à devenir des Premières Nations membres du groupe si elles acceptent l'entente avant la date limite pour l'acceptation;

    b) les coordonnées du bureau du conseil de bande ou du bureau analogue des Premières Nations visées au paragraphe a);

    c) les réserves touchées et les dates auxquelles les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'une durée d'au moins un (1) an étaient en vigueur pour chaque Première Nation visée au paragraphe a);

    d) si l'avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable visé au paragraphe c) était un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, un avis de ne pas boire ou un avis de non-utilisation; et

    e) si les Premières Nations visées au paragraphe a) sont des Premières Nations éloignées ou non éloignées.

2. Immédiatement après la réception de la liste, l'administrateur envoie un formulaire de réclamation à chaque bureau du conseil de bande ou bureau analogue indiqué à l'alinéa 1.b) avec une demande de remise d'une copie du formulaire de réclamation aux membres de cette Première Nation. L'administrateur envoie les formulaires de réclamation par courriel ou, si aucune adresse de courrier électronique n'est fournie, par courrier postal si une adresse est fournie. Si un courriel n'est pas distribué ou ne peut l'être, l'administrateur envoie le formulaire de réclamation par courrier postal. Si le courrier postal n'est pas distribué ou ne peut l'être, l'administrateur n'a aucune autre obligation de s'efforcer de fournir une copie du formulaire de réclamation à cette Première Nation.

3. Immédiatement après la réception de la liste, l'administrateur déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour conserver un agent de liaison communautaire de chaque Première Nation figurant sur la liste, ou d'un conseil tribal approprié, afin de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour :

    a) fournir des formulaires de réclamation aux membres de cette Première Nation;

    b) encourager les membres admissibles de cette Première Nation à soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation;

    c) aider les membres de cette Première Nation à remplir et à soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation, notamment en les mettant en contact avec l'administrateur;

d) aviser les Premières Nations membres du groupe qu'elles doivent donner un avis d'acceptation si elles souhaitent participer à l'entente; et

e) aviser les Premières Nations membres du groupe qu'elles peuvent soumettre une confirmation du conseil de bande, si elles le souhaitent.

4. L'administrateur met le formulaire de réclamation à la disposition du public sur son site Web et le fait parvenir par courriel ou par la poste à toute personne qui en fait la demande.

5. L'administrateur inclut dans l'envoi postal une enveloppe affranchie et le formulaire de réclamation.

6. L'administrateur tient à jour une base de données de tous les formulaires de réclamation et confirmations du conseil de bande qu'il reçoit. Si les parties reçoivent des formulaires de réclamation ou des confirmations du conseil de bande, elles les transmettent immédiatement à l'administrateur.

7. À la réception d'un formulaire de réclamation ou d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur examine le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande, selon le cas, pour déterminer s'il est complet et, s'il est incomplet, il fait tous les efforts raisonnables pour communiquer avec le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation membre du groupe, selon le cas, afin d'obtenir d'autres renseignements pour remplir le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande. Toutefois, l'administrateur aura le pouvoir discrétionnaire d'accepter des irrégularités mineures et, s'il accepte un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande comportant des irrégularités mineures, il n'est pas tenu de communiquer avec le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation membre du groupe pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements. Les demandeurs d'indemnité et les Premières Nations membres du groupe disposent de quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours à compter de la date à laquelle ils sont contactés pour remédier à toute irrégularité décelée, à défaut de quoi l'administrateur leur indiquera par écrit, selon le cas, son refus d'accepter le formulaire de réclamation ou la confirmation du conseil de bande et le motif de son refus. Malgré ce qui précède, l'administrateur peut accepter la partie incomplète d'une confirmation du conseil de bande qui contient suffisamment de renseignements pour prendre une décision quant à l'admissibilité.

8. Dans les cas d'omissions ou d'erreurs mineures dans un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur doit corriger ces omissions ou erreurs s'il dispose aisément du renseignement nécessaire pour corriger l'erreur ou l'omission.

9. Chaque demandeur d'indemnité peut seulement soumettre un (1) formulaire de réclamation à l'égard de toutes ses réclamations, tandis qu'un exécuteur testamentaire, un demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou un représentant personnel peut seulement présenter un (1) formulaire de réclamation pour le compte d'un demandeur d'indemnité concerné.

DÉCISIONS QUANT À L'ADMISSIBILITÉ CONCERNANT LES PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE

10. Immédiatement après la réception d'un formulaire de réclamation de règlement, l'administrateur prend une décision quant à l'admissibilité conformément à l'entente en fonction du formulaire de réclamation, de la liste, de toute confirmation du conseil de bande pertinente, de tout autre renseignement reçu des parties et de tout autre renseignement qu'il juge approprié. Immédiatement après la réception d'une confirmation du conseil de bande, l'administrateur prend les décisions quant à l'admissibilité conformément à l'entente (y compris le paragraphe 7.02(2)) à l'égard des demandeurs d'indemnité qui y sont indiqués, en fonction de la confirmation du conseil de bande, des formulaires de réclamation reçus à l'égard des demandeurs d'indemnité qui sont indiqués dans la confirmation du conseil de bande, de la liste, de tout autre renseignement reçu des parties et de tout autre renseignement que l'administrateur juge approprié.

11. Si un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande indique que le demandeur d'indemnité résidait habituellement dans une réserve qui figure sur la liste depuis au moins un (1) an et qui était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, mais que le demandeur d'indemnité est membre d'une Première Nation qui n'est pas une Première Nation touchée, le demandeur d'indemnité peut néanmoins être inclus dans le groupe. Si un formulaire de réclamation ou une confirmation du conseil de bande indique que le demandeur d'indemnité était habituellement résident dans une réserve qui ne figure pas sur la liste, et que l'administrateur n'en a pas encore tenu compte, alors l'administrateur :

    a) consulte le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement avant de déterminer si le nom de la réserve devrait être ajouté sur la liste au motif qu'elle était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme pendant la période visée et, si c'est le cas, lorsque la période la réserve était visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme; et

    b) peut demander d'autres renseignements ou preuves avant de prendre une décision quant à l'admissibilité .

12. Si l'administrateur juge que le demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe, il informe sans délai le demandeur d'indemnité :

    a) de la décision de l'administrateur;

    b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels le demandeur d'indemnité n'est pas une personne membre du groupe; et

    c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

INDEMNITÉ POUR LES PERSONNES MEMBRES DU GROUPE

13. Si l'administrateur prend une décision quant à l'admissibilité selon laquelle un demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe conformément à l'entente, l'administrateur quantifie le montant payable à cette personne membre du groupe sur le Fonds en fiducie conformément à l'article 8.01 et à l'ANNEXE G de l'entente, l'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

14. Lorsque l'administrateur verse une indemnité conformément à l'article 8.01 de l'entente et à l'article 13 de la présente ANNEXE F, l'administrateur informe également la personne membre du groupe :

    a) du mode de calcul de la somme payée; et

    b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur de la somme payable conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

INDEMNITÉ POUR PRÉJUDICES DÉTERMINÉS

15. Sur demande raisonnable, les avocats du groupe aident un demandeur d'indemnité à soumettre sa réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou à formuler son appel d'une décision relative à un préjudice déterminé sans frais supplémentaires pour le demandeur d'indemnité, et les honoraires des avocats du groupe sont payables conformément à l'article 18.02 de l'entente.

16. Une personne membre du groupe confirmée est admissible à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés si elle satisfait aux critères énoncés à l'article 8.02 de l'entente.

17. Un demandeur d'indemnité peut, à son gré, soumettre, au soutien de sa réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, à l'administrateur la totalité ou une partie des éléments suivants avec son formulaire de réclamation :

    a) les dossiers médicaux du préjudice et sa cause;

    b) les autres dossiers, y compris les dossiers écrits, les photographies et les vidéos, concernant le préjudice et sa cause;

    c) une déclaration écrite; et

    d) témoignage oral.

18. Il est entendu que la procédure de règlement des réclamations portant sur des préjudices déterminés n'est pas censée être traumatisante et que l'article 17 de la présente Error! Reference source not found. n'empêche pas un demandeur d'indemnité d'établir son admissibilité à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés en se fondant uniquement sur son formulaire de réclamation.

19. Si un demandeur d'indemnité réclame une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, mais que l'administrateur détermine que ce demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés lorsque les préjudices qui y sont décrits ne sont pas prévus dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur se conforme sans délai à l'article 7.04 de l'entente.

20. Si un demandeur d'indemnité réclame une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, mais que l'administrateur détermine que le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés concernant les préjudices qui y sont décrits pour un motif autre que celui selon lequel le préjudice n'est pas prévu dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés, l'administrateur informe sans délai le demandeur d'indemnité :

    a) de la décision de l'administrateur;

    b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels le demandeur d'indemnité n'a pas droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés; et

    c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

21. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une personne membre du groupe confirmée a droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés, il quantifie le montant payable à cette personne membre du groupe confirmée sur le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente et à l'Error! Reference source not found..

22. Le paiement de l'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés sera effectué conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

23. Lorsque l'administrateur verse une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés à une personne membre du groupe confirmée, conformément à l'article 8.02 de l'entente et à la présente Error! Reference source not found., l'administrateur doit également informer la personne membre du groupe confirmée :

    a) du mode de calcul de la somme payée; et

    b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur de la somme payable conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

DOMMAGES-INTÉRÊTS DE PREMIÈRE NATION MEMBRE DU GROUPE

    a) consulte le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement avant de déterminer si la Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe; et

    b) peut demander des renseignements ou des preuves supplémentaires avant de décider si une Première Nation est admissible à titre de Première Nation membre du groupe .

25. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une Première Nation n'est pas une Première Nation membre du groupe par application de l'article 24 de la présente Error! Reference source not found., il informe sans délai la Première Nation :

a) de la décision de l'administrateur;

b) des motifs de la décision de l'administrateur selon lesquels la Première Nation n'est pas une Première Nation membre de groupe; et

c) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la décision de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

26. Si l'administrateur établit qu'une Première Nation qui a remis une acceptation est une Première Nation membre de groupe, il paie l'indemnité de base et les dommages-intérêts de Première Nation conformément à l'article 8.03 de l'entente. L'administrateur demande ces fonds au fiduciaire, le fiduciaire fournit ces fonds à l'administrateur et l'administrateur paie ces fonds conformément à l'entente.

27. Chaque fois que l'administrateur verse des dommages-intérêts de Première Nation à une Première Nation membre de groupe, il informe la Première Nation membre de groupe :

a) de la manière dont il a calculé la somme payée; et

b) de sa possibilité d'interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur de la quantification de l'administrateur conformément à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations et à l'entente.

APPEL

28. Lorsqu'un demandeur d'indemnité, une personne membre du groupe, une Première Nation ou une Première Nation membre du groupe, selon le cas (un « appelant »), souhaite interjeter appel d'une décision de l'administrateur, l'appelant fournit à l'administrateur, dans les soixante (60) jours de la réception de la décision de l'administrateur, une déclaration écrite indiquant la décision qu'il souhaite porter en appel et les motifs pour lesquels il estime que l'administrateur a erré.

29. L'administrateur transmet sans délai les documents qu'il reçoit par application de l'article 28 de la présente annexe au tiers évaluateur pour que ce dernier tranche l'affaire.

30. Lorsqu'il examine un appel, le tiers évaluateur peut consulter l'appelant, l'administrateur et le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement. Le tiers évaluateur peut notamment demander des preuves à l'appelant et à l'administrateur.

31. Le tiers évaluateur tranche l'appel dans les meilleurs délais.

32. Dès qu'il rend sa décision, le tiers évaluateur informe sans délai l'appelant et l'administrateur :

a) de la décision du tiers évaluateur; et

b) des motifs de la décision du tiers évaluateur.

33. La décision du tiers évaluateur est définitive et n'est pas susceptible d'appel ou de révision.

34. Il est entendu qu'une personne membre du groupe ne peut interjeter appel devant le tiers évaluateur d'une réclamation d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés lorsque l'administrateur juge que le préjudice qui y est décrit n'est pas prévu dans la grille d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés. L'article 7.04 de l'entente reçoit plutôt application.

GÉNÉRALITÉS

35. À moins d'indication contraire dans l'entente ou dans la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations, la norme de preuve dans tous les cas est la prépondérance des probabilités en fonction de l'entente, et le tiers évaluateur applique une norme de contrôle de la décision correcte en fonction de l'entente. Il est entendu que, pour que l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur conclue qu'un demandeur d'indemnité ou une Première Nation est admissible à une indemnité conformément à l'entente et sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente ou la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations, l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur doit conclure qu'il est plus que probable que le demandeur d'indemnité ou la Première Nation soit admissible à une indemnité selon les renseignements dont dispose l'administrateur ou le tiers évaluateur.

36. Pour déterminer si i) un demandeur d'indemnité est une personne membre du groupe et est admissible à une indemnité en vertu de l'entente ou ii) une Première Nation est une Première Nation membre du groupe, l'administrateur et le tiers évaluateur peuvent :

a) demander des renseignements supplémentaires à un demandeur d'indemnité, à une Première Nation ou aux parties; et

b) interroger un demandeur d'indemnité ou un représentant d'une Première Nation.

37. Les parties peuvent apporter des modifications à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations si elles y consentent pour des changements de procédures, comme la prorogation de délai, et l'adoption de protocoles et de procédures, sans obtenir l'approbation du tribunal, pour autant que ces modifications n'aient pas d'incidence importante sur les droits et recours énoncés dans la procédure de règlement des réclamations. Les parties obtiennent l'approbation des tribunaux quant aux changements de fond apportés à la présente procédure de règlement des réclamations.

38. L'administrateur fournit une ligne d'assistance bilingue (français et anglais) sans frais pour aider les demandeurs d'indemnité, les membres de leur famille, leurs tuteurs ou d'autres personnes qui formulent des demandes de renseignements pour le compte des demandeurs d'indemnité.

39. Après la distribution des fonds indiqués ci-dessous conformément à la présente entente :

a) le Fonds en fiducie, y compris tout excédent du Fonds en fiducie;

b) le fonds d'indemnisation pour préjudices déterminés; et

c) le Fonds pour la relance économique et culturelle des Premières Nations, l'administrateur demande à être libéré et dépose devant les tribunaux un rapport conformément à l'article 21.02 de l'entente, contenant des renseignements au mieux de sa connaissance concernant ce qui suit :

d) le nombre total de personnes membres du groupe et de Premières Nations membres du groupe;

e) le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont soumis un formulaire de réclamation et le nombre de personnes qui ont reçu des dommages-intérêts individuels;

f) le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont réclamé une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés et le nombre de demandeurs d'indemnité qui ont reçu une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés;

g) le nombre de Premières Nations membres du groupe qui ont remis l'acceptation de l'entente;

h) les montants distribués aux membres du groupe ou pour le compte de membres du groupe, à titre de dommages-intérêts individuels, d'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ou de dommages-intérêts de Première Nation, et une description de la façon dont les montants ont été distribués;

i) le nombre de réclamations par Première Nation et les sommes payées par celle-ci; et

j) les coûts associés aux travaux de l'administrateur.

40. Une partie ou l'administrateur peut proposer qu'une partie du rapport visée à l'article 39 de la présente annexe soit placée sous scellés.

41. Dès qu'il est libéré de ses fonctions d'administrateur, l'administrateur conserve sur support papier ou électronique tous les documents se rapportant à une réclamation pendant deux (2) ans, après quoi il doit détruire ces documents.

ANNEXE G

GRILLE D'INDEMNISATION DES PRÉJUDICES INDIVIDUELS

Le comité mixte détermine les montants réels qui seront indiqués sur l'avis d'un actuaire ou d'un conseiller analogue.

GRILLE D'INDEMNISATION DES PRÉJUDICES DÉTERMINÉS

Catégorie	Préjudice déterminé	Exemples de symptômes	Niveau 1 Déséquilibre important et prolongé de la santé, du bien-être ou des activités quotidiennes qui : a) a persisté au moins un mois; b) a porté atteinte à la qualité de vie du demandeur; c) et pour lequel le demandeur a sollicité un traitement auprès d'un professionnel de la santé, y compris les guérisseurs traditionnels, les chamans, les Aînés, les responsables de la santé communautaire ou les gardiens du savoir (indemnisation totale pour tous les préjudices)	Niveau 2 Les effets du Niveau 1 qui : a) ont persisté pendant au moins un an; b) ont porté gravement atteinte à la santé et aux activités quotidiennes du demandeur; et c) pour lesquels le demandeur a sollicité et reçu un traitement d'un professionnel de la santé, y compris des guérisseurs traditionnels ou des chamans (indemnisation totale pour tous les préjudices)
Gastroentérologie	Ingestion de bactéries (Escherichia coli, Salmonella, Shigella, Campylobacter jejuni, choléra, Giardia instestinalis, Cryptosporidium, cyanobactéries [algues bleu-vert], coliformes totaux, Helicobacter pylori) Infection virale (rotavirus, norovirus, hépatite A)	Crampes d'estomac, nausée, diarrhée, vomissements, douleurs abdominales, déshydratation, constipation	5 000 $	20 000 $

	Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine : arsenic, atrazine, diquat, cuivre, plomb, glyphosate, nitrite, nitrate, phorate, chrome, sulfate Ulcères d'estomac
Respiratoire	Intoxication au chlore Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine : nitrite, nitrate	Graves difficultés respiratoires, douloureuse irritation des voies aériennes ou des poumons (pouvant s'accompagner d'une irritation oculaire), importantes douleurs thoraciques, essoufflement, bleuissement de la peau	20 000 $	50 000 $
Dermatologique	Infections cutanées (Staphylococcus aureus, Streptococcus pyogenes) Lésions cutanées Intoxication au chlore	Cellulite, clous (furoncles), lésions cutanées, pigmentation cutanée, fasciite nécrosante (maladie mangeuse de chair)	10 000 $	25 000 $
Santé mentale	Trouble dépressif majeur; trouble dépressif persistant (dysthymie); trouble panique; trouble de l'usage de l'alcool; trouble de l'usage du cannabis; trouble de l'usage du tabac; trouble de l'usage de sédatifs, de somnifères ou d'anxiolytiques; trouble	Voir l'appendice « H-1 »	15 000 $	30 000 $

	de stress post-traumatique; phobie spécifique; trouble de l'adaptation; anxiété généralisée
Foie	Infection virale (hépatite A) Ingestion de bactéries (cyanobactéries [algues bleu-vert]) Atteintes hépatiques (kystes, lésions, intoxication) Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine : antimoine, bromoxynil, tétrachlorure de carbone, cuivre, dicamba, dichlorométhane, 1,1-dichloroéthylène, 2,4-dichlorophénol, diclofop-méthyl, éthylbenzène, acides haloacétiques (AHA), métachlore, métribuzine, paraquat, pentachlorophénol, perfluorooctanesulfonate, acide perfluorooctanoïque, piclorame, chlorure de vinyle, benzo(a)pyrène, métachlore, trifluraline, trihalométhanes (THM)	Décoloration des yeux et de la peau, gonflement des jambes et des chevilles, fatigue chronique, perte d'appétit, douleur abdominale, inflammation du foie, insuffisance hépatique	35 000 $	80 000 $ (en cas d'insuffisance hépatique)
Neurologique	Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine : azinphos-méthyl, chlorite, diméthoate, plomb, malathion, manganèse, mercure, phorate, toluène	Irritabilité, déficit de l'attention, céphalée, insomnie, étourdissements, pertes de mémoire, baisse du QI, modifications comportementales chez les enfants	20 000 $	50 000 $

Reins	Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine : antimoine, baryum, bromate, cadmium, cuivre, acide 2,4-dichlorophénoxyacétique, acide 2-méthyl-4-chlorophénoxyacétique, diquat, malathion, acide aminotriacétique, paraquat, pentachlorophénol, picloram, trihalométhanes (THM), uranium	Atteinte rénale, lésions aux reins, insuffisance rénale	25 000 $	65 000 $ (en cas d'insuffisance rénale)
Infections transmissibles par le sang, y compris l'endocardite infectieuse	Infections contractées après avoir utilisé une solution aqueuse issue d'injections/seringues/aiguilles	Douleurs aux articulations et aux muscles, douleurs thoraciques, fatigue, symptômes grippaux, sueurs nocturnes, essoufflement, œdème du bas du corps, souffle cardiaque	20 000 $	80 000 $ (en cas d'endocardite infectieuse)
Tumeurs/cancer	Ingestion de produits chimiques en quantités nocives pour la santé humaine	Tumeurs, cancer	40 000 $	100 000 $

Appendice H-1
Symptômes de référence en santé mentale

• Dépression majeure	A. Au moins cinq des symptômes suivants étaient présents au cours d'une même période de deux semaines et représentent un changement sur le plan du fonctionnement : au moins un de ces symptômes est (1) une humeur dépressive ou (2) une perte d'intérêt ou de plaisir. Ne pas inclure les symptômes qui sont manifestement attribuables à une autre condition médicale. 1. Humeur dépressive présente pendant la plus grande partie de la journée, presque tous les jours, qu'elle soit signalée par la personne (p. ex., en indiquant qu'elle se sent triste, vide, désespérée) ou observée par les autres (p. ex., en signalant l'avoir vue pleurer). (Remarque : Chez l'enfant et l'adolescent, il peut s'agir d'une humeur irritable.) 2. Diminution marquée de l'intérêt ou du plaisir relatif à toutes ou presque toutes les activités pendant la plus grande partie de la journée, presque tous les jours (signalée par la personne ou observée par les autres). 3. Perte de poids significative non attribuable à un régime ou gain de poids important (p. ex., changement de poids dépassant les 5 % en un mois), ou appétit accru ou réduit presque tous les jours. (Remarque : Chez l'enfant, prendre en compte la non-survenance d'une augmentation de poids attendue.) 4. Insomnie ou hypersomnie presque tous les jours. 5. Agitation ou ralentissement sur le plan psychomoteur presque tous les jours (observable par les autres, et non seulement un sentiment subjectif de fébrilité ou de ralentissement). 6. Fatigue ou perte d'énergie presque tous les jours. 7. Sentiment de dévalorisation ou de culpabilité excessive ou inappropriée (et potentiellement délirante) presque tous les jours (pas seulement se faire grief ou se sentir coupable d'être malade). 8. Diminution de l'aptitude à penser ou à se concentrer, ou indécision, presque tous les jours (signalée par la personne ou observée par les autres). 9. Pensées de mort récurrentes (pas seulement une peur de mourir), idées suicidaires récurrentes sans plan précis ou tentative de suicide ou plan précis pour se suicider. B. Les symptômes causent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. C. L'épisode n'est pas imputable aux effets physiologiques d'une substance ou d'une autre affection médicale.
• Trouble dépressif persistant (Dysthymie)	Ce trouble regroupe le trouble dépressif majeur et la dysthymie tels qu'ils sont définis dans le DSM-IV.

	A. Humeur dépressive présente presque toute la journée, plus d'un jour sur deux pendant au moins deux ans, signalée par la personne ou observée par les autres. Remarque : Chez l'enfant et l'adolescent, il peut s'agir d'une humeur irritable présente depuis d'au moins un an. B. Quand la personne est déprimée, elle présente au moins deux des symptômes suivants : 1. Perte d'appétit ou hyperphagie. 2. Insomnie ou hypersomnie. 3. Baisse d'énergie ou fatigue. 4. Faible estime de soi. 5. Difficultés de concentration ou difficultés à prendre des décisions. 6. Sentiments de perte d'espoir. C. Au cours des deux ans (ou, pour les enfants ou adolescents, de l'an) où l'humeur est perturbée, la personne n'a jamais cessé de présenter les symptômes des critères A et B pendant plus de deux mois consécutifs. D. Les symptômes du trouble dépressif majeur peuvent être continuellement présents pendant deux ans. E. Il n'y a jamais eu d'épisode maniaque ou d'épisode hypomaniaque, et les critères du trouble cyclothymique n'ont jamais été réunis. F. La perturbation ne s'explique pas mieux par un cas persistant de trouble schizoaffectif, de schizophrénie, de trouble délirant ou d'un autre trouble psychotique ou du spectre de la schizophrénie (spécifié ou non). G. Les symptômes ne sont pas dus aux effets physiologiques d'une substance (p. ex., une drogue utilisée par les toxicomanes ou un médicament) ou d'une autre affection médicale (p. ex. l'hypothyroïdie). H. Les symptômes causent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants.
• Trouble panique	A. Attaques de panique inattendues et récurrentes. Une attaque de panique est une montée soudaine de peur ou de malaise intense qui atteint un pic en quelques minutes, et durant laquelle au moins quatre des symptômes suivants se manifestent : Remarque : La montée brusque peut naître d'un état de calme comme d'un état anxieux. 1. Palpitations, battements de cœur ou accélération du rythme cardiaque. 2. Transpiration. 3. Tremblements ou secousses. 4. Sensation d'essoufflement ou d'étouffement. 5. Sensation d'étranglement. 6. Douleur ou gêne thoraciques. 7. Nausées ou gêne abdominale. 8. Sensation de vertige, d'instabilité, d'étourdissement, ou de faiblesse. 9. Frissons ou sensations de chaleur.

	10. Paresthésie (engourdissement ou picotement). 11. Déréalisation (sentiment d'irréalité) ou dépersonnalisation (impression d'être détaché de soi). 12. Peur de perdre le contrôle ou de « devenir fou ». 13. Peur de mourir. Remarque : Des symptômes particuliers à la culture (acouphènes, douleur au cou, maux de tête, cris ou pleurs incontrôlables) peuvent être présents. Ceux-ci ne doivent pas compter comme l'un des quatre symptômes nécessaires au diagnostic. B. Au moins une attaque a été suivie de l'un ou l'autre des éléments suivants pendant au moins un mois : 1. Préoccupation ou inquiétude persistante quant à l'éventualité d'autres attaques de panique et de leurs conséquences (p. ex., craindre de perdre le contrôle, d'avoir une crise cardiaque ou de « devenir fou »). 2. Changement de comportement significatif et inadapté lié aux attaques (p. ex., adopter des comportements visant à éviter d'autres attaques, comme faire de l'exercice ou se mettre dans une situation inhabituelle). C. La perturbation n'est pas imputable aux effets physiologiques d'une substance (p. ex., une drogue utilisée par les toxicomanes ou un médicament) ou d'une autre condition médicale (p. ex., l'hyperthyroïdie ou des troubles cardio-pulmonaires). D. La perturbation ne s'explique pas mieux par un autre trouble mental (p. ex., en ce que les attaques de panique ne se produisent pas seulement en réponse à des situations sociales redoutées, comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété sociale; en réponse à des objets ou des situations phobiques précis, comme en cas de phobie spécifique; en réponse à des obsessions, comme en cas de trouble obsessionnel compulsif; en réponse à des rappels d'événements traumatiques, comme en cas de syndrome de stress post-traumatique; ou en réponse à la séparation d'une figure d'attachement, comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété de séparation).
• Trouble d'utilisation de l'alcool	A. Mode problématique d'utilisation de l'alcool conduisant à une altération du fonctionnement ou une souffrance cliniquement significatives, comme en témoigne la survenance, dans une même période de 12 mois, d'au moins deux des éléments suivants : 1. L'alcool est souvent pris en quantité plus importante ou pendant une période plus longue que prévu. 2. Désir persistant ou efforts infructueux de réduire ou de contrôler l'utilisation de l'alcool. 3. Beaucoup de temps est consacré aux activités nécessaires à l'obtention et à l'utilisation d'alcool, ou encore à la récupération rendue nécessaire par ses effets. 4. Envie, fort désir ou besoin de consommer de l'alcool. 5. L'utilisation récurrente de l'alcool entraîne le manquement à d'importantes obligations au travail, à l'école ou à la maison.

	6. Utilisation persistante de l'alcool malgré le fait que ses effets causent ou exacerbent des problèmes sociaux ou interpersonnels persistants ou récurrents. 7. La participation à des activités sociales, professionnelles ou récréatives importantes est abandonnée ou réduite en raison de l'utilisation d'alcool. 8. Utilisation récurrente d'alcool dans des situations où il pose un danger physique. 9. Utilisation persistante d'alcool bien que la personne soit consciente d'avoir un problème physique ou psychologique persistant ou récurrent qui est susceptible d'avoir été causé ou exacerbé par l'alcool. 10. Tolérance, comme définie par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Un besoin de quantités de plus en plus grandes d'alcool pour s'intoxiquer ou atteindre l'effet désiré. b. Un effet notablement réduit avec l'utilisation récurrente de la même quantité d'alcool. 11. Sevrage, comme manifesté par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Le syndrome de sevrage de l'alcool caractéristique (consulter le DSM-V pour en savoir plus). b. L'alcool (ou une substance qui s'en rapproche fortement, comme une benzodiazépine) est pris pour soulager ou éviter les symptômes de sevrage.
• Trouble d'utilisation du cannabis	A. Mode problématique d'utilisation du cannabis conduisant à une altération du fonctionnement ou une souffrance cliniquement significatives, comme en témoigne la survenance, dans une même période de 12 mois, d'au moins deux des éléments suivants : 1. Le cannabis est souvent pris en quantité plus importante ou pendant une période plus longue que prévu. 2. Désir persistant ou efforts infructueux de réduire ou de contrôler l'utilisation du cannabis. 3. Beaucoup de temps est consacré aux activités nécessaires à l'obtention et à l'utilisation de cannabis, ou encore à la récupération rendue nécessaire par ses effets. 4. Envie, fort désir ou besoin de consommer du cannabis. 5. L'utilisation récurrente de cannabis entraîne le manquement à d'importantes obligations au travail, à l'école ou à la maison. 6. Utilisation persistante de cannabis malgré le fait que ses effets causent ou exacerbent des problèmes sociaux ou interpersonnels persistants ou récurrents. 7. La participation à des activités sociales, professionnelles ou récréatives importantes est abandonnée ou réduite en raison de l'utilisation de cannabis. 8. Utilisation récurrente de cannabis dans des situations où il pose un danger physique. 9. Utilisation persistante de cannabis bien que la personne soit consciente d'avoir un problème physique ou psychologique persistant ou récurrent qui est susceptible d'avoir été causé ou exacerbé par le cannabis. 10. Tolérance, comme définie par l'un des éléments suivants :

	a. Un besoin de quantités de plus en plus grandes de cannabis pour s'intoxiquer ou atteindre l'effet désiré. b. Un effet notablement réduit avec l'utilisation continue de la même quantité de cannabis. 11. Sevrage, comme manifesté par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Le syndrome de sevrage caractéristique du cannabis (consulter le DSM-V pour en savoir plus à ce propos). b. Le cannabis (ou une substance apparentée) est pris pour soulager ou éviter les symptômes de sevrage.
• Trouble d'utilisation du tabac	A. Mode problématique d'utilisation du tabac conduisant à une altération du fonctionnement ou une souffrance cliniquement significatives, comme en témoigne la survenance, dans une même période de 12 mois, d'au moins deux des éléments suivants : 1. Le tabac est souvent pris en quantité plus importante ou pendant une période plus longue que prévu. 2. Désir persistant ou efforts infructueux de réduire ou de contrôler l'utilisation du tabac. 3. Beaucoup de temps est consacré aux activités nécessaires à l'obtention et à l'utilisation de tabac. 4. Envie, fort désir ou besoin de consommer du tabac. 5. L'utilisation récurrente du tabac entraîne le manquement à d'importantes obligations au travail, à l'école ou à la maison. 6. Utilisation persistante du tabac malgré le fait que ses effets causent ou exacerbent des problèmes sociaux ou interpersonnels persistants ou récurrents (p. ex., des conflits avec autrui sur l'utilisation du tabac). 7. La participation à des activités sociales, professionnelles ou récréatives importantes est abandonnée ou réduite en raison de l'utilisation de tabac. 8. Utilisation récurrente du tabac dans des situations où il pose un danger physique (p. ex., fumer au lit). 9. Utilisation persistante du tabac bien que la personne soit consciente d'avoir un problème physique ou psychologique persistant ou récurrent qui est susceptible d'avoir été causé ou exacerbé par le tabac. 10. Tolérance, comme définie par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Un besoin de quantités de plus en plus grandes de tabac pour atteindre l'effet désiré. b. Un effet notablement réduit avec l'utilisation continue de la même quantité de tabac. 11. Sevrage, comme manifesté par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Le syndrome de sevrage caractéristique du tabac (voir les critères A et B établis pour le sevrage du tabac). b. Le tabac (ou une substance qui s'en rapproche fortement, comme la nicotine) est pris pour soulager ou éviter les symptômes de sevrage.
• Trouble d'utilisation de sédatifs, d'hypnotiques et d'anxiolytiques	A. Mode problématique d'utilisation d'un sédatif, d'un hypnotique ou d'un anxiolytique conduisant à une altération du fonctionnement ou une souffrance cliniquement significatives, comme en témoigne la survenance, dans une même période de 12 mois, d'au moins deux des éléments suivants : 1. Le sédatif, l'hypnotique ou l'anxiolytique est souvent pris en quantité plus importante ou pendant une période plus longue que prévu. 2. Désir persistant ou efforts infructueux de réduire ou de contrôler l'utilisation du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique. 3. Beaucoup de temps est consacré aux activités nécessaires à l'obtention et à l'utilisation du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique, ou encore à la récupération rendue nécessaire par ses effets. 4. Envie, fort désir ou besoin d'utiliser le sédatif, l'hypnotique ou l'anxiolytique. 5. L'utilisation récurrente du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique entraîne le manquement à d'importantes obligations au travail, à l'école ou à la maison (p. ex., absences répétées ou mauvais rendement au travail; absences, suspensions ou expulsions de l'école; ou négligence à l'égard d'un enfant ou du ménage). 6. Utilisation persistante du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique malgré le fait que ses effets causent ou exacerbent des problèmes sociaux ou interpersonnels persistants ou récurrents (p. ex., disputes conjugales à propos des conséquences de l'intoxication; altercations physiques). 7. La participation à des activités sociales, professionnelles ou récréatives importantes est abandonnée ou réduite en raison de l'utilisation du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique. 8. Utilisation récurrente du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique dans des situations où il pose un danger physique (p. ex., conduite automobile ou contrôle de machinerie). 9. Utilisation persistante du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique bien que la personne soit consciente d'avoir un problème physique ou psychologique persistant ou récurrent qui est susceptible d'avoir été causé ou exacerbé par cette substance. 10. Tolérance, comme définie par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Besoin de quantités de plus en plus grandes du sédatif, de l'hypnotique ou de l'anxiolytique pour s'intoxiquer ou obtenir l'effet souhaité. b. Effet notablement réduit avec l'utilisation continue de la même quantité de sédatif, d'hypnotique ou d'anxiolytique. Remarque : Ce critère n'est pas considéré comme satisfait pour les personnes qui utilisent un sédatif, un hypnotique ou un anxiolytique sous supervision médicale. 11. Sevrage, comme manifesté par l'un des éléments suivants : a. Le syndrome de sevrage caractéristique d'un sédatif, d'un hypnotique ou d'un anxiolytique (voir les critères A et B établis pour le sevrage d'un sédatif, d'un hypnotique ou d'un anxiolytique). b. Le sédatif, l'hypnotique ou l'anxiolytique (ou une substance qui s'en rapproche fortement, comme l'alcool) sont pris pour soulager ou éviter les symptômes de sevrage.

• État de stress post-traumatique	Remarque : Les critères suivants s'appliquent aux adultes, aux adolescents et aux enfants âgés de plus de six ans. Pour les enfants de six ans et moins, voir les critères correspondants ci-dessous. A. Exposition à la mort, à des blessures graves ou à de la violence sexuelle, ou encore à leur potentialité, d'au moins une des façons suivantes : 1. Vivre directement le ou les événements traumatiques. 2. Être témoin en personne du ou des événements alors qu'ils sont vécus par d'autres. 3. Apprendre que le ou les événements traumatiques ont été vécus par un membre de la famille proche ou un ami proche. En cas du décès ou de la mise en danger mortel d'un membre de la famille ou d'un ami, le ou les événements doivent avoir été violents ou accidentels. 4. Vivre une exposition répétée ou extrême aux détails pénibles du ou des événements traumatiques (p. ex., des premiers intervenants qui recueillent des restes humains, ou des policiers qui sont exposés à répétition aux détails de la maltraitance d'enfants). Remarque : Le critère A4 ne s'applique pas à l'exposition par l'intermédiaire de médias électroniques, de la télévision, de films ou de photos, à moins qu'elle ne soit liée au travail. B. Présence d'au moins un des symptômes intrusifs suivants associés à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'ils soient apparus après la survenance de ce dernier : 1. Souvenirs pénibles récurrents, involontaires, et envahissants du ou des événements traumatiques. Remarque : Chez l'enfant âgé de plus de six ans, il peut s'agir d'un jeu répétitif dans lequel des thèmes ou des aspects du ou des événements traumatiques sont exprimés. 2. Rêves répétitifs pénibles dont le contenu ou l'affect sont liés à ou aux événements traumatiques. Remarque : Chez l'enfant, il peut s'agir de rêves effrayants sans contenu reconnaissable. 3. Réactions dissociatives (p. ex., flashbacks) dans lesquelles la personne se sent ou agit comme si le ou les événements traumatiques se reproduisaient. (De telles réactions peuvent survenir sur un continuum, l'expression la plus sérieuse étant une perte totale de conscience de l'environnement actuel.) Remarque : Chez l'enfant, des reconstitutions du traumatisme peuvent se produire dans le jeu. 4. Détresse psychologique intense ou prolongée à l'exposition à des indices internes ou externes évoquant un aspect du ou des événements traumatiques ou y ressemblant.

	5. Réactions physiologiques marquées à des indices internes ou externes évoquant un aspect du ou des événements traumatiques ou y ressemblant. C. Évitement persistant des stimuli associés à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'il soit apparu après la survenance de ces derniers, comme en témoigne au moins une des manifestations suivantes : 1. Évitement ou tentatives d'évitement de souvenirs, de pensées ou de sentiments pénibles concernant le ou les événements traumatiques ou y étant étroitement associés. 2. Évitement ou tentatives d'évitement de rappels externes (personnes, lieux, conversations, activités, objets, situations) qui éveillent des souvenirs, des pensées ou des sentiments pénibles concernant le ou les événements traumatiques ou y étant étroitement associés. D. Altérations négatives de cognitions et d'humeurs associées à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'elles soient apparues ou se soient aggravées après la survenance de ce dernier, comme en témoignent au moins deux des manifestations suivantes : 1. Incapacité de se rappeler un aspect important du ou des événements traumatiques (typiquement en raison d'une amnésie dissociative, et non d'autres facteurs comme une blessure à la tête ou la consommation d'alcool ou de drogues). 2. Croyances ou attentes négatives persistantes et exagérées à propos de soi-même, des autres ou du monde (p. ex., « Je suis mauvais », « On ne peut faire confiance à personne », « Le monde est complètement dangereux », « Mon système nerveux entier est définitivement ruiné »). 3. Cognitions persistantes et déformées concernant la cause ou les conséquences du ou des événements traumatiques qui amènent la personne à se blâmer ou à blâmer autrui. 4. État émotionnel négatif persistant (p. ex., peur, horreur, colère, culpabilité ou honte). 5. Diminution marquée de l'intérêt envers des activités significatives ou de la participation à celles-ci. 6. Sentiment de détachement ou d'éloignement des autres. 7. Incapacité persistante de ressentir des émotions positives (p. ex., bonheur, satisfaction ou sentiments affectueux). E. Altérations marquées de l'éveil et de la réactivité associées à ou aux événements traumatiques, pourvu qu'elles soient apparues ou se soient aggravées après la survenance de ce dernier, comme en témoignent au moins deux des manifestations suivantes : 1. Comportement irritable et crises de colère (avec peu ou pas de provocation), généralement sous forme d'agression verbale ou physique envers des personnes ou des objets. 2. Comportement imprudent ou autodestructeur. 3. Hypervigilance. 4. Réaction de sursaut exagérée.

	5. Problèmes de concentration. 6. Troubles du sommeil (p. ex., difficultés à s'endormir ou à rester endormi, ou sommeil agité). F. La perturbation (critères B, C, D, et E) dure plus d'un mois. G. La perturbation entraîne une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. H. La perturbation n'est pas imputable aux effets physiologiques d'une substance (p. ex., médicaments, alcool) ou d'une autre condition médicale.
• Phobie spécifique	A. Peur marquée d'un objet ou une situation en particulier (p. ex., le fait de voler, les hauteurs, les animaux, les aiguilles, le sang). Remarque : Chez l'enfant, l'anxiété peut s'exprimer par des pleurs, des crises de colère, ou le fait de demeurer figé ou de s'accrocher. B. L'exposition à l'objet ou à la situation phobogène provoque presque toujours une réaction anxieuse immédiate. C. Les situations phobogènes sont évitées ou endurées avec une peur ou une anxiété intense. D. La peur ou l'anxiété est disproportionnée par rapport à la menace réelle posée par la situation sociale et au contexte socioculturel. E. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement sont persistants, généralement pendant six mois ou plus. F. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement causent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. G. La peur, l'anxiété ou l'évitement ne s'explique pas mieux par les symptômes d'un autre trouble mental, par exemple la peur, l'anxiété et l'évitement liés à certaines situations accompagnées de symptômes semblables à la panique ou autrement incapacitants (comme en cas d'agoraphobie); les objets et situations liés à une obsession (comme en cas de trouble obsessionnel compulsif); le rappel d'événements traumatisants (comme en cas d'état de stress post-traumatique); la séparation du foyer ou de figures d'attachement (comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété de séparation) ou les situations sociales (comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété sociale).
• Trouble de l'adaptation	A. Développement de symptômes émotionnels et comportementaux en réaction à un ou plusieurs facteurs de stress identifiables, au cours des trois mois qui suivent leur survenance. B. Ces symptômes ou comportements sont cliniquement significatifs, comme en témoigne au moins un des éléments suivants : 1. une souffrance marquée qui est hors de proportion par rapport à la gravité ou à l'intensité du facteur de stress, étant donné le contexte externe et les facteurs culturels pouvant influencer la sévérité et la présentation des symptômes. 2. une altération significative du fonctionnement social, professionnel, ou dans d'autres domaines importants. C. La perturbation liée au stress ne répond pas aux critères d'un autre trouble mental et n'est pas simplement l'exacerbation d'un trouble mental préexistant.

	D. Les symptômes ne sont pas l'expression normale d'un deuil. E. Une fois que le facteur de stress (ou ses conséquences) a disparu, les symptômes ne persistent pas au-delà de six mois.
• Anxiété généralisée	A. Anxiété et soucis excessifs (attente avec appréhension) survenant plus d'un jour sur deux pendant au moins six mois au sujet d'un certain nombre d'événements ou d'activités (tels le travail ou le rendement scolaire). B. La personne éprouve de la difficulté à contrôler cette préoccupation. C. L'anxiété et les soucis sont associés à au moins trois des six symptômes suivants (dont au moins certains ont été présents la plupart du temps au cours des six derniers mois) : Remarque : Un seul item est requis chez l'enfant. 1. Agitation ou sensation d'être survolté ou à bout. 2. Fatigabilité. 3. Difficulté de concentration ou de mémoire. 4. Irritabilité. 5. Tension musculaire. 6. Troubles du sommeil (difficultés à s'endormir ou à rester endormi, ou sommeil agité et non satisfaisant). D. L'anxiété, les soucis ou les symptômes physiques entraînent une souffrance cliniquement significative ou une altération du fonctionnement social, professionnel ou dans d'autres domaines importants. E. La perturbation n'est pas due aux effets physiologiques directs d'une substance (p. ex., une drogue utilisée par les toxicomanes ou un médicament) ou d'une autre condition médicale (p. ex., hyperthyroïdie). F. La perturbation ne s'explique pas mieux par un autre trouble mental (p. ex., l'anxiété ou la préoccupation ne concernent pas seulement les attaques de panique comme en cas de trouble panique; l'évaluation négative comme en cas d'anxiété sociale [phobie sociale]; la contamination ou d'autres obsessions comme en cas de trouble obsessionnel compulsif; la séparation de figures d'attachement comme en cas de trouble d'anxiété de séparation; le rappel d'événements traumatiques comme en cas de stress post-traumatique; la prise de poids comme en cas d'anorexie mentale; les plaintes de problèmes physiques comme en cas de trouble à symptomatologie somatique; les défauts physiques comme en cas de trouble de dysmorphie corporelle; les maladies graves comme en cas de crainte excessive d'avoir une maladie; ou la teneur de croyances délirantes comme en cas de schizophrénie ou de trouble délirant).

Région	Première Nation	Projet	Situation actuelle
ON	Première Nation de Curve Lake	Curve Lake Area Water Treatment Plant	- La Première Nation de Curve Lake se compte à l'heure actuelle, aucun avis sur la qualité de l'eau potable en vigueur. En juin 2018, l'AQEP LT sur l'immeuble administratif des écoles de Curve Lake a été levé. - Curve Lake est desservi avec de l'eau souterraine pompée dans environ 309 puits individuels pour chaque maison, en plus de la substance fonctionnelle qui est desservie par un réseau collectif d'approvisionnement souterrain (Curve Lake Watervalley) (Water Supply Treatment System - qui desservi 89 maisons), ce réseau sera retiré une fois la nouvelle station de traitement d'eau en fonction, et le réseau de distribution d'eau actuel de la substance fonctionnelle sera intégré au nouveau système. Le réseau compte 208 immeubles à revenu locatif qui sont aussi desservis par des puits individuels. Ces puits ne seront pas desservis par le nouveau réseau de traitement et de distribution d'eau. Les puits individuels de Curve Lake sont d'une qualité et d'une quantité inégales, avec un taux relativement élevés d'eau et une contamination des installations exposées aux eaux. Le résultat des essais précédents montre la présence de niveaux élevés de sodium, de turbidité, de fer et de nitrates dans les nombreuses sources d'eau souterraine. Dans le cadre de l'évaluation nationale (Beegan Borreal Ltd., décembre 2019), quatre puits privés ont été examinés et des problèmes de qualité d'eau liés à la présence de nitrates/nitrites, de nitrates et de nitrites, à la turbidité et aux bactéries étaient notés sur ces sources. Un rapport hydrogéologique publié en novembre 2018 (Cambridge Environmental Ltd.) indiquait que quatre puits sur dix devaient à l'origine atteindre la station collective de traitement de l'eau efficaces de fortes concentrations de solides dissous totaux (TDS), de dureté et de sodium, en plus de concentrations variables de carbone organique dissous (COD). La station de pompage de la substance fonctionnelle manque l'équipement d'eau et n'a pas la capacité suffisante pour répondre à la demande actuelle. Le dernier rapport du Système de mesure sur la condition des biens (2018-2019) recommandait une élévation majeure ou un remplacement. Un nouveau système de traitement et de distribution d'eau, à même de respecter la réglementation sur l'eau potable des Ontario pour alimenter en eau potable saine la Première Nation pendant au moins les 20 prochaines années. SAC a fourni un financement à la Première Nation de Curve Lake pour le volet 1 pour de son étude de faisabilité. L'étude vous a pour recommandée, et la collectivité a privilégié, une station de traitement d'eau en surface avec filtration sur membrane et un réseau de distribution élargi avec WMS pour les services d'incendie. SAC est prêt à financer la construction du système de traitement d'eau de Curve Lake. Lorsque il est prévu dans la demande d'approbation du projet approuvée par le chef et le conseil le 2 juin 2020 et par SAC, le 22 juin 2020, compte tenu de la croissance future des membres de la Première Nation vivant dans la réserve mentionnée dans l'étude conceptuel. SAC a reçu la version définitive de l'étude de faisabilité le 28 mai 2020. L'étape de conception du projet a été approuvée le 15 juillet 2020. La Première Nation collabore avec un gestionnaire de projet et un expert-conseil en conception pour terminer la conception. Il est à ce jour 2022.
ON	Wabaseega	Fosses conformes aux normes	- La SOSPPN de la région de l'Ontario a financé, à raison de 200 000 $, la préparation « Fosses conformes aux normes » à Wabaseega. Il s'agit d'un plan de gestion/mesure être communautaires qui vise l'accroît sur la gestion communautaire, l'éducation à la culture, l'action de un et l'établissement d'action stratégies de mieux-être appropriées pour la collectivité. Cette proposition est née au besoin de remédier aux effets psychologiques et physiques de l'AQEP LT qui n'a fait la couverture, le traumatisme constant et les défis en santé mentale de la collectivité. - La financement initial de la SOSPPN de la région de l'Ontario servira surtout à mobiliser la communauté et à renforcer les capacités en vue d'élaborer le plan de gestion/mesure être communautaires, et pour s'orienter et soutien du santé mentale pour la mobilisation de la collectivité et de régler les problèmes susceptibles de se poser à la suite de ces services. - La première mobilisation de la collectivité approuvée en février 2021 sera organisée par la Première Nation, la SOSPPN restera à la disposition de la Première Nation pour la soutenir à mesure que le mise en œuvre du projet suivra. - La SOSPPN de la région de l'Ontario est désormais à finance le mise en place et la réalisation du plan de gestion/mesure être communautaires qui est élaboré par l'ensemble d'un processus de mobilisation communautaire, en consultation avec la SOSPPN.

ANNEXE K

PROCÉDURE DE RÈGLEMENT DES DIFFÉRENDS RELATIFS À L'ENGAGEMENT (ET APPENDICES)

Voir ci-joint.

1. Régler les différends ensemble : Procédure de règlement des différends relatifs à l'engagement

1.1. Dispositions générales

1.1.1. La présente annexe s'applique aux différends qui surviennent entre le Canada et les Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies portant sur le respect par le Canada de ses engagements aux termes de l'entente et sur les plans proposés pour respecter les engagements (collectivement, les « différends »).

1.1.2. Le Canada et le groupe partagent les mêmes objectifs :

1.1.2.1. coopérer l'un avec l'autre pour veiller au respect constant de l'engagement;

1.1.2.2. tendre à un consensus et à l'harmonie;

1.1.2.3. convenir de plans pour respecter l'engagement de façon rapide et précise (« plans de réparation »);

1.1.2.4. cibler rapidement les différends et les régler de la façon la plus rapide et la moins coûteuse possible;

1.1.2.5. résoudre les différends de façon non accusatoire, collaborative et informelle;

1.1.2.6. résoudre les différends d'une façon qui reflète et incorpore les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.1.2.7. trouver le processus pour résoudre les différends dans les communautés des Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et mettre en œuvre ces processus d'une façon qui est accessible à ces communautés et qui les respecte.

1.1.3. Sauf indication contraire, le Canada et toute Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peuvent convenir de modifier une exigence procédurale contenue dans la présente annexe, qui s'applique à un différend en particulier.

1.1.4. Le Canada et le groupe souhaitent et prévoient que la plupart des différends seront résolus grâce à des discussions informelles sans qu'il soit nécessaire que la présente annexe soit utilisée.

1.1.5. Sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente, les différends qui ne sont pas résolus de façon informelle se poursuivront jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient résolus, en suivant les étapes suivantes :

1.1.5.1. Étape un : efforts formels et sans aide pour arriver à une entente sur un plan de redressement entre le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, dans des négociations collaboratives en conformité avec l'appendice K-1;

1.1.5.2. Étape deux : efforts structurés pour arriver à une entente entre le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie dans le cadre d'une médiation, en conformité avec l'appendice K-2;

1.1.5.3. Étape trois : décision définitive dans le cadre de procédures arbitrales en conformité avec l'appendice K-3.

1.1.6. Sauf indication contraire dans la présente entente, personne ne peut faire passer un différend à l'étape trois (arbitrage final) sans d'abord passer par les étapes un et deux, comme il est prévu dans la présente annexe.

1.1.7. Rien dans la présente annexe n'empêche le Canada ou une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie d'entreprendre des procédures arbitrales urgentes à tout moment :

1.1.7.1. pour traiter une perte urgente d'accès régulier à l'eau;

1.1.7.2. obtenir une mesure provisoire ou interlocutoire qui est autrement offerte en attendant la résolution du différend aux termes de la présente annexe, et l'arbitre a le pouvoir d'entendre ces audiences de façon urgente et d'autoriser cette mesure provisoire ou interlocutoire.

1.2. Étape un : négociations collaboratives

1.2.1. Si un différend n'est pas résolu par des discussions informelles et qu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie souhaite invoquer la présente annexe, cette Première Nation insuffisamment desservie remettra un avis au Canada, demandant le début de négociations collaboratives.

1.2.2. À la réception de l'avis, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participent aux négociations collaboratives.

1.2.3. Les négociations collaboratives doivent être menées selon les conditions suivantes :

1.2.3.1. de bonne foi;

1.2.3.2. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;

1.2.3.3. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend, en prenant les mesures suivantes : le Canada fournira des renseignements suffisants et expliquera suffisamment ces questions d'une façon qui est accessible aux membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.2.3.4. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes;

1.2.3.5. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;

1.2.3.6. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :

1.2.3.6.1. l'attribution des sièges;

1.2.3.6.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;

1.2.3.6.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;

1.2.3.6.4. l'échange de cadeaux;

1.2.3.6.5. la sagesse des aînés;

1.2.3.6.6. l'importance des enseignements traditionnels;

1.2.3.6.7. l'expérience de la communauté;

1.2.3.6.8. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;

1.2.3.6.9. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté.

1.2.4. Les négociations collaboratives se terminent dans les circonstances décrites à l'appendice K-1.

1.3. Étape deux : médiation

1.3.1. Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la fin des négociations collaboratives qui n'ont pas réglé le différend, une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut demander le début d'un processus simplifié en remettant un avis décrivant le différend et comprenant les plans de redressement du Canada et de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

1.3.2. Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la livraison d'un avis, le Canada et la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie impliqués dans le différend (les « parties participantes ») auront recours à la médiation pour essayer de régler le différend.

1.3.3. Les parties dressent une liste de médiateurs disponibles pour faciliter les négociations qui connaissent ce qui suit :

1.3.3.1. les conditions de vie dans les réserves des Premières Nations;

1.3.3.2. les langues, les coutumes et les traditions juridiques des Premières Nations.

1.3.4. Le médiateur et les parties participantes doivent engager le processus simplifié de la façon suivante :

1.3.4.1. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;

1.3.4.2. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend, en prenant les mesures suivantes : le Canada fournira des renseignements suffisants et expliquera suffisamment ces questions d'une façon qui est accessible aux membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.3.4.3. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes dans le cadre de ce processus;

1.3.4.4. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;

1.3.4.5. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :

1.3.4.5.1. l'attribution des sièges;

1.3.4.5.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;

1.3.4.5.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;

1.3.4.5.4. l'échange de cadeaux;

1.3.4.5.5. la sagesse des aînés;

1.3.4.5.6. l'importance des enseignements traditionnels;

1.3.4.5.7. l'expérience de la communauté;

1.3.4.5.8. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;

1.3.4.5.9. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté.

1.3.5. La Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut désigner un gardien du savoir ou un aîné à titre de représentant pour fournir au médiateur des renseignements sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques.

1.3.6. La Première Nation peut élaborer des lignes directrices énonçant ses traditions et protocoles juridiques à utiliser par le médiateur et les parties.

1.3.7. Les parties participantes peuvent demander un rapport du médiateur.

1.3.8. Une médiation se termine dans les circonstances décrites à l'appendice K-2.

1.4. Étape trois : arbitrage

1.4.1. Après la fin des négociations collaboratives à l'étape précédente ou d'un processus simplifié exigé, le différend sera réglé, à la livraison d'un avis d'arbitrage conforme à l'appendice K-3, par arbitrage en conformité avec cet appendice.

1.4.2. Voici ce qui doit accompagner l'avis d'arbitrage :

1.4.2.1. tout plan de redressement préparé par les parties participantes;

1.4.2.2. tout rapport d'évaluation neutre;

1.4.2.3. le rapport du médiateur que les parties ont accepté peut être fourni à l'arbitre.

1.4.3. Les parties dressent une liste des arbitres disponibles pour entendre l'arbitrage des différends.

1.4.4. Les arbitres indiqués sur la liste des arbitres doivent connaître ce qui suit :

1.4.4.1. les conditions de vie dans les réserves des Premières Nations;

1.4.4.2. les langues, les coutumes et les traditions juridiques des Premières Nations.

1.4.5. L'arbitre doit tenir compte des plans de redressement proposés et des efforts raisonnables du Canada à veiller à l'accès régulier comme défini dans l'engagement. Les facteurs pertinents comprennent :

1.4.5.1. les avis de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, notamment :

1.4.5.1.1. l'importance physique, sociale et culturelle de l'eau;

1.4.5.1.2. les traditions juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie se rapportant à l'utilisation et à la protection de l'eau et à son accès;

1.4.5.1.3. les effets historiques et permanents du manque d'accès à l'eau de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.4.5.1.4. les efforts précédents déployés par le Canada pour veiller à l'accès régulier à l'eau;

1.4.5.1.5. les besoins urgents en eau de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie;

1.4.5.2. les exigences fédérales ou les normes et protocoles provinciaux relatifs à l'eau;

1.4.5.3. la surveillance et l'examen du réseau d'aqueduc;

1.4.5.4. l'emplacement physique de la résidence, y compris la proximité à des réseaux d'aqueduc centralisé et la distance.

1.4.6. L'arbitre doit mener les procédures d'arbitrage de la manière suivante :

1.4.6.1. créer un espace sécuritaire et respectueux pour les membres de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie participante;

1.4.6.2. promouvoir la compréhension mutuelle et la transparence à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le différend;

1.4.6.3. permettre et promouvoir l'utilisation des langues indigènes dans le cadre de ce processus;

1.4.6.4. être situées dans la communauté de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie et être accessibles à leurs membres;

1.4.6.5. respecter les traditions et les protocoles juridiques de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, y compris :

1.4.6.5.1. l'attribution des sièges;

1.4.6.5.2. l'ordre de prise de parole;

1.4.6.5.3. les prières, discours et reconnaissances;

1.4.6.5.4. l'échange de cadeaux;

1.4.6.5.5. l'admissibilité et la pertinence de la preuve, notamment :

1.4.6.5.5.1. la sagesse des aînés;

1.4.6.5.5.2. les enseignements traditionnels;

1.4.6.5.5.3. l'expérience de la communauté;

1.4.6.5.5.4. la compréhension par la communauté des questions dans le différend;

1.4.6.5.5.5. les protocoles de prise de décision de la communauté.

1.4.7. La Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut recommander un gardien du savoir ou un aîné comme représentant, qui peut, à la discrétion de l'arbitre, siéger avec l'arbitre pour fournir des renseignements sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques.

1.4.8. La Première Nation peut élaborer des lignes directrices énonçant ses traditions et protocoles juridiques à utiliser par l'arbitre et les parties.

1.4.9. Après avoir passé en revue les plans de redressement proposé et entendu les parties participantes, l'arbitre rend une décision arbitrale de la façon suivante :

1.4.9.1. ordonner la mise en œuvre du plan de redressement de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie s'il est raisonnable dans toutes les circonstances;

1.4.9.2. ordonner la mise en œuvre du plan de redressement du Canada s'il est raisonnable et que le plan de redressement de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie n'est pas raisonnable; ou

1.4.9.3. remettre aux parties participantes des directives dans le cas où aucun des plans de redressement n'est raisonnable.

1.4.10. Une décision arbitrale, comme définie à l'appendice K-3, est définitive et lie toutes les parties participantes, qu'une partie participante ait participé ou non à l'arbitrage.

1.4.11. Les parties doivent conserver un registre public des décisions arbitrales à utiliser par le Canada, les Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et les arbitres.

Procédures de résolution des différends

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

(1) Si, dans les circonstances énoncées à l'article 9.07 de l'entente, une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie souhaite invoquer le processus de résolution des différends énoncé dans la présente annexe relativement à un différend applicable (chacun, un « différend »), la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie peut remettre au Canada un avis de négociation, et les parties doivent régler le différend en utilisant la procédure énoncée dans la présente annexe.

(2) Le terme « annexe » désigne la présente Error! Reference source not found. : Règlement des différends.

Appendice K-1 : négociations collaboratives

Appendice K-2 : médiation

Appendice K-3 : arbitrage

APPENDICE K-1
Négociations collaboratives

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

(3) Les négociations collaboratives commencent à la date de livraison d'un avis écrit par une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie demandant le début de négociations collaboratives (un « avis de négociation »).

AVIS

(4) Un avis de négociation comprendra ce qui suit :

a) le nom des parties participantes;

b) un sommaire des détails du différend;

c) une description des efforts déployés jusqu'à ce jour pour régler le différend;

d) le nom des personnes qui ont déployé ces efforts;

e) tout autre renseignement qui aidera les parties participantes.

REPRÉSENTATION

(5) Une partie participante peut participer aux négociations collaboratives avec ou sans conseiller juridique ou autre conseiller.

(6) Au début de la première réunion de négociation, chaque partie participante informera les autres parties participantes de toute limite quant au pouvoir de ses représentants.

PROCESSUS DE NÉGOCIATION

(7) Les parties participantes conviendront de leur première réunion de négociations collaboratives dans les vingt et un (21) jours suivant le début des négociations collaboratives.

(8) Avant la première réunion de négociation prévue, les parties participantes essaieront de convenir de toute question procédurale qui facilitera les négociations collaboratives.

(9) Les parties participantes essaieront réellement de régler le différend en :

a) déterminant les intérêts sous-jacents;

b) isolant les points d'entente et de désaccord;

c) explorant d'autres solutions;

d) envisageant des compromis;

e) prenant toute autre mesure qui aidera au règlement du différend.

(10) Aucune transcription ni aucun enregistrement des négociations collaboratives ne sera conservé, mais cela n'empêche pas une personne de prendre des notes des négociations.

CONFIDENTIALITÉ

(11) Pour aider au règlement d'un différend, les négociations collaboratives ne seront pas ouvertes au public, mais le présent paragraphe n'empêche pas un chef des Premières Nations insuffisamment desservies et ses représentants d'y assister.

(12) Les parties et toutes les personnes assureront la confidentialité de ce qui suit :

a) tous les renseignements oraux et écrits communiqués lors des négociations collaboratives;

b) le fait que les renseignements ont été communiqués.

(13) Les négociations collaboratives ne porteront pas atteinte aux droits des parties participantes, et aucun renseignement communiqué dans les négociations collaboratives ne peut être utilisé en dehors des négociations collaboratives.

DROIT DE SE RETIRER

(14) Une partie participante peut se retirer des négociations collaboratives à tout moment.

FIN DES NÉGOCIATIONS COLLABORATIVES

(15) Les négociations collaboratives prennent fin à la survenance de l'un des événements suivants :

a) l'expiration d'un délai de soixante (60) jours;

b) une partie participante se retire des négociations collaboratives aux termes du paragraphe (14);

c) les parties participantes conviennent par écrit de mettre fin aux négociations collaboratives; ou

d) les parties participantes signent une convention écrite pour régler le différend.

FRAIS

(16) Le Canada doit payer les frais raisonnables des négociations collaboratives menées aux termes du présent appendice en conformité avec l'article 9.08 de l'entente.

APPENDICE K-2
Médiation

GÉNÉRALITÉ

(17) Une médiation peut commencer à tout moment après la conclusion des négociations collaboratives, conformément à l'appendice K-1, lorsqu'une Première Nation insuffisamment desservie remet un avis écrit exigeant le début d'une médiation (un « avis de médiation »).

(18) La médiation commence à la date à laquelle les parties participantes directement impliquées dans le différend ont convenu par écrit de commencer la médiation conformément à l'alinéa 1.3.2 de l'annexe.

AVIS

(19) Un avis de médiation comprendra les éléments suivants :

a) le nom des parties participantes;

b) un sommaire des détails du différend;

c) une description des efforts déployés à ce jour pour régler le différend;

d) le nom des personnes qui ont déployé ces efforts;

e) tout autre renseignement qui aidera les parties participantes.

NOMINATION D'UN MÉDIATEUR

(20) Une médiation sera menée par un médiateur choisi par la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie à partir de la liste de médiateurs établie conformément à l'annexe.

(21) Sous réserve des limites convenues par les parties participantes, un médiateur peut faire appel à des services administratifs ou d'autres services de soutien raisonnables ou nécessaires.

DEMANDE DE RETRAIT

(22) Une partie participante peut donner en tout temps au médiateur et aux autres parties participantes un avis écrit, motivé ou non, demandant au médiateur de se retirer de la médiation au motif que la partie participante a des doutes légitimes quant à l'indépendance ou l'impartialité du médiateur.

(23) À la réception d'un avis écrit conformément au paragraphe (22), le médiateur se retirera immédiatement de la médiation.

FIN DE LA NOMINATION

(24) La nomination d'un médiateur prend fin si :

a) le médiateur doit se retirer conformément au paragraphe (23);

b) le médiateur se retire de sa charge pour quelque raison que ce soit;

c) les parties participantes conviennent de la cessation.

(25) Si la nomination d'un médiateur prend fin, un médiateur de remplacement sera nommé conformément au paragraphe (20).

REPRÉSENTATION

(26) Une partie participante peut assister à une médiation avec ou sans conseiller juridique ou autre conseiller.

(27) Si un médiateur est un avocat, il n'agira pas à titre de conseiller juridique d'une partie participante.

(28) Au début de la première réunion de médiation, chaque partie participante informera le médiateur et les parties participantes des limites quant au pouvoir de ses représentants.

DÉROULEMENT DE LA MÉDIATION

(29) Les parties participantes :

a) essaieront réellement de régler le conflit en :

(i) déterminant les intérêts sous-jacents;

(ii) isolant les points d'entente et de désaccord;

(iii) explorant d'autres solutions;

(iv) envisageant des compromis;

b) coopéreront pleinement avec le médiateur et prêteront rapidement attention à toutes les communications du médiateur et y répondront.

(30) Le médiateur mène une médiation fondée sur les traditions et les protocoles juridiques autochtones tels qu'ils sont énoncés à l'annexe, et peut prendre toute autre mesure qu'il juge nécessaire et appropriée pour aider les parties participantes à régler le différend de manière équitable, efficace et rentable.

(31) Dans les sept (7) jours suivant la nomination d'un médiateur, chaque partie participante peut remettre un sommaire écrit au médiateur des faits pertinents, des questions en litige et de son point de vue à cet égard, et le médiateur remettra des copies des sommaires à chaque partie participante à l'issue de la période de sept jours.

(32) Le médiateur peut mener une médiation dans le cadre de réunions conjointes ou d'un caucus privé convoqué aux endroits qu'il désigne après avoir consulté les parties participantes.

(33) Les renseignements divulgués par une partie participante à un médiateur lors d'un caucus privé ne seront pas divulgués par le médiateur à une autre partie participante sans le consentement de la partie participante divulgatrice.

(34) Aucune transcription ni aucun enregistrement d'une réunion de médiation ne sera conservé, mais il n'est pas interdit à une personne de prendre des notes des négociations.

CONFIDENTIALITÉ

(35) Pour aider au règlement d'un différend, les médiations ne seront pas ouvertes au public, mais le présent paragraphe n'empêche pas un chef de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ni ses représentants d'y assister.

(36) Les parties et toutes les personnes assureront la confidentialité de ce qui suit :

a) tous les renseignements oraux et écrits communiqués lors de la médiation;

b) le fait que ces renseignements ont été communiqués.

(37) Les parties participantes n'invoqueront ni ne produiront comme preuve dans une procédure, qu'elle porte ou non sur l'objet de la médiation, tout renseignement oral ou écrit divulgué dans le cadre de la médiation ou en découlant, notamment :

a) tout document d'autres parties participantes produit au cours de la médiation qui n'est pas autrement produit ou qui ne peut être produit dans le cadre de cette procédure;

b) les points de vue exprimés, les suggestions ou les propositions faites en vue d'un éventuel règlement du différend;

c) les admissions faites par une partie participante dans le cadre de la médiation, sauf stipulation contraire de la partie participante admettant le différend;

d) les recommandations de règlement faites par le médiateur;

e) le fait qu'une partie participante ait manifesté sa volonté de faire ou d'accepter une proposition ou une recommandation de règlement.

(38) Un médiateur, ou toute personne qu'il engage ou emploie, ne peut être contraint, dans le cadre d'une procédure, à témoigner sur des renseignements oraux ou écrits qu'il a acquis ou toute opinion qu'il a formé à la suite de la médiation, et toutes les parties participantes s'opposeront à toute tentative d'assignation de cette personne ou de présentation de ces renseignements.

(39) Un médiateur, ou toute personne qu'il engage ou emploie, est disqualifié comme consultant ou expert dans toute procédure relative au différend, y compris toute procédure impliquant des personnes qui ne sont pas des parties participantes à la médiation.

RENVOI DE QUESTIONS À D'AUTRES PROCESSUS

(40) Au cours d'une médiation, les parties participantes peuvent convenir de renvoyer des questions particulières du différend à des enquêteurs indépendants, à des groupes d'experts ou à d'autres processus pour obtenir des avis ou des conclusions qui pourraient les aider à résoudre le différend, et dans ce cas, les parties participantes préciseront :

a) le mandat du processus;

b) le délai dans lequel le processus sera terminé;

c) la façon dont les coûts du processus seront répartis entre les parties participantes.

(41) Le délai précisé pour la conclusion d'une médiation sera prolongé de quinze (15) jours suivant la réception des conclusions ou des avis rendus dans le cadre d'un processus décrit au paragraphe (40).

DROIT DE SE RETIRER

(42) Une partie participante peut se retirer d'une médiation à tout moment en donnant avis de son intention au médiateur.

(43) Avant qu'un retrait soit effectif, la partie participante qui se retire devra :

a) parler au médiateur;

b) divulguer les motifs de son retrait;

c) donner au médiateur l'occasion de discuter des conséquences d'un retrait.

FIN DE LA MÉDIATION

(44) Une médiation prend fin à la survenance de l'un des événements suivants :

a) sous réserve du paragraphe (41), l'expiration d'un délai de soixante (60) jours suivant la nomination du dernier médiateur désigné pour aider les parties à résoudre le différend, ou d'un délai plus long convenu par les parties participantes;

b) les parties participantes ont convenu par écrit de mettre fin à la médiation ou de ne pas nommer de médiateur de remplacement conformément au paragraphe (25);

c) une partie participante se retire de la médiation conformément au paragraphe (42);

d) les parties participantes signent une convention écrite pour régler le différend.

RECOMMANDATION DU MÉDIATEUR

(45) Si une médiation prend fin sans accord entre les parties participantes, celles-ci peuvent demander conjointement au médiateur de formuler une recommandation non contraignante écrite en vue d'un règlement, mais le médiateur peut refuser la demande sans motif.

(46) Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la présentation de la recommandation du médiateur conformément au paragraphe (45), les parties participantes rencontreront le médiateur pour tenter de régler le différend.

FRAIS

(47) Sous réserve du paragraphe (40), le Canada doit payer les frais raisonnables des médiations menées aux termes du présent appendice en conformité avec l'article 9.08 de l'entente.

APPENDICE K-3

(ii) un accord des parties participantes pour soumettre un différend à l'arbitrage;

e) « arbitre » s'entend d'un arbitre unique nommé conformément au présent appendice;

f) « défendeur » s'entend d'une autre partie participante que le demandeur;

(49) Une mention dans le présent appendice, autre qu'au paragraphe (96) ou (118)a), d'une demande s'applique à une demande reconventionnelle, et une mention dans le présent appendice d'une défense s'applique à une défense reconventionnelle.

(50) Malgré toute disposition contraire dans l'annexe, les parties participantes ne peuvent modifier les paragraphes (63) ou (108) du présent appendice.

COMMUNICATIONS

(51) Sauf en ce qui concerne les détails administratifs, les parties participantes ne communiqueront pas avec l'arbitre :

a) oralement, sauf en présence de toutes les autres parties participantes;

b) par écrit, sans envoyer immédiatement une copie de cette communication à toutes les autres parties participantes.

ÉTENDUE DE L'INTERVENTION JUDICIAIRE

(52) Dans les questions régies par le présent appendice :

a) aucun tribunal n'interviendra sauf dans les cas prévus au présent appendice ou à l'annexe;

b) aucune procédure arbitrale d'un arbitre, ni aucune ordonnance, décision ou décision arbitrale rendue par un arbitre ne sera portée en appel, remise en question, révisée ou limitée par une procédure prévue par une loi, sauf dans la mesure prévue par le présent appendice.

c) dans la mesure où la loi le permet, les parties participantes renoncent à tout droit d'appel, de question, de révision ou de limitation de la procédure arbitrale d'un arbitre, ou d'une ordonnance, d'une décision ou d'une décision arbitrale rendue par un arbitre.

DÉBUT DE LA PROCÉDURE ARBITRALE

(53) La procédure arbitrale à l'égard d'un différend commence au moment de la remise de l'avis d'arbitrage par le demandeur aux défendeurs (l'« avis d'arbitrage »).

AVIS D'ARBITRAGE

(54) Un avis d'arbitrage sera envoyé par écrit et contient les renseignements suivants :

a) un énoncé de l'objet ou des questions du différend;

b) l'exigence que le différend soit soumis à l'arbitrage;

c) la réparation demandée;

d) les qualifications privilégiées des arbitres.

(55) L'avis d'arbitrage peut comprendre le nom des arbitres proposés, y compris les renseignements précisés au paragraphe (58).

ARBITRE

(56) Dans chaque arbitrage, il y aura un arbitre.

NOMINATION DES ARBITRES

(57) Les parties participantes feront des efforts de bonne foi pour s'entendre sur l'arbitre parmi les arbitres figurant sur la liste. Si les parties participantes ne parviennent pas à s'entendre sur l'arbitre dans les quinze (15) jours suivant le début de l'arbitrage, elles demanderont aux tribunaux ou à l'une ou l'autre d'entre elles de nommer un arbitre sur la liste des arbitres.

(58) En nommant un arbitre, les tribunaux tiendront compte de ce qui suit :

a) toutes les qualifications exigées de l'arbitre, telles qu'elles sont énoncées dans l'avis d'arbitrage ou convenues par écrit par les parties participantes;

b) toute autre considération susceptible d'assurer la nomination d'un arbitre indépendant et impartial.

CESSATION DU MANDAT ET REMPLACEMENT DE L'ARBITRE

(59) Le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin :

a) si l'arbitre se retire de sa charge pour quelque raison que ce soit;

b) par accord des parties participantes ou conformément à un tel accord.

(60) Si le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin, un arbitre de remplacement sera nommé conformément au paragraphe (57).

MESURES PROVISOIRES ORDONNÉES PAR LE TRIBUNAL D'ARBITRAGE

(61) Sauf si les parties participantes en conviennent autrement, l'arbitre peut, à la demande d'une partie participante, ordonner à cette dernière de prendre toute mesure provisoire de protection qu'il juge nécessaire à l'égard de l'objet du différend.

ÉGALITÉ DE TRAITEMENT DES PARTIES

(62) Les parties participantes seront traitées sur un pied d'égalité et chaque partie participante aura pleinement l'occasion de présenter ses arguments.

DÉTERMINATION DES RÈGLES DE PROCÉDURE

(63) Sous réserve de l'annexe et du présent appendice, les parties participantes peuvent convenir de la procédure à suivre par l'arbitre dans le déroulement de la procédure.

(64) À défaut d'une entente conformément au paragraphe (63), l'arbitre, sous réserve de l'annexe et du présent appendice, peut mener l'arbitrage de la manière qu'il juge appropriée compte tenu des traditions et des protocoles juridiques autochtones de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(65) L'arbitre n'est pas tenu d'appliquer les règles juridiques de la preuve et peut déterminer l'admissibilité, la pertinence, le caractère substantiel et le poids de toute preuve. Conformément à l'annexe, l'arbitre tiendra dûment compte des traditions et des protocoles juridiques autochtones de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie pour déterminer la présentation et l'admission de la preuve.

(67) L'arbitre peut prolonger ou abréger une période :

a) figurant dans le présent appendice, sauf la période précisée au paragraphe (109);

b) établie par l'arbitre.

RÉUNION PRÉALABLE À L'AUDIENCE

(68) Dans les dix (10) jours suivant la nomination de l'arbitre, celui-ci convoquera une réunion préalable à l'audience des parties participantes afin de parvenir à un accord et de rendre les ordonnances nécessaires sur les questions suivantes :

a) toute question de procédure découlant du présent appendice;

b) la procédure et les protocoles communautaires à suivre dans le cadre de l'arbitrage;

c) tout aîné ou gardien du savoir qui siégera avec l'arbitre et le conseillera sur le protocole communautaire et le droit autochtone;

d) les délais de prise de mesures en arbitrage;

e) le calendrier des audiences ou des réunions, le cas échéant;

f) les demandes préliminaires ou les objections;

g) toute autre question qui aidera l'arbitrage à procéder de façon efficace et expéditive.

(69) L'arbitre préparera et distribuera rapidement aux parties participantes un registre écrit de toutes les affaires traitées, ainsi que des décisions et des ordonnances prises, à la réunion préparatoire à l'audience.

(70) La réunion préalable à l'audience peut se dérouler par téléconférence ou vidéoconférence.

LIEU DE L'ARBITRAGE

(71) Dans la mesure du possible, l'arbitrage doit avoir lieu dans la réserve de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie ou à proximité de celle-ci.

(72) Un arbitre peut

a) avec le consentement des parties participantes, se réunir à tout autre endroit qu'il estime indiqué pour entendre des témoins, des experts ou les parties participantes;

b) se rendre à n'importe quel endroit pour examiner des documents, des effets ou d'autres biens personnels, ou pour voir des endroits physiques.

LANGUE

(73) Dans la mesure du possible, l'arbitrage favorisera l'utilisation de la langue autochtone de la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie.

(74) Le Canada assume les frais de traduction des présentations orales et des procédures, ainsi que des documents que l'arbitre peut ordonner dans les circonstances d'un différend particulier.

DÉCLARATIONS ET DÉFENSE

(75) Dans les vingt et un (21) jours suivant la nomination de l'arbitre, la Première Nation insuffisamment desservie, à titre de demandeur, remettra son plan de redressement et une déclaration écrite au Canada, le défendeur, énonçant les faits à l'appui de sa revendication ou de sa position, les points en litige et le redressement ou la réparation demandés.

(76) Dans les quinze (15) jours suivant la réception de la déclaration du demandeur, le défendeur remettra à toutes les parties participantes une déclaration écrite énonçant sa défense ou sa position à l'égard de ces détails.

(77) Chaque partie participante joindra à sa déclaration une liste de documents :

a) sur lesquels la partie participante a l'intention de s'appuyer;

b) qui décrit chaque document par nature, date, auteur, destinataire et sujet.

(78) Les parties participantes peuvent modifier ou compléter leurs déclarations, y compris la liste des documents, à moins que l'arbitre ne juge inapproprié de permettre la modification, le complément ou les actes de procédure supplémentaires en ce qui concerne :

a) le retard à le faire;

b) tout préjudice subi par les autres parties participantes.

(79) Les parties participantes remettront des copies de tous les documents modifiés, complétés ou nouveaux livrés conformément au paragraphe (78) à toutes les parties participantes.

DIVULGATION

(80) L'arbitre peut ordonner à une partie participante de produire, dans un délai précis, tout document :

a) qui n'a pas été inscrit conformément au paragraphe (77);

b) dont la partie participante en a la garde ou le contrôle;

c) que l'arbitre juge pertinent.

(81) Chaque partie participante donnera aux autres parties participantes l'accès nécessaire à des moments raisonnables pour inspecter et prendre des copies de tous les documents que la partie participante a énumérés conformément au paragraphe (77), ou que l'arbitre a ordonné de produire conformément au paragraphe (80).

(82) Les parties participantes prépareront et enverront à l'arbitre un exposé conjoint des faits dans le délai précisé par l'arbitre, à défaut de quoi les parties établiront leurs divergences et demanderont à l'arbitre de trancher les faits.

(83) Au plus tard vingt et un (21) jours avant le début d'une audience, chaque partie participante remettra à l'autre partie participante :

a) le nom et l'adresse de tout témoin et un résumé ou une déclaration écrite de son témoignage;

b) dans le cas d'un témoin expert, une déclaration écrite ou un rapport préparé par le témoin expert.

(84) Au plus tard quinze (15) jours avant le début d'une audience, chaque partie participante remettra à l'autre partie participante et à l'arbitre un ensemble de tous les documents à présenter à l'audience.

AUDIENCES ET PROCÉDURE ÉCRITES

(85) À moins que les parties participantes n'aient convenu qu'aucune audience ne sera tenue, l'arbitre convoquera une audience si une partie participante le demande.

(86) L'arbitre donnera aux parties participantes un préavis suffisant de toute audience et de toute réunion de l'arbitre aux fins de l'inspection de documents, de marchandises ou d'autres biens ou de l'examen de tout emplacement physique.

(87) Tous les énoncés, documents ou autres renseignements fournis à l'arbitre ou les demandes présentées à l'arbitre par une partie participante seront communiqués aux autres parties participantes, et les rapports d'expert, les documents de preuve ou la jurisprudence sur lesquels l'arbitre peut s'appuyer pour rendre sa décision seront communiqués aux parties participantes.

(88) À moins que l'arbitre n'en décide autrement, toutes les audiences et réunions des procédures d'arbitrage autres que les réunions de l'arbitre sont ouvertes au public.

(89) L'arbitre organisera des audiences qui se tiendront des jours consécutifs jusqu'à ce qu'elles soient terminées.

(90) Tous les témoignages seront recueillis en présence de l'arbitre et de toutes les parties participantes, à moins qu'une partie participante ne soit absente par défaut ou ait renoncé au droit d'être présente.

(91) L'arbitre peut ordonner à toute personne d'être interrogée par l'arbitre sous serment ou sur affirmation solennelle relativement au différend et de produire devant l'arbitre tous les documents pertinents dont la personne a la garde ou le contrôle.

(92) Les ensembles de documents remis conformément au paragraphe (84) seront réputés avoir été introduits en preuve à l'audience sans autre preuve et sans être lus à l'audience, mais une partie participante peut contester l'admissibilité de tout document ainsi produit.

(93) Si l'arbitre estime qu'il est juste et raisonnable de le faire, il peut permettre qu'un document qui n'a pas été précédemment énuméré conformément au paragraphe (77), ou produit conformément au paragraphe (80) ou (84), soit produit à l'audience.

(94) Si l'arbitre permet que le témoignage d'un témoin soit présenté sous forme de déclaration écrite, l'autre partie participante peut exiger que ce témoin soit disponible pour le contre-interrogatoire à l'audience.

(95) L'arbitre peut ordonner à un témoin de comparaître et de témoigner et, dans ce cas, les parties participantes peuvent contre-interroger ce témoin et présenter une contre-preuve.

DÉFAUT D'UNE PARTIE

(96) Si, sans explication, le demandeur omet de communiquer sa déclaration conformément au paragraphe (75), l'arbitre peut mettre fin à la procédure. Si, sans explication, un défendeur omet de communiquer sa défense conformément au paragraphe (76), l'arbitre poursuivra la procédure sans traiter ce manquement en lui-même comme une admission des allégations du demandeur.

(97) Si, sans justification suffisante, une partie participante ne se présente pas à l'audience ou ne produit pas de preuve documentaire, l'arbitre peut poursuivre les procédures et rendre la décision arbitrale en fonction de la preuve dont il dispose.

(98) Avant de mettre fin à la procédure visée au paragraphe (96), l'arbitre donnera à toutes les parties un avis écrit leur donnant l'occasion de fournir une explication et de déposer une déclaration relativement au différend dans un délai précis.

(99) Il est entendu que la cessation aux termes du paragraphe (96) ne porte pas atteinte à la capacité du demandeur d'entamer une nouvelle procédure d'arbitrage, sans retourner d'abord aux processus des étapes 1 et 2.

EXPERT NOMMÉ PAR LE TRIBUNAL D'ARBITRAGE

(100) Après avoir consulté les parties participantes, l'arbitre peut :

a) nommer un ou plusieurs experts pour lui faire rapport sur des questions précises à déterminer par l'arbitre;

b) à cette fin, exiger d'une partie participante qu'elle fournisse à l'expert tout renseignement pertinent ou qu'elle produise les documents, effets ou autres biens personnels ou bien-fonds pertinents ou y donne accès aux fins d'inspection ou de consultation.

(101) L'arbitre remettra une copie du rapport de l'expert aux parties participantes qui auront l'occasion d'y répondre.

(102) Si une partie participante le demande, ou si l'arbitre le juge nécessaire, l'expert participera, après avoir remis un rapport écrit ou oral, à une audience au cours de laquelle les parties participantes auront la possibilité de contre-interroger l'expert et de présenter une contre-preuve.

(103) À la demande d'une partie participante, l'expert devra :

a) mettre à la disposition de cette partie participante, aux fins d'examen, tous les documents, effets ou autres biens en sa possession et les remettre à l'expert pour qu'il prépare un rapport;

b) fournir à cette partie participante une liste de tous les documents, effets ou autres biens personnels ou bien-fonds que l'expert n'a pas en sa possession, mais qui lui ont été fournis ou auxquels il a eu accès, ainsi qu'une description de l'emplacement de ces documents, effets, biens personnels ou bien-fonds.

LOIS APPLICABLES AU FOND DU DIFFÉREND

(104) Un arbitre tranchera le différend conformément au droit, y compris le droit autochtone, et à l'annexe.

(105) Si les parties participantes le lui ont expressément autorisé, un arbitre peut trancher le différend en se fondant sur des considérations d'équité.

(106) Dans tous les cas, un arbitre prendra ses décisions conformément à l'esprit et à l'intention de l'entente.

RÈGLEMENT

(107) Si, au cours d'une procédure d'arbitrage, les parties participantes règlent le différend, l'arbitre mettra fin à la procédure et, à la demande de ces parties participantes, consignera le règlement sous forme de décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues.

(108) Une décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues :

a) sera rendue conformément aux paragraphes (110) à (112);

b) indiquera qu'il s'agit d'une décision arbitrale;

c) a le même statut et le même effet que toute autre décision arbitrale sur le fond du différend.

FORME ET CONTENU DE LA DÉCISION ARBITRALE

(109) L'arbitre rendra sa décision arbitrale définitive le plus tôt possible et, en tout état de cause, au plus tard soixante (60) jours après que :

a) les audiences sont terminées;

b) les arguments finaux ont été présentés, la date la plus tardive étant retenue.

(110) Une décision arbitrale sera rendue par écrit et signée par l'arbitre.

(111) Une décision arbitrale énoncera les motifs sur lesquels elle est fondée, à moins que :

a) les parties participantes aient convenu qu'aucun motif ne doit être donné;

b) la décision est une décision arbitrale selon les modalités convenues prévues aux paragraphes (107) et (108).

(112) L'arbitre remettra une copie signée de la décision arbitrale à toutes les parties participantes et au comité mixte.

(113) À tout moment au cours de la procédure d'arbitrage, un arbitre peut rendre une décision arbitrale provisoire sur toute question à l'égard de laquelle il peut rendre une décision arbitrale définitive.

(114) Un arbitre peut accorder des intérêts.

(115) À moins qu'un arbitre n'en décide autrement, le Canada doit payer les frais d'un arbitrage aux termes du présent appendice, conformément à l'article 9.08 de la convention.

FIN DE LA PROCÉDURE

(116) L'arbitre mettra fin aux audiences si :

a) les parties participantes indiquent qu'elles n'ont pas d'autres éléments de preuve ou observations à présenter;

b) l'arbitre estime qu'il est inutile ou inapproprié de tenir d'autres audiences.

(117) Une décision arbitrale définitive ou une ordonnance de l'arbitre conformément au paragraphe (118) met fin à la procédure d'arbitrage.

(118) Un arbitre émettra une ordonnance de résiliation de la procédure arbitrale si :

a) le demandeur retire sa demande, à moins que le défendeur ne s'oppose à l'ordonnance et que l'arbitre ne reconnaisse un intérêt légitime à obtenir un règlement final du différend;

b) les parties participantes conviennent de mettre fin à la procédure;

c) l'arbitre conclut que la poursuite de la procédure est devenue inutile ou impossible pour toute autre raison.

(119) Sous réserve des paragraphes (120) à (125), le mandat d'un arbitre prend fin avec la fin de la procédure arbitrale.

CORRECTION ET INTERPRÉTATION DE LA DÉCISION; DÉCISION SUPPLÉMENTAIRE

(120) Dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision arbitrale :

a) une partie participante peut demander à l'arbitre de corriger dans la décision arbitrale toute erreur de calcul, erreur d'écriture ou erreur typographique ou toute autre erreur de nature similaire;

b) une partie participante peut, si toutes les parties participantes y consentent, demander à l'arbitre de donner une interprétation d'un point précis ou d'une partie de la décision arbitrale.

(121) Si un arbitre estime qu'une demande faite conformément au paragraphe (120) est justifiée, il apportera la correction ou donnera l'interprétation dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception de la demande et l'interprétation fera partie de la décision arbitrale.

(122) L'arbitre peut, de sa propre initiative, corriger toute erreur du type mentionné à l'alinéa (120)a) dans les trente (30) jours suivant la date de la décision arbitrale.

(123) Une partie participante peut demander, dans les trente (30) jours suivant la réception d'une décision arbitrale, que l'arbitre rende une autre décision arbitrale concernant les demandes présentées dans le cadre de la procédure arbitrale, mais omises de la décision arbitrale.

(124) Si l'arbitre estime qu'une demande présentée conformément au paragraphe (123) est justifiée, il rendra une décision arbitrale supplémentaire dans les trente (30) jours.

(125) Les paragraphes (110) à (112), et les paragraphes (114) à (115), s'appliquent à la correction ou à l'interprétation d'une décision arbitrale rendue conformément au paragraphe (121) ou (122) à une décision arbitrale supplémentaire rendue conformément au paragraphe (124).

AUCUN APPEL

(126) La décision arbitrale est définitive et exécutoire pour les parties participantes et ne peut faire l'objet d'un appel ou d'une révision.

RECONNAISSANCE ET APPLICATION

(127) Une décision arbitrale sera reconnue comme étant exécutoire et, sur demande présentée à la Cour, sera reconnue et appliquée.

(128) Sauf ordonnance contraire de la cour, la partie participante qui invoque une décision arbitrale ou qui en demande l'exécution fournira la décision arbitrale originale dûment authentifiée ou une copie certifiée conforme de celle-ci.

ANNEXE L

PLAN DE NOTIFICATION

I. APERÇU

Objectif

Fournir des renseignements clairs, concis et dans un langage simple au plus grand nombre possible de membres du groupe et des membres de leur famille concernant :

a) l'entente de règlement et leurs droits de recevoir une indemnité en vertu de celle-ci; et

b) la procédure de règlement des réclamations et l'échéancier qui s'y rapporte.

Membres du groupe

Le groupe se compose des membres suivants :

- les personnes membres du groupe, soit environ 142 300 personnes qui sont membres du groupe et qui ne se sont pas exclues des actions;
- les Premières Nations membres du groupe, soit les Premières Nations qui sont membres du groupe et qui donnent à l'administrateur un avis d'acceptation. Il y a jusqu'à 258 Premières Nations touchées qui pourraient remettre des avis d'acceptation et être considérées comme des Premières Nations membres du groupe.

Facteurs connus

Les facteurs connus pris en considération dans l'élaboration du présent plan de notification sont les suivants :

1. Les réserves visées par les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme pendant la période visée comprennent les réserves dans les régions éloignées, posant d'autres défis en matière de communication (par exemple, retards ou restrictions dans la livraison de la documentation relative aux avis par la poste).
2. Les niveaux de scolarité des membres du groupe varient considérablement, allant des membres qui n'ont pas terminé leurs études secondaires aux membres qui ont suivi des études universitaires de cycle supérieur.
3. Les membres du groupe parlent diverses langues, dont l'anglais, le français et un certain nombre de langues autochtones.
4. Les Premières Nations touchées sont géographiquement dispersées dans toutes les provinces du Canada, en particulier en Ontario, en Colombie-Britannique et au Manitoba.

5. Les données du recensement de 2016 indiquent qu'environ deux tiers des membres des Premières Nations ne résident pas dans des réserves[1]. Il est possible que les membres du groupe ayant résidé dans des réserves touchées pendant la période visée ne résident plus dans la réserve à laquelle leur réclamation est associée ou dans la même province ou le même territoire. Il est possible que certains membres résident à l'extérieur du Canada.

Stratégies

1. CA2 donnera l'« avis de règlement » au moyen du même plan de notification qu'il a utilisé pour donner l'avis d'autorisation, comme il est plus amplement précisé ci-dessous. L'avis de règlement sera essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE M, avec les modifications raisonnables que peut suggérer CA2, et approuvée par les tribunaux. CA2 diffusera l'avis de règlement d'une manière essentiellement semblable à celle qu'elle a utilisée pour la diffusion de l'avis d'autorisation des actions.

2. L'administrateur donnera l'« avis d'approbation du règlement » essentiellement selon le modèle reproduit en ANNEXE N, avec les modifications raisonnables qu'il peut suggérer, et approuvée par les tribunaux. L'avis d'approbation du règlement avisera les personnes membres du groupe de la date limite pour les réclamations et les Premières Nations membres du groupe de la nécessité d'accepter l'entente de règlement. L'avis d'approbation du règlement sera diffusé selon les méthodes suivantes, comme il est plus amplement précisé ci-dessous :

    a) Publipostage direct des avis aux Premières Nations membres du groupe;

    b) Diffusion d'un communiqué de presse national;

    c) Tenue de réunions communautaires en personne et virtuelles pour les Premières Nations membres du groupe intéressées;

    d) Création d'un site Web d'information sur lequel il sera possible de consulter l'entente de règlement, le formulaire de réclamation, la FAQ et d'autres sources de renseignements et de télécharger des copies de ces documents, et l'hyperlien de ce site Web devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis;

    e) Mise en place d'une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais à l'intention des membres du groupe, des membres de leurs familles, de leurs tuteurs ou d'autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe pour obtenir des renseignements supplémentaires et de l'assistance à l'égard des réclamations, et le numéro de cette ligne d'assistance devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis;

Ottawa : date de diffusion le 25 octobre 2017.

f) Publication dans les journaux et les publications des Premières Nations partout au pays;

g) Placement de messages publicitaires télévisuels de 30 et de 60 secondes sur APTN;

h) Placement de messages publicitaires radiophoniques de 30 et de 60 secondes sur les principales stations de radio des Premières Nations dans toutes les régions concernées;

i) Placement de messages publicitaires sur les médias sociaux et en ligne pour diffusion sur les plateformes populaires, dont Facebook, Twitter et YouTube;

j) Traduction des avis en français, et déploiement d'efforts raisonnables pour traduire les avis dans les langues autochtones, à la demande des membres du groupe; et

k) Mise en place d'une ligne d'assistance sans frais pour aider les membres à soumettre leurs réclamations.

3. L'administrateur donnera un « avis de rappel » huit mois après la première publication de l'avis d'approbation du règlement, au moyen du même plan de notification. L'avis de rappel sera en la forme convenue raisonnablement par les parties, sur recommandation de l'administrateur, et approuvée par les tribunaux.

4. L'administrateur donnera un « avis de réclamation tardive » si les réclamations tardives sont autorisées. La diffusion de l'avis de réclamation tardive, le cas échéant, se fera selon le même plan de notification que celui de l'avis d'approbation du règlement et de l'avis de rappel, avec les modifications que l'administrateur juge nécessaires et que les tribunaux approuvent pour cibler les Premières Nations dont la participation est en deçà des attentes.

5. Le Canada assumera les frais de notification des avis conformément au présent plan de notification.

II. PLAN DE NOTIFICATION DU RÈGLEMENT

Sites Web

Les avocats du groupe, le défendeur et CA2 publieront sur leur site Web respectif l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M, ainsi que la traduction en français de ces documents, comme convenu par les parties;

Message publicitaire dans les médias imprimés

CA2 publiera l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M dans les publications suivantes, en format de 1/4 de page, dans l'édition du week-end de chaque journal : Globe and Mail; National Post; Winnipeg Free Press; Vancouver Sun; Edmonton Sun; Calgary Herald; Saskatoon Star Phoenix; Regina Leader Post; Thunder Bay Chronicle-Journal; Toronto Star; Ottawa Citizen; Montreal Gazette; La Presse – Montréal (édition numérique); Halifax Chronicle-Herald; Moncton Times and Transcript; First Nations Drum.

Publipostage direct des avis

CA2 transmet l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M à l'Assemblée des Premières Nations et aux chefs de chaque Première Nation touchée dont l'identité est visée par, sauf pour les personnes exclues;

CA2 transmet l'avis simplifié prévu à l'ANNEXE M et l'avis détaillé prévu à l'ANNEXE M au bureau du conseil de bande ou au bureau analogue à celui-ci de chaque Première Nation touchée, sauf pour les personnes exclues, avec une demande d'affichage dans un endroit bien visible.

Ligne d'assistance sans frais

CA2 établira une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais pour offrir de l'aide aux membres du groupe, aux membres de leur famille, à leurs tuteurs ou à d'autres personnes qui font des demandes de renseignements pour leur propre compte ou pour le compte de membres du groupe.

III. PLAN DE NOTIFICATION DE L'APPROBATION DU RÈGLEMENT

Publipostage direct des avis

Les avis doivent être imprimés et envoyés par la poste ordinaire, à chacun des endroits ou des personnes qui sont indiqués ci-dessous :

- bureau du conseil de bande ou bureau analogue à celui-ci de toutes les Premières Nations touchées, et joindre à l'avis une demande d'affichage des avis dans des endroits bien visibles ainsi qu'un nombre suffisant de copies de la documentation relative aux avis aux fins de distribution aux résidents de la collectivité;
- chef de chaque Première Nation touchée;
- Centres d'amitié associés aux Premières Nations touchées;
- conseil tribal ou conseil analogue de chaque Première Nation touchée;
- bureaux principaux et bureaux régionaux de l'Assemblée des Premières Nations;
- dans la mesure où leurs adresses sont connues, toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui sont identifiées à l'administrateur par une Première Nation dans une confirmation du conseil de bande ou autrement; et
- quiconque fait la demande d'une copie des avis d'approbation du règlement.

Lorsque les avis sont envoyés par la poste à un centre communautaire, veuillez joindre une demande d'affichage des avis dans un endroit bien visible.

Message publicitaire dans les médias imprimés

Les avis sous forme simplifiée et approuvée par le tribunal doivent être imprimés et diffuser à deux reprises, à 60 jours d'intervalle, le meilleur jour de diffusion, en format de 1/4 page et à une partie à visibilité maximale et attirant le plus grand nombre de lecteurs, dans chacune des publications indiquées ci-dessous, ou dans des publications de substitution que l'administrateur juge raisonnable :

Sites Web

- L'administrateur crée un site Web d'information donnant accès à des exemplaires de l'entente de règlement, du formulaire de réclamation, des questions fréquentes et d'autres ressources d'information. L'hyperlien de ce site Web devra être indiqué dans la documentation et les messages publicitaires se rapportant aux avis.

- La documentation relative aux avis devra être publiée sur les sites Web des avocats du groupe, du Canada et de l'administrateur.

Messages publicitaires sur les médias sociaux

- Les messages publicitaires en ligne ciblés, dont de courtes vidéos, devront être diffusés sur les plateformes de médias sociaux populaires, dont Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Google Ads, TikTok, YouTube.

- Les tirages devront être ciblés géographiquement selon les membres du groupe et les personnes qui recherchent des renseignements sur les recours collectifs portant sur la qualité de l'eau potable.

- Au moins 3,5 millions tirages seront attribués selon la recommandation de l'administrateur.

Réunions communautaires

- L'administrateur devra tenir des réunions communautaires en personne et des réunions en ligne, de façon indépendante, en collaboration avec les Premières Nations membres du groupe.

- L'administrateur devra rencontrer une Première Nation membre du groupe qui en fait la demande.

- Les réunions viseront à fournir des renseignements sur l'entente de règlement et la procédure de règlement des réclamations et du temps sera accordé aux participants pour la FAQ.

- Des copies papier de la documentation relative aux avis et des formulaires de réclamations devront être mises à la disposition des participants aux réunions communautaires tenues en personne.

Communiqué de presse

- L'administrateur publiera un communiqué de presse national de Canadian Newswire (CNW) en vue d'inciter des organes de presse partout au Canada à annoncer l'approbation du règlement, si c'est le cas, et d'attirer une couverture médiatique non rémunérée.

- Le communiqué de presse comprendra le numéro sans frais et l'hyperlien du site Web.

Ligne d'assistance sans frais

L'administrateur devra établir une ligne d'assistance nationale sans frais visant à aider les membres du groupe, les membres de leur famille, leurs représentants et toute autre personne formulant des demandes de renseignements au sujet de l'entente ou requérant de l'aide pour soumettre leurs réclamations.

Avis de règlement simplifié

Visé par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans une réserve?

Vous pourriez être concerné par un règlement proposé. Veuillez lire attentivement le présent avis.
Pour lire cet avis en anglais : [URL du site Web de l'entente]

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé le présent avis. Il ne s'agit pas d'une sollicitation d'un avocat.

Les Premières Nations et leurs membres visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable depuis le 20 novembre 1995 poursuivent en justice le Canada pour obtenir une indemnisation dans le cadre de deux recours collectifs. Le représentant des Premières Nations et de leurs membres et le Canada sont arrivés à un règlement proposé.

Sous réserve de son approbation par les tribunaux, le règlement proposé indemniserait les Premières Nations et leurs membres admissibles. Les personnes admissibles peuvent recevoir un paiement pour les années où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Il est prévu que le montant annuel variera entre environ 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ pour les années admissibles. Des montants supplémentaires peuvent être offerts aux personnes admissibles qui ont subi certains préjudices déterminés en raison de la consommation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme, ou en raison d'un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou de l'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Chaque Première Nation admissible qui accepte le règlement recevra 500 000 $ plus la moitié du montant payé aux personnes admissibles qui résidaient habituellement dans la réserve de cette Première Nation alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. De plus, le Canada s'engagera à déployer des efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes admissibles aient accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, et il consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars à l'infrastructure de l'eau et des eaux usées dans les réserves.

Si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement proposé, les personnes et les Premières Nations renonceront à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour manquement à son obligation de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans leurs réserves. Sous réserve de l'approbation des tribunaux, les avocats seront payés par le Canada sur des fonds négociés séparément et non sur l'argent de l'indemnisation offerte.

Les tribunaux doivent d'abord approuver le règlement proposé avant que des fonds ou tout autre avantage ne soient offerts.

Si vous avez droit à une indemnité, vos droits légaux seront touchés même si vous ne faites rien.

Vous avez trois options :

1. Vous y opposer par écrit : vous pouvez écrire aux tribunaux si vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats et ne voulez pas qu'il soit approuvé. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.

2. Vous y opposer en personne : vous pouvez demander à comparaître devant les tribunaux pour expliquer pourquoi vous n'aimez pas le règlement proposé ou les honoraires des avocats le 7 décembre 2021, en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou par vidéoconférence. Vous pouvez contacter la Cour fédérale pour obtenir les détails sur la vidéoconférence. Si le règlement n'est pas approuvé, personne n'en bénéficiera.

3. Ne rien faire : vous renoncer à tout droit que vous avez de contester le règlement proposé.

Si vous souhaitez vous opposer au règlement proposé ou comparaître à l'audition, vous devez agir au plus tard le 23 novembre 2021.

Si vous êtes un résident des Premières Nations suivantes : Nation des Oneidas de la Thames; Bande de Deer Lake; Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing; North Caribou Lake; et Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, vous pourriez vous exclure de ces recours collectifs en écrivant à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date 45 jours après la première publication de l'avis].

Pour en apprendre davantage sur vos options et pour déterminer si vous ou votre Première Nation êtes inclus, veuillez visiter le [•URL du site Web de l'entente] ou composer le [• numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

Renseignements supplémentaires pour les Premières Nations :

Les Premières Nations admissibles ne recevront une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date]. Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date] ne sont admissibles à aucun des avantages prévus par l'entente de règlement.

Pour obtenir de plus amples renseignements sur la façon dont une Première Nation peut accepter l'entente de règlement, veuillez visiter le [•URL du site Web de l'entente] ou composer le [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

INFORMATION DE BASE

POURQUOI SUIS-JE AVISÉ DE CE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé le présent avis pour vous informer du règlement proposé et de vos options avant que les tribunaux ne décident d'approuver ou non le règlement. Un avis est donné aux Premières Nations et à leurs membres qui pourraient être concernés par le règlement proposé.

QU'EST-CE QU'UN RECOURS COLLECTIF?

Dans un recours collectif, une ou plusieurs personnes appelées « demandeurs » ou « représentants demandeurs » introduisent une action pour le compte de personnes qui ont des réclamations semblables. Toutes ces personnes sont appelées collectivement le « groupe » ou les « membres du groupe ». Les tribunaux statuent sur les questions pour l'ensemble des intéressés.

Les représentants demandeurs devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba sont la Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence.

Les représentants demandeurs devant la Cour fédérale du Canada sont i) la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung et ii) la Première Nation de Neskantaga, le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias.

Le Canada est le défendeur dans les deux recours collectifs. Le Canada est représenté par le procureur général du Canada.

QUE SONT LES AVIS CONCERNANT LA QUALITÉ DE L'EAU POTABLE?

Les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable sont émis pour informer les gens de ne pas boire l'eau qui pourrait être insalubre. Les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable comprennent des avis d'ébullition de l'eau, des avis de ne pas boire et des avis de non-utilisation.

EN QUOI CONSISTENT LES RECOURS COLLECTIFS?

Les représentants allèguent que le Canada n'a pas remédié au problème des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans les réserves des Premières Nations dans l'ensemble du Canada. La principale allégation est que le Canada a manqué à ses obligations envers les Premières Nations et leurs membres en ne veillant pas à ce que les collectivités des réserves aient accès à de l'eau salubre.

POURQUOI Y A-T-IL UN RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les représentants demandeurs et le Canada ont convenu d'un règlement proposé. En convenant d'un règlement proposé, les parties évitent les frais et les incertitudes d'un procès et les retards dans l'obtention du jugement, et les membres du groupe reçoivent les avantages décrits dans le présent avis (sous réserve de l'approbation du règlement proposé par les tribunaux).

Les représentants demandeurs et leurs avocats estiment que le règlement proposé est dans l'intérêt véritable de tous les membres du groupe.

QUI EST INCLUS DANS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

QUELLES PERSONNES SONT INCLUSES DANS LE GROUPE?

Sont incluses dans le groupe les personnes :

1. qui étaient vivantes le 20 novembre 2017;

2. qui sont membres d'une bande, au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, ou des peuples autochtones du Canada, sauf les Inuits et les Métis du Canada, qui sont parties à un traité moderne (une « Première Nation »), dont les terres sont visées par cette loi, par la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations ou par un traité moderne (les « terres des Premières Nations »); et

3. qui pendant au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021, résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse notamment d'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation) qui a duré au moins un an entre le

20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021 (les « Premières Nations touchées ») alors qu'un tel avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'au moins un an était en vigueur.

Les personnes qui sont incluses dans le groupe ont droit à une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas l'entente.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PERSONNES QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

L'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou au numéro de téléphone [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

QUELLES SONT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS INCLUSES DANS LE GROUPE?

Les Premières Nations touchées ne sont admissibles à une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement proposé. Toute Première Nation touchée qui souhaite participer au règlement doit approuver le règlement par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [•adresse postale de l'administrateur].

Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement proposé au plus tard le [•date for Acceptance Deadline] pour pouvoir y participer. L'administrateur du règlement peut vous fournir le modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande qui est nécessaire pour accepter le règlement proposé.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

L'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou au numéro de téléphone [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

QUELS SONT LES AVANTAGES DU RÈGLEMENT?

QUELLE INDEMNITÉ SERA VERSÉE EN VERTU DU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ SI LES TRIBUNAUX L'APPROUVENT?

Les personnes peuvent recevoir un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Le montant annuel devrait varier de 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription : les personnes qui ont atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013 ne sont admissibles à une indemnité qu'à compter du 20 novembre 2013, à moins qu'elles n'aient été incapables en raison de leur état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de leur réclamation avant le 20 novembre 2013.

Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement proposé recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

Pour obtenir de plus amples détails, veuillez consulter le règlement proposé ici : [•URL].

QUELS SONT LES AUTRES AVANTAGES POUR LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ET LEURS MEMBRES DANS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

1. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui visent le groupe.

2. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les membres du groupe qui vivent dans les réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars d'ici le 31 mars 2030 à la mise en œuvre de cet engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves.

3. Le Canada a convenu d'un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends afin de déterminer quelles autres mesures sont raisonnablement nécessaires pour aider les personnes à avoir un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers.

4. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour abroger la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 d'ici le 31 mars 2022 et pour la remplacer par une loi qui contribue à l'amélioration de l'eau potable dans les réserves des Premières Nations.

5. Le Canada a convenu de verser 20 millions de dollars pour la création d'un comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre.

6. Le Canada a convenu de mettre 9 millions de dollars à la disposition des Premières Nations pour le financement d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance et l'établissement d'une réglementation.

Pour obtenir de plus amples détails, veuillez consulter le règlement proposé ici : [•URL].

QUAND LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Une indemnité ne sera payée que si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement proposé. L'indemnité de base des Premières Nations sera payée dans les 90 jours suivant la date de l'ordonnance d'approbation du règlement en sa forme définitive. Le paiement des autres indemnités aux personnes et aux Premières Nations ne commencera qu'un an après la date de l'ordonnance d'approbation du règlement en sa forme définitive.

COMMENT LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes et les Premières Nations admissibles à une indemnité doivent soumettre leurs réclamations à l'administrateur du règlement pour recevoir un paiement. Aucun formulaire de réclamation ne sera disponible avant que les tribunaux n'approuvent le règlement proposé.

COMMENT LES AVOCATS SERONT-ILS PAYÉS?

Les avocats qui représentent les demandeurs demanderont aux tribunaux d'accepter que le Canada puisse les payer sur des fonds négociés séparément qui ne seront pas déduits des sommes devant servir à indemniser des personnes ou des Premières Nations. Le montant de ces fonds s'élève à 53 millions de dollars au titre des honoraires et débours, taxes comprises, en sus des 5 millions de dollars au titre des services juridiques continus.

Les avocats ne seront pas payés tant que les tribunaux n'auront pas statué sur le caractère juste et raisonnable des honoraires réclamés. Les tribunaux décideront du montant que les avocats devraient recevoir.

QU'EST-CE QUE J'ABANDONNE DANS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Si les tribunaux approuvent le règlement, vous renoncerez à votre droit de poursuivre le Canada pour les réclamations réglées par le règlement proposé. Cela signifie que vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada en justice pour des préjudices subis avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison du manquement du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans votre réserve.

Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement proposé ne sont pas (contrairement à leurs membres) liées par celui-ci.

PUIS-JE M'EXCLURE DU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les personnes ne peuvent pas s'exclure du règlement sans l'approbation des tribunaux. Les avocats du groupe n'aideront aucune personne à s'exclure. Les personnes qui souhaitent s'exclure devraient consulter un autre avocat.

Toutefois, si vous êtes un résident des Premières Nations suivantes : Nation des Oneidas de la Thames; Bande de Deer Lake; Première Nation de Mitaanjigamiing; North Caribou Lake; et Nation crie de Ministikwan Lake, vous pourriez vous exclure de ces recours collectifs en écrivant à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date 45 jours après la première publication de l'avis]..

Les Premières Nations ne sont pas obligées d'accepter le règlement proposé. Si une Première Nation n'accepte pas le règlement proposé, le règlement proposé ne touchera pas cette Première Nation.

QUI ME REPRÉSENTE?

QUI SONT LES AVOCATS QUI ME REPRÉSENTENT?

Les représentants demandeurs et le groupe sont représentés par McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP (les « avocats du groupe »). Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

DOIS-JE PAYER LES AVOCATS DU GROUPE?

Non. Les avocats du groupe demanderont aux tribunaux d'approuver leurs honoraires.

ET SI JE VEUX MON PROPRE AVOCAT?

Si vous souhaitez retenir les services de votre propre avocat, vous pouvez le faire à vos frais.

COMMENT PUIS-JE M'OPPOSER AU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

COMMENT PUIS-JE DIRE AUX TRIBUNAUX QUE JE N'AIME PAS LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Si vous n'aimez pas une partie du règlement proposé, y compris les honoraires des avocats, vous pouvez vous y opposer. Les tribunaux tiendront compte de votre point de vue. Pour s'opposer, vous devez présenter un formulaire d'opposition comprenant les éléments suivants :

1. vos nom, adresse, numéro de téléphone et adresse de courrier électronique;
2. une déclaration indiquant que vous vous opposez au règlement proposé;
3. les raisons pour lesquelles vous vous opposez au règlement proposé;
4. la Première Nation dont vous êtes membre et la réserve dans laquelle vous résidez habituellement; et
5. votre signature.

Vous devez envoyer votre opposition par courriel ou par la poste au plus tard le 23 novembre 2021 à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique des avocats du groupe] ou à l'adresse postale [•adresse postale des avocats du groupe].

QUAND ET OÙ LES TRIBUNAUX DÉCIDERONT-ILS D'APPROUVER OU NON LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les tribunaux tiendront une audition conjointe les 7, 8 et 9 décembre 2021. Vous pouvez y assister en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou y participer par vidéoconférence [• ou téléconférence].

DOIS-JE COMPARAÎTRE POUR M'OPPOSER?

Non. Si vous envoyez une opposition, vous n'avez pas à comparaître en cour. Les tribunaux tiendront compte des oppositions reçues dans les délais, même si vous ne comparaissez pas à l'audition. Vous ou votre avocat pouvez y assister en personne à la Cour fédérale, à Ottawa, ou y participer par vidéoconférence [• ou téléconférence] à vos frais.

PUIS-JE PRENDRE LA PAROLE À L'AUDITION?

Vous pouvez demander aux tribunaux la permission de prendre la parole à l'audition d'approbation. Pour ce faire, vous devez déposer un avis d'opposition et indiquer que vous souhaitez prendre la parole. Les tribunaux entendront les objections le 7 décembre 2021.

ET SI JE NE FAIS RIEN?

Les personnes qui sont admissibles au règlement proposé et qui ne font rien seront liées par le règlement si les tribunaux l'approuvent. Ces personnes seront admissibles à une indemnité, mais renonceront à leur droit de s'opposer au règlement.

Les Premières Nations qui sont admissibles au règlement proposé et qui ne font rien ne seront pas liées par le règlement proposé si les tribunaux l'approuvent. Ces Premières Nations ne seront pas admissibles à une indemnité et renonceront à leur droit de s'opposer au règlement.

Si le règlement est approuvé, les personnes, ainsi que les Premières Nations, qui acceptent le règlement, renonceront à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour manquement à son obligation de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans leurs réserves.

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les Premières Nations qui sont admissibles au règlement proposé doivent l'approuver par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date].

De plus amples renseignements, y compris un modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande, sont présentés ici : [•URL].

Vous pouvez également consulter les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

À QUI DOIVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS POUR ADHÉRER AU RÈGLEMENT PROPOSÉ?

Les Premières Nations qui ont des questions devraient s'adresser aux avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

Avis d'approbation du règlement simplifié

Règlement des recours collectifs sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

Vous pourriez avoir droit à une indemnité. Veuillez lire attentivement le présent avis.
Pour lire cet avis en anglais : [•URL du site Web de l'entente]

Les tribunaux ont approuvé un règlement entre le Canada et certaines Premières Nations et leurs membres qui ont été visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme de 1995 à 2021.

Qui est inclus dans le règlement?

Sont incluses dans le groupe les personnes :

1. qui étaient vivantes le 20 novembre 2017;

2. qui sont membres d'une bande, au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, ou des peuples autochtones du Canada, sauf les Inuits et les Métis du Canada, qui sont parties à un traité moderne (une « Première Nation »), dont les terres sont visées par cette loi, par la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations ou par un traité moderne (les « terres des Premières Nations »); et

3. qui pendant au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021, résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse notamment d'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation) qui a duré au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021 (les « Premières Nations touchées ») alors qu'un tel avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'au moins un an était en vigueur.

Les personnes qui sont incluses dans le groupe ont droit à une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas le règlement.

Les Premières Nations touchées sont incluses si elles acceptent le règlement au plus tard le [•date]. Les Premières Nations touchées qui n'acceptent pas le règlement d'ici là ne seront pas indemnisées.

Que prévoit le règlement?

Les personnes recevront un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable. Le montant annuel devrait varier de 1 300 $ et 2 000 $ pour les années admissibles, selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription. Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

Le Canada doit également prendre d'autres mesures pour lever les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme et veiller à ce que les personnes aient accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars à l'infrastructure de l'eau et des eaux usées dans les réserves. Les personnes qui sont mécontentes des efforts du Canada peuvent recourir à un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends.

Comment puis-je réclamer de l'argent?

Les personnes doivent soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, ou leur conseil de bande peut soumettre une résolution, confirmant qu'elles résidaient habituellement sur les terres des Premières Nations de cette Première Nation alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement et en informer l'administrateur du règlement. Pour afficher et soumettre des formulaires de réclamation, veuillez visiter le [•URL].

Avis d'approbation du règlement détaillé

Règlement des recours collectifs sur les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations

Vous pourriez avoir droit à une indemnité. Veuillez lire attentivement le présent avis.
Pour lire cet avis en anglais : [•URL du site Web de l'entente]

Les tribunaux ont approuvé un règlement entre le Canada et certaines Premières Nations et leurs membres qui ont été visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme de 1995 à 2021.

Les Premières Nations et leurs membres visés par des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable depuis le 20 novembre 1995 poursuivent en justice le Canada pour obtenir une indemnisation dans le cadre de deux recours collectifs. La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé un règlement dans le cadre des recours collectifs. Le règlement indemnise les Premières Nations et leurs membres admissibles.

Le présent avis explique qui est admissible à une indemnité et comment réclamer celle-ci. Les personnes qui ne réclament pas une indemnité au plus tard le [•date] et les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement au plus tard le [•date] ne recevront aucune indemnité.

INFORMATION DE BASE

POURQUOI SUIS-JE AVISÉ DU RÈGLEMENT?

La Cour du Banc de la Reine du Manitoba et la Cour fédérale du Canada ont approuvé le règlement le [•date]. Elles ont également approuvé le présent avis pour vous informer du règlement et de la façon dont vous pouvez réclamer une indemnité.

QUI EST INCLUS DANS LE RÈGLEMENT?

QUELLES PERSONNES SONT INCLUSES DANS LE GROUPE?

Sont incluses dans le groupe les personnes :

1. qui étaient vivantes le 20 novembre 2017;

2. qui sont membres d'une bande, au sens de la Loi sur les Indiens, ou des peuples autochtones du Canada, sauf les Inuits et les Métis du Canada, qui sont parties à un traité moderne (une « Première Nation »), dont les terres sont visées par cette loi, par la Loi sur la gestion des terres des premières nations ou par un traité moderne (les « terres des Premières Nations »); et

3. qui pendant au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021, résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable (qu'il s'agisse notamment d'un avis d'ébullition de l'eau, d'un avis de ne pas boire ou d'un avis de non-utilisation) qui a duré au moins un an entre le 20 novembre 1995 et le 30 juin 2021 (les « Premières Nations touchées »)

alors qu'un tel avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable d'au moins un an était en vigueur.

Les personnes qui sont incluses ont droit à une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas le règlement.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PERSONNES QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

L'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou au numéro de téléphone [•numéro de téléphone de l'administrateur].

QUELLES SONT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS INCLUSES DANS LE RÈGLEMENT?

Les Premières Nations touchées ne sont admissibles à une indemnité que si elles acceptent le règlement. Toute Première Nation touchée qui souhaite participer au règlement doit accepter le règlement par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [•adresse postale de l'administrateur].

Les Premières Nations touchées doivent accepter le règlement au plus tard le [•date] pour pouvoir y participer. L'administrateur du règlement peut vous fournir le modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande qui est nécessaire pour accepter le règlement.

À QUI PEUVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS QUI ONT DES QUESTIONS?

Les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

COMMENT PUIS-JE OBTENIR UNE INDEMNITÉ?

QU'EST-CE QUE LES MEMBRES DU GROUPE PEUVENT OBTENIR?

Les personnes peuvent recevoir un paiement pour chaque année où elles résidaient habituellement sur des terres des Premières Nations alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme. Le montant devrait varier d'environ 1 300 $ à 2 000 $ pour chaque année admissible, selon le type d'avis et l'éloignement des terres des Premières Nations. Ces montants sont assujettis à des délais de prescription : les personnes qui ont atteint l'âge de 18 ans avant le 20 novembre 2013 ne sont admissibles à une indemnité qu'à compter du 20 novembre 2013, à moins qu'elles n'aient été incapables en raison de leur état physique, mental ou psychologique d'introduire une instance à l'égard de leur réclamation avant le 20 novembre 2013.

Les personnes qui ont subi des préjudices particuliers peuvent avoir droit à une indemnité supplémentaire.

Les Premières Nations touchées qui acceptent le règlement recevront 500 000 $ plus 50 % des sommes versées aux personnes pour les avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable dans leurs réserves.

Pour obtenir de plus amples détails, veuillez consulter le règlement ici : [•URL].

QUELS SONT LES AUTRES AVANTAGES POUR LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ET LEURS MEMBRES DANS LE RÈGLEMENT?

1. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour contribuer à l'élimination des avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme qui visent le groupe.

2. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les membres du groupe qui vivent dans les réserves aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers. Le Canada consacrera au moins 6 milliards de dollars d'ici le 31 mars 2030 à la mise en œuvre de cet engagement en finançant le coût réel de la construction, de l'amélioration, de l'exploitation et de l'entretien de l'infrastructure de l'eau dans les réserves.

3. Le Canada a convenu d'un mécanisme extrajudiciaire de règlement des différends afin de déterminer quelles autres mesures sont raisonnablement nécessaires pour aider les personnes à avoir un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers.

4. Le Canada a convenu de déployer tous les efforts raisonnables pour abroger la Loi sur la salubrité de l'eau potable des Premières Nations, L.C. 2013, ch. 21 d'ici le 31 mars 2022 et pour la remplacer par une loi qui contribue à l'amélioration de l'eau potable dans les réserves des Premières Nations.

5. Le Canada a convenu de verser 20 millions de dollars pour la création d'un comité consultatif des Premières Nations sur l'eau potable salubre.

6. Le Canada a convenu de mettre 9 millions de dollars à la disposition des Premières Nations pour le financement d'initiatives en matière de gouvernance et l'établissement d'une réglementation.

Pour obtenir de plus amples détails, veuillez consulter le règlement ici : [•URL].

QUAND LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes peuvent soumettre leurs formulaires de réclamation jusqu'au [•date]. Après l'expiration de la période de réclamation, l'administrateur du règlement paiera les réclamations d'indemnité valides.

Les Premières Nations recevront l'indemnité de base de 500 000 $ dans les 90 jours suivant la date de leur acceptation de l'entente de règlement ou, si elle est antérieure, la date de son approbation par les tribunaux. Tous les six mois, chaque Première Nation recevra un versement correspondant à 50 % des montants payés aux personnes admissibles qui résidaient habituellement sur une réserve de Première Nation alors visée par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

COMMENT LES PERSONNES ET LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS RECEVRONT-ELLES UNE INDEMNITÉ?

Les personnes doivent soumettre un formulaire de réclamation, ou leur conseil de bande peut soumettre une résolution, confirmant qu'elles résidaient habituellement sur les terres des Premières Nations de cette Première Nation alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme.

Les Premières Nations doivent accepter le règlement et en informer l'administrateur du règlement. Pour afficher et soumettre des formulaires de réclamation, veuillez visiter le [●URL].

Les personnes peuvent recevoir une indemnité même si leur Première Nation, ou la Première Nation sur les terres des Premières Nations de laquelle elles résidaient, n'accepte pas l'entente de règlement.

On peut obtenir des formulaires de réclamation ici [● URL]. Les formulaires de réclamation peuvent être soumis à l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale de l'administrateur].

AI-JE BESOIN DE MON PROPRE AVOCAT POUR FAIRE UNE RÉCLAMATION?

Non. Les avocats du groupe vous représentent. Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [●coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

COMMENT LES AVOCATS SERONT-ILS PAYÉS?

Le Canada, plutôt que les membres du groupe, paiera les honoraires des avocats du groupe dans le cadre des recours collectifs et de l'aide qu'ils continueront d'offrir aux personnes et aux Premières Nations. Les tribunaux ont approuvé les honoraires des avocats et vous n'avez pas à verser de l'argent pour faire une réclamation.

QU'EST-CE QUE J'ABANDONNE DANS LE RÈGLEMENT?

Les membres du groupe renoncent à leur droit de poursuivre le Canada pour les réclamations réglées par le règlement. Cela signifie que vous ne pourrez pas poursuivre le Canada en justice pour des préjudices subis avant le 20 juin 2021 en raison du manquement du Canada de fournir de l'eau potable salubre dans votre réserve.

Les Premières Nations qui n'acceptent pas le règlement ne seront pas liées par celui-ci. Toutefois, les réclamations individuelles de leurs membres seront visées par le règlement.

PUIS-JE M'EXCLURE DU RÈGLEMENT?

Les personnes ne peuvent en général pas s'exclure du règlement sans l'approbation des tribunaux. Les avocats du groupe ne peuvent pas aider une personne à s'exclure du règlement. Les personnes qui souhaitent demander aux tribunaux l'autorisation de s'exclure du règlement devraient consulter un autre avocat.

Les Premières Nations ne sont pas obligées d'accepter le règlement. Si une Première Nation n'accepte pas le règlement, le règlement ne réglera pas les réclamations collectives ou communautaires de cette Première Nation.

Vous n'êtes pas tenu de soumettre une réclamation, mais si vous ne vous excluez pas du règlement et ne soumettez pas une réclamation, et qu'un conseil de bande ne fournit pas à l'administrateur du règlement la confirmation de votre résidence, vous ne recevrez aucune indemnité et vous renoncerez tout de même à votre droit de poursuivre le Canada en justice.

QUI ME REPRÉSENTE?

QUI SONT LES AVOCATS QUI ME REPRÉSENTENT?

Les représentants demandeurs et le groupe sont représentés par McCarthy Tétrault S.E.N.C.R.L., s.r.l. et Olthuis Kleer Townsend LLP (les « avocats du groupe »). Vous pouvez communiquer avec les avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

DOIS-JE PAYER LES AVOCATS DU GROUPE?

Non. Les tribunaux ont approuvé les honoraires des avocats du groupe.

ET SI JE VEUX MON PROPRE AVOCAT?

Si vous souhaitez retenir les services de votre propre avocat, vous pouvez le faire à vos frais.

COMMENT LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS ACCEPTENT-ELLES LE RÈGLEMENT?

Les Premières Nations qui sont admissibles au règlement doivent l'accepter par voie d'une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande et en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date].

De plus amples renseignements, y compris un modèle de résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande, sont présentés ici : [•URL].

Vous pouvez également adresser vos questions aux avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

À QUI DOIVENT S'ADRESSER LES PREMIÈRES NATIONS POUR ACCEPTER LE RÈGLEMENT?

Les Premières Nations qui ont des questions devraient s'adresser aux avocats du groupe à [•coordonnées de la personne-ressource].

Les Premières Nations qui ont adopté une résolution d'acceptation du conseil de bande acceptant l'entente de règlement doivent en fournir une copie à l'administrateur du règlement au plus tard le [•date] à l'adresse de courrier électronique [•adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [•adresse postale de l'administrateur].

À QUI DOIS-JE M'ADRESSER POUR OBTENIR DE PLUS AMPLES RENSEIGNEMENTS?

Vous pouvez communiquer avec l'administrateur du règlement à l'adresse de courrier électronique [●adresse de courrier électronique de l'administrateur] ou à l'adresse postale [●adresse postale de l'administrateur].

ORDONNANCE

(Recours collectif introduit en vertu de la partie 5.1 des Règles des Cours fédérales, DORS/98-106)

LA PRÉSENTE REQUÊTE, présentée par les demandeurs en vue d'obtenir un jugement approuvant le règlement de la présente action conformément aux modalités de l'entente de règlement intervenue le [•date], a été entendue le [•], à [•location].].

APRÈS LECTURE du dossier de requête des parties et des mémoires des parties;

APRÈS AUDITION de la requête présentée par les demandeurs en vue d'obtenir une ordonnance approuvant les modalités de l'entente de règlement datée du [•date] et jointe à la présente ordonnance en ANNEXE A (l'« entente de règlement »), y compris les observations orales des avocats des demandeurs et du défendeur ainsi que les observations orales des membres du groupe défenseurs de l'entente de règlement et des membres du groupe opposants à l'entente de règlement ou, dans le cas de ces derniers, de l'avocat désigné par ces opposants pour formuler des observations orales pour leur compte;

LA COUR ORDONNE ce qui suit :

1. Aux fins de la présente ordonnance, les définitions de l'entente de règlement s'appliquent à la présente ordonnance et y sont intégrées.

2. L'entente de règlement est juste, raisonnable et dans l'intérêt véritable des demandeurs et du groupe.

3. L'entente de règlement (y compris toutes ses annexes) est expressément intégrée par renvoi dans la présente ordonnance et a la même force exécutoire qu'une ordonnance de la Cour.

4. L'entente de règlement sera, et elle est par les présentes, approuvée et sera mise en application conformément à la présente ordonnance et aux autres ordonnances de la Cour.

5. L'avis d'approbation du règlement sera donné conformément au plan de notification joint à la présente ordonnance en ANNEXE B et constituera un avis adéquat, et le meilleur avis possible dans les circonstances.

6. Les personnes énumérées à l'ANNEXE C se sont exclues et ne pourront plus participer à cette action.

7. Les Premières Nations membres du groupe et les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues sont liées par les quittances prévues au paragraphe 10.03(1) de l'entente de règlement et la Cour déclare ceci :

> Sauf comme il est prévu dans l'entente de règlement, et en contrepartie des obligations et des responsabilités du Canada qui lui incombent en vertu de l'entente de règlement, chaque personne membre du groupe ou son exécuteur testamentaire, demandeur d'indemnité successoral ou représentant personnel pour le compte de la personne membre du groupe ou de sa succession, et chaque Première Nation membre du groupe (collectivement ci-après, les « donneurs de quittance ») dégage entièrement et définitivement le Canada et ses fonctionnaires, mandataires, dirigeants et employés, prédécesseurs, successeurs et ayants cause (collectivement ci-après, les « bénéficiaires de quittance »), de quelque action, cause d'action, réclamation et demande de quelque nature ou type, qu'elle soit ou non connue ou prévue, que les donneurs de quittance avaient, ont aujourd'hui ou pourraient avoir à l'avenir contre les bénéficiaires de quittance à l'égard ou en raison de l'omission du Canada d'assurer ou de financer l'approvisionnement en eau potable salubre dans la ou les réserves alors visées par un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long de cette Première Nation membre du groupe, ou dans lesquelles cette personne membre du groupe était un résident habituel, dans chaque cas avant la fin de la période visée.

8. La présente ordonnance et l'entente de règlement, y compris les bénéficiaires de quittance mentionnés au paragraphe 7 ci-dessus, lient toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues, y compris les personnes frappées d'incapacité.

9. La présente ordonnance et l'entente de règlement, y compris les bénéficiaires de quittance mentionnés au paragraphe 7 ci-dessus, lient toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe ayant remis un avis d'acceptation.

10. La Cour se réserve, sans que cela ait d'incidence sur le caractère définitif de la présente ordonnance, la compétence exclusive et continue à l'égard de cette action, des demandeurs, de toutes les personnes membres du groupe qui ne se sont pas exclues, de toutes les Premières Nations membres du groupe ayant remis un avis d'acceptation et du défendeur aux fins de la mise en application de l'entente de règlement.

11. Sauf comme il est indiqué ci-dessus, la présente action est abandonnée contre le défendeur sans dépens et de façon définitive.

12. La Cour peut rendre d'autres ordonnances, notamment accessoires, qu'elle juge nécessaires à la mise en application de l'entente de règlement et de la présente ordonnance.

ATTENDU QUE l'entente de règlement prévoit que le Canada déploie tous les efforts raisonnables pour veiller à ce que les personnes membres du groupe (au sens de l'entente de règlement) qui vivent dans des réserves (au sens de l'entente de règlement) aient un accès à une source fiable d'eau potable dans leurs foyers, que ce soit à partir d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau public ou d'un réseau d'approvisionnement en eau privé approuvé par voie d'une résolution du conseil de bande, y compris, notamment des réseaux sur place, qui respectent les exigences fédérales ou les normes provinciales les plus rigoureuses en matière de qualité de l'eau à domicile (l'« engagement »);

ATTENDU QUE [Nom du conseil des Premières Nations] (le « conseil ») souhaite approuver les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés énumérés ci-dessous pour l'application de l'engagement par l'adoption de la présente résolution du conseil de bande;

ATTENDU QUE la présente résolution du conseil de bande ne constitue pas une reconnaissance de responsabilité du conseil de quelque façon que ce soit à l'égard des réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés énumérés ci-dessous;

IL EST PAR LES PRÉSENTES RÉSOLU CE QUI SUIT :

1. Pour l'application de l'engagement seulement, le conseil approuve par les présentes, sans confirmation ni acceptation de responsabilité de sa part, les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés suivants :

    a. [Indiquer ou décrire les réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau privés, y compris les puits.]

2. Le conseil déclare par les présentes qu'il peut révoquer l'approbation énoncée au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus à tout moment.
3. Le conseil déclare par les présentes qu'il peut compléter l'approbation énoncée au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus à tout moment par l'ajout d'autres réseaux d'approvisionnement en eau.
4. Ces résolutions peuvent être signées par le chef et les membres du conseil en autant d'exemplaires pouvant se révéler nécessaires, sous forme originale ou électronique, dont chacun sera réputé être un original, et dont la totalité seront réputés constituer ensemble une seule et même résolution.

Les signataires suivants attestent et garantissent qu'un quorum du conseil a signé la présente résolution du conseil de bande, comme en font foi leurs signatures ci-dessous.

ANNEXE Q

PLAN DE RECHERCHE D'ADRESSE DE MEMBRES DU GROUPE ADMISSIBLES

1. Si l'administrateur reçoit une confirmation du conseil de bande ou un formulaire de réclamation qui ne fournit pas d'adresse postale lisible pour une personne membre du groupe, ou qu'une personne membre du groupe n'a pas déposé de chèque ou n'a pas demandé un paiement fait conformément à l'entente dans les cent quatre-vingts (180) jours suivant l'émission de ce chèque ou de ce paiement, cette personne membre du groupe sera considérée comme un « membre du groupe admissible disparu », et la date à laquelle elle deviendra un membre du groupe admissible disparu sera la « date de début de la recherche ».

2. Pour chaque membre du groupe admissible disparu, l'administrateur effectue ou fait effectuer toutes les recherches suivantes afin de trouver les coordonnées actuelles du membre du groupe admissible disparu :

a) la base de données canadienne du Programme national sur les changements d'adresse;

b) la recherche inversée par numéro de téléphone;

c) Canada 411;

d) consulter les coordonnées de ce membre du groupe admissible disparu dans une confirmation du conseil de bande, s'il y a lieu, et faire une demande écrite ou téléphonique pour obtenir les coordonnées du membre du groupe admissible disparu auprès du bureau du conseil de bande de la Première Nation où il réside habituellement ou bien où il a résidé habituellement pour la dernière fois, le cas échéant; et

e) faire une demande écrite ou téléphonique pour obtenir les coordonnées du membre du groupe admissible disparu auprès du bureau du conseil de bande de la Première Nation dont ce membre du groupe admissible disparu est membre, si différent de l'alinéa 2d) ci-dessus.

3. Les recherches indiquées au paragraphe 2 ci-dessus seront effectuées dans les quarante-cinq (45) jours suivant la date de début de la recherche.

4. Si l'administrateur localise plus d'une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, il demandera des renseignements raisonnables pour déterminer la bonne adresse.

5. Si l'administrateur localise une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, l'administrateur émettra et postera un nouveau chèque ou un autre mode de paiement au membre du groupe admissible disparu du montant payable conformément à la présente entente, lequel chèque ou paiement sera périmé dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant de son émission. Si un chèque ou un autre mode de paiement avait déjà été émis au membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais qu'il n'avait pas été déposé ou réclamé, l'administrateur annulera ce paiement avant l'émission du nouveau chèque ou d'un autre mode de paiement.

6. Si l'administrateur ne trouve pas une nouvelle adresse postale pour un membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais que le formulaire de réclamation du membre du groupe admissible disparu indique qu'il réside actuellement dans une réserve, l'administrateur émettra et postera à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu, aux soins du bureau du conseil de bande ou à un autre endroit semblable dans cette réserve, un nouveau chèque ou un autre mode de paiement d'une somme payable conformément à la présente entente, lequel chèque ou paiement sera périmé dans les quatre-vingt-dix (90) jours suivant de son émission. Si un chèque ou un autre mode de paiement avait déjà été émis au membre du groupe admissible disparu, mais qu'il n'avait pas été déposé ou réclamé, l'administrateur annule ce paiement avant l'émission du nouveau chèque ou d'un autre mode paiement.

8. Si l'administrateur ne peut toujours pas trouver un membre du groupe admissible disparu malgré le respect du présent plan de recherche d'adresse de membres du groupe admissibles, et le fait que tout chèque ou paiement émis et envoyé à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu soit périmé, il doit attendre une période de cent quatre-vingts (180) jours (dont l'expiration est la « date de fin de la recherche) ». Si l'administrateur n'est toujours pas en mesure de trouver le membre du groupe admissible disparu à la date de fin de la recherche, la réclamation du membre du groupe admissible disparu sera entièrement et définitivement éteinte et annulée, l'administrateur n'aura aucune obligation de faire quelque paiement que ce soit à ce membre du groupe admissible disparu, et l'administrateur, le Canada, les avocats du Canada, les avocats du groupe, le comité mixte et ses membres, le comité de mise en œuvre du règlement et ses membres, le fiduciaire et le CCPNEPS sont dégagés de toute responsabilité.

PREMIER ADDENDA À L'ENTENTE DE RÈGLEMENT

Le présent addenda (l' « addenda ») est intervenu en date du 8 octobre 2021.

ATTENDU QUE :

A. La Nation des Cris de Tataskweyak et la cheffe Doreen Spence, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs du recours du Manitoba »), la Première Nation de Curve Lake et la cheffe Emily Whetung, pour leur propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs de la Première Nation de Curve Lake »), la Première Nation de Neskantaga et le chef Wayne Moonias et l'ancien chef Christopher Moonias, chacun pour son propre compte et pour le compte de tous les membres du groupe individuels (collectivement, les « demandeurs de la Première Nation de Neskantaga », et collectivement avec les demandeurs de la Première Nation de Curve Lake, les « demandeurs du recours fédéral ») et Sa Majesté la Reine du chef du Canada (tous ceux qui précèdent collectivement, les « parties ») ont conclu une entente de règlement datée du 15 septembre 2021 (l' « entente de règlement »); et

B. Les parties souhaitent modifier l'entente de règlement afin de préciser la mise à disposition d'une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés;

PAR CONSÉQUENT, les parties conviennent de modifier l'entente de règlement comme suit :

1. Les termes et expressions clés utilisés dans les présentes sans y être définis ont le sens qui leur est attribué dans l'entente de règlement (en anglais seulement).

2. Le paragraphe 8.02(2) de l'entente de règlement est par les présentes modifié afin d'ajouter les mots (traduction) « L'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ne sera versée que si le membre du groupe individuel a subi un préjudice déterminé ou les symptômes persistants d'un préjudice déterminé antérieur, tel qu'il est indiqué à l'annexe H, au cours d'une année pour laquelle des dommages-intérêts individuels seraient payables au membre du groupe individuel conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels prévue au paragraphe 8.01(2), s'il s'agissait d'une année de consultation (mais qui, pour plus de certitude, n'est pas tenue d'être une année de consultation). », à la fin du paragraphe, comme suit :

> (Traduction) Les membres du groupe individuels confirmés auront droit à une indemnité pour préjudices déterminés d'un montant indiqué à l'annexe H (l' « indemnité pour préjudices déterminés »), à condition que le demandeur établisse que le préjudice a été causé en raison de la consommation d'eau traitée ou d'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme ou en raison d'un accès restreint à de l'eau traitée ou de l'eau du robinet conformément à un avis concernant la qualité de l'eau potable à long terme dans le cadre du processus de réclamation et de l'annexe H. L'indemnité pour préjudices déterminés ne sera versée que si le membre du groupe individuel a subi un préjudice déterminé ou les symptômes persistants d'un préjudice déterminé antérieur, tel qu'il est indiqué à l'annexe H, au cours d'une année pour laquelle des dommages-intérêts individuels seraient payables au membre du groupe individuel conformément à la formule de calcul des dommages-intérêts individuels prévue au paragraphe 8.01(2), s'il s'agissait d'une année de consultation (mais qui, pour plus de certitude, n'est pas tenue d'être une année de consultation).

3. Les clauses 1.12, 1.13, 1.14, 1.15, 2.01 et 2.02 de l'entente de règlement sont intégrées par renvoi dans les présentes et s'appliquent au présent addenda.

4. Le paragraphe 16.12(1) de l'entente de règlement est par les présentes modifié afin de remplacer les mots « le paragraphe 81(g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu » par « le paragraphe 81(1)(g.3) de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu ».

5. Les parties, par leurs conseillers juridiques, conviennent que le présent addenda sera intégré dans l'entente de règlement.

EN FOI DE QUOI les soussignés ont signé le présent addenda pour le compte des parties à la date indiquée au début des présentes.

APPENDIX 3

SCHEDULE L

NOTICE PLAN

I. OVERVIEW

Objective:

To provide clear, concise, plain-language information to the greatest practicable number of Class Members and their family members regarding:

a. the Settlement Agreement and their rights to receive compensation under it; and

b. the Claims Process and timeline.

Class Members:

The Class Consists of the following:

- Individual Class Members, consisting of an estimated 142,300 individuals who are members of the Class and have not Opted Out of the Actions.

- First Nation Class Members, consisting of First Nations that are members of the Class and provide the Administrator with notice of Acceptance. There are up to a total of 258 Impacted First Nations that could deliver notices of Acceptance and become First Nation Class Members.

Known Factors:

Known factors considered in designing this Notice Plan include:

1. The Reserves subject to Long-Term Drinking Water Advisories during the Class Period include Reserves in remote areas, posing additional communication challenges (for example, delays or limitations in delivery of mailed notice materials).

2. Education levels of Class Members vary widely, from members who have not completed high school to members with graduate-level university education.

3. Class Members speak a variety of languages, including English, French, and a number of Indigenous languages.

4. Impacted First Nations are geographically dispersed across Canada's provinces, with particular concentration in Ontario, British Columbia, and Manitoba.

5. 2016 census data indicates that approximately two thirds of First Nation people do not reside on Reserves.[1] Class Members who lived on impacted Reserves during the Class

---

1 Aboriginal Identity (9), Residence by Aboriginal Geography (10), Registered or Treaty Indian Status (3), Age (20) and Sex (3) for the Population in Private Households of Canada, Provinces and Territories, 2016 Census - 25% Sample Data (table), Statistics Canada, 2016 Census- of Population, Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 98-400-X2016154. Ottawa: Released October 25, 2017.

Period may no longer reside on the Reserve with which their Claim is associated or in the same province or territory. Some Class Members may reside outside of Canada.

Strategies:

1. CA2 will give the "Settlement Notice" using the same notice plan that it used to give Certification Notice, as particularized further below. The form of the Settlement Notice will be substantially as set out in Schedule M, with such reasonable modifications as CA2 may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. CA2 will disseminate the Settlement Notice in a manner that is substantially similar to the way in which it disseminated the notice of certification of the Actions.

2. The Administrator will give the "Settlement Approval Notice" substantially in the form set out in Schedule N, with such reasonable amendments as the Administrator may suggest, and as approved by the Courts. The Settlement Approval Notice will advise Individual Class Members of the Claims Deadline and First Nation Class Members of the need to accept the settlement agreement. The Settlement Approval Notice will be disseminated by the following methods, as particularized further below:

    a. Direct mailed notice to Class member First Nations;

    b. A national press release in two parts: one at the time of settlement approval and the second at the opening of the claims period.

    c. Live in-person and virtual community meetings for interested First Nation Class Members;

    d. Creation of an informational website providing access to copies of the Settlement Agreement, Claims Form, FAQs, and other informational resources, to be referenced in all notice materials and advertisements;

    e. Establishment of a national toll-free support line for Class Members, family, guardians, or other persons who make inquiries on their own behalf or on behalf of Class Members to call for further information and support with Claims, to be cited in all notice materials and advertisements.

    f. Publication in newspapers and First Nation publications across the country

    g. Placement of 30- and 60-second television advertisements on APTN;

    h. Placement of 30- and 60-second radio advertisements on leading First Nation radio stations in all relevant regions;

    i. Social media/online advertisements to run on popular platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube;

    j. Translation of the notice into French, and all reasonable efforts to translate notice into Indigenous languages, as requested by Class Members; and

    k. Toll-free support line to assist members in making Claims.

3. The Administrator will give a "Reminder Notice" eight months after first publication of Settlement Approval Notice, using the same notice plan. The Reminder Notice will be in a form to be agreed by the Parties, acting reasonably, on the advice of the Administrator, and approved by the Courts.

4. The Administrator will give a "Late Claims Notice" in the event that late claims are permitted. The Late Claims Notice, if any, will use the same notice plan as the Settlement Approval Notice and the Reminder Notice, modified as the Administrator advises and the Courts approve to target those First Nations where participation has fallen below expectations.

5. Canada will be responsible for the cost of giving notice in accordance with this Notice Plan.

II. SETTLEMENT NOTICE PLAN
